6. Charter power to make general police regulations for the benefit of trade and commerce, and to provide for the abatement and removal of nuisances, will not authorize a city

to maintain a suit to enjoin the filling up of a lake shore along, but outside, the limits of a public street.

7. Owners of land abutting on a lake, the title to which is in the state, have the right to construct in the shoal water proper wharves and piers in aid of navigation, but not obstructing it, far enough to reach water navigable for such boats as are in use.

(November 16, 1897.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Dane County in favor of defendants in a suit brought to enjoin the depositing of boulders and earth in the shallow waters of Lake Monona. Reversed.

Neither the Crown itself nor its grantee can use its title in that manner.

A building placed so near the water of a port as to interfere with mariners in working their boats in and out will be abated. Bristol v. Morgan, 11 Car. 1. fol. 303, cited in Hale, de Portibus Maris, chap. 6, Hargrave Law Tracts, p. 81.

The tide way of a river cannot be interrupted by a wharf in its shallowest part, unless there has been an antecedent execution of a writ of ad quod damnum. Atty. Gen. v. Brittain, cited in 6 Barn. & C. 579.

In Atty. Gen. v. Conservators of the Thames, 1 Hem. & M. 24, 8 Jur. N. S. 1203, 11 Week. Rep. 163, it is said that it cannot be denied that any pier or other projection into a navigable river is a nuisance.

An occupation of 8 feet out of 60 of the bed of a river is an obstruction to navigation which a public authority having power to remove obstructions may proceed to remove. Atty. Gen. v. Terry, L. R. 9 Ch. 426, 30 L. T. N. S. 215, 22 Week. Rep. 395. The master of the rolls said in that case, that when the title was in the King the riparian owner had no right to put a stick in the soil, and that in case he owned the soil he could not make a structure which would be a nuisance to navigation.

A corporation which is the conservator of a river and owner of the soil between high and low water mark cannot authorize the erection of a wharf there which produces inconvenience to the public in the use of the river for the purposes of navigation. One who undertakes to make a change in a public highway should proceed before the sheriff in order to ascertain whether or not a change will operate to the prejudice of the public. Rex v. Lord Grosvenor, 2 Stark. 511.

In Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 68, 35 L. T. N. S. 569, 25 Week. Rep. 165, the lord chancellor, in speaking of a license by the conservators of the river to a property owner to fill in the bank in front of his property, says that it has a power of granting to individuals, upon a money payment, the privilege of doing what the owners could not do in a navigable river, of pushing out an embankment or wharf in front of their land into the bed of the river.

In one case the rule was attempted to be established that if the general benefit to navigation was greater because of the structure than the loss by reason of the straightening of the channel it would not be a nuisance.

Thus, where a staith erected by a person for his own use in loading coal was afterwards made subject to public use, it was held that if reasonable space was left for navigation, and the public benefit resulting from the erection counterbalanced the prejudice to the rights of individuals in having the exercise of their rights of passage narrowed, there could be no conviction under an indictment for a nuisance. But Lord Tenterden, dissenting, said that the question of benefit to the public could not be 40 L. R. A.

taken into consideration, the question being whether or not the navigation and passage of vessels on this public river was injured by these erections. Rex v. Russell, 6 Barn. & C. 566, 9 Dowl. & R. 569.

That distinction did not prevail.

A wharf is a nuisance if it occasions any hindrance or impediment whatever to the navigation of the river by any obstruction of vessels or boats. And the circumstance that a benefit results to general navigation from it is immaterial. Rex v. Randall, Car. & M. 496.

In King v. Ward, 4 Ad. & El. 384, 1 H. & W. 708, 6 Nev. & M. 88, a causeway connecting with a wharf was held to be a nuisance, the court holding that the fact that it was also a benefit to navigation was not sufficient defense to the indictment.

Fourth, there was the right against other individuals; and it has been generally held that private individuals could maintain an action for a public nuisance only when they were peculiarly injured.

A person who is not injured by the erection of a wharf cannot maintain an action for its abatement. Brown v. Gugsy, 10 Jur. N. S. 526, 2 Moore, P. C. C. N. S. 341, 10 L. T. N. S. 45, 12 Week. Rep. 492.

But a riparian proprietor on a tidal river, although he owns the soil, cannot erect there a pier for the purpose of protecting his bank if the result is to damage the bank of the opposite riparian proprietor. Atty. Gen. v. Earl Lonsdale, L. R. 7 Eq. 377, 88 L. J. Ch. N. S. 336, 20 L. T. N. S. 64, 17 Week. Rep. 219.

Wharves are as essential to commerce as is the waterway itself. If each of the conflicting rights in the waterway, the soil, and the banks, had been maintained to its fullest extent, no wharf could have been built. So, a compromise was absolutely necessary. This was effected by the King surrendering his jus privatum to the public (Freeman, Const. Hist. 2d ed. pp. 139 et seq.), and the establishment of rules by which the public rights could be protected when the wharf was erected by the owner of the upland.

The proceeding at English common law to obtain leave to build a wharf on the King's tide land was a writ of ad quod damnum to ascertain what injury would ensue. Upon the return of a favorable verdict, the proposed work was authorized by the King's license. Concord Mfg. Co. v. Robertson, 66 N. H. 19, 18 L. R. A. 679.

In Atty. Gen. v. Brittain, cited in 6 Barn. & C. 579, the lord chancellor was of opinion that the tide way of a river in the shallow part of it could not be interrupted by quays unless there had been an antecedent execution of a writ of ad quod damnum by a jury.

The result of this seems to be that the owner of the upland may erect the wharf, but unless he first obtains a writ of ad quod damnum he takes all the risk of his structure proving a nuisance, and having it abated as such.

Statement by Cassoday, Ch. J.:

This action is to restrain the defendants from removing any earth, stone, or other materials from the limits of Spaight street, between Patterson and Livingston streets, and to restore said street to its prior condition, and to restrain the defendants from filling in the lake opposite to or in front of said portion of said street, and to abate the nuisance created by them. The complaint is to the effect that the plaintiff is a municipality, and has control of the streets and sidewalks therein; that Spaight street, between Patterson and Livingston streets (formerly known as "Rutledge Street"), lying south of block 149, is a regularly laid out and platted, traveled street, being laid out, platted, and recorded as 66 feet wide; that the south line of said street, opposite said block, and particularly that part of said line opposite lots 7, 8, 9, and 10 in said block, as originally platted and recorded, and ever since, has extended out into the waters of the lake a distance of 10 or more feet; that that portion of said street not covered by the waters of the lake is 15 or 20 feet above the surface of the waters; that the traveled portion of the street is separated from the lake by an embankment wholly within the limits of the street, and that the plaintiff has for several years last past maintained a substantial sidewalk along the inner edge of said embankment, and within the limits of the street; that Whatever may have been the theory in England it would seem that practically the right to wharf out in front of his land was exercised by the riparian owner, taking care not to interfere injuriously with the interests of navigation. Clement v. Burns, 43 N. H. 618.

A riparian owner may moor to his bank a floating wharf and boathouse if they do not interfere with navigation of the river, and may maintain an action against a third person who causes injury to them by refuse cast into the stream. Booth v. Ratte, L. R. 15 App. Cas. 188.

Although a statute does not expressly authorize the construction of a wharf, legislative recognition of the right in subsequent statutes will be sufficient to protect the one building it from actions of adjoining lot owners. Standly v. Perry, 2 Ont. App. Rep. 195.

The rule in this country.

In this country there was only the right of the riparian owner and the jus publicum to be considered. In the early days the navigable channels were in most cases ample, the need of wharves urgent, and the public funds deficient. So, by common consent, supplemented in some instances by legislation, the riparian owner was permitted to erect wharves, and his right to do so was unquestioned. Necessary regulations were adopted from time to time as needed, and in some few instances the right was denied altogether and the rule established that the public or its grantees had the exclusive right to make wharves, and that there was no right in the riparian owner.

Cases recognizing the right of the riparian owner.

The doctrine that the soil under tide water is a private emolument of the sovereign, and that, without express or implied license, abutters cannot build wharves, is not introduced here by applying the dictates of justice and reason to the situation of the American people. Concord Mfg. Co. v. Robertson, 66 N. H. 19, 18 L. R. A. 679.

In Alexandria & F. R. Co. v. Faunce, 31 Gratt. 761, Staples, J., says it has been held in numerous cases that the owner of land bounded by a navigable stream has certain riparian rights, whether his title extends to the middle of the stream or not. Among these are free access to the navigable part of the stream and a right to make a landing, wharf, or pier.

The riparian proprietor upon a navigable lake has the exclusive right of access to and from the lake in front of his land, and in building wharves and piers in aid of navigation. Delaplaine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 386; Boorman v. Sunnucks, 42 Wis. 238; Diedrich v. Northwestern Union R. Co. 42 Wis. 248, 24 Am. Rep. 390; Cohn v. Wausau Boom Co. 47 Wis. 314; Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 288, 8 L. R. A. 808.

A riparian proprietor who owns the land to the side of the stream may construct docks or landing places for goods or passengers, taking care that vessels are not impeded in their passage, nor prevented from the use of all parts of the stream where it is navigable. And one owner cannot so use his property as to impair the rights of an adjoining proprietor. Walker v. Shepardson, 4 Wis. 486, 65 Am. Dec. 324.

At common law and under the Virginia statutes the riparian owner has a right to erect wharves, piers, and bulkheads for his own use, subject only to the general rules and regulations which the legislature may prescribe; and the only limitation upon such right is that navigation must not be obstructed or the rights of others injured.

And this right is sufficient to enable the owner to maintain an action of unlawful entry and detainer against one who attempts to build a structure upon the water lot under a void grant from the state. Norfolk City v. Cooke, 27 Gratt. 490.

A riparian owner has a right to construct wharves on his water front, which cannot be taken from him for public use without condemnation proceedings as prescribed by law. Buffalo v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 39 N. Y. Supp. 4.

In North Carolina the riparian owner has a right to enter the water front up to deep water for the purpose of erecting wharves. Gregory v. Forbes, 96 N. C. 77.

In Saunders v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 30 Abb. N. C. 83, the rule is recognized that the riparian owner has the right to construct wharves, subject to the right of the public.

And that was followed in Saunders v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 54 N. Y. S. R. 364.

But modified in Saunders v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 144 N. Y. 75, 26 L. R. A. 373, but the court recognized the right to wharf out.

An owner of lots abutting on the Mississippi river possesses the riparian right of constructing thereon suitable landings and wharves for the convenience of commerce and navigation, and to extend such obstruction out into the river to the point of navigability. Rippe v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co. 23 Minn. 18; Morrill v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. 23 Minn. 222, 39 Am. Rep. 399; Union Depot Street R. & Transfer Co. v. Brunswick, 31 Minn. 297, 47 Am. Rep. 789; Lake Superior Land Co. v. Emerson, 38 Minn. 406.

In State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9, it is stated that in Maine it has never been held that a proprietor of land adjoining flats upon or at tide waters is precluded from erecting wharves and piers on his own flats, provided he does not thereby materially interrupt general navigation.

The owner may lawfully erect wharves upon his own flats for his own use and benefit. Deering v. Proprietors of Long Wharf, 25 Me. 51.

Riparian owners may extend wharves into the Ohio river provided they do not unnecessarily obstruct navigation. Bainbridge v. Sherlock, 29 Ind. 364, 95 Am. Dec. 644.

said street and walk are, and for many years past have been, continuously used and traveled at all times of the day, and at all seasons of the year; that the defendants have combined together, and did remove and are now removing large quantities of earth, stone, and other materials from the limits of that portion of said street, and particularly from the foot and face of the embankment, and have deposited and are now depositing earth, stone, and other materials in the waters of the lake beyond the limits of the highway, and that the earth, stone, and other materials are necessary for the preservation of the embankment and the street, and to maintain the proper grade thereof; that such conduct on the part of the defendants was to the irreparable injury of the plaintiff. And for a second cause of action the complaint alleges, in addition to the allegations contained in the first cause of action, in effect, that from that portion of the street the people have an unobstructed view and access to the waters of the lake; that the lake is a meandered body of water, and is navigable in fact to the south line of the street; that the defendants have taken the earth, stone, and other materials referred to, and other earth, stone, rubbish, and other materials, and deposited them in the navigable waters of the lake, within the limits of the section of the street mentioned, and intend to erect buildings thereon, and forever close all

An owner of land on a navigable river has without special legislative authority the right to erect wharves conforming to the regulations of the state. But that right terminates at the point of navigability unless special authority is conferred. Chicago v. Van Ingen, 152 Ill. 624.

Under the laws of Florida wharves when constructed by riparian proprietors are not presumptures nor presumed to be nuisances as constituting an obstruction to commerce. One who alleges that a wharf is not for the benefit of commerce has the burden of proving his allegation. Sullivan v. Moreno, 19 Fla. 200.

The right of wharfing out, doing no damage to the free navigation, is one of the rights of a riparian proprietor. Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382, 16 Am. Rep. 48.

The riparian right in the Ohio river extends to the water, and no supervening right over any part of this space can be exercised or maintained without the consent of the proprietor. Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 378.

Under the colonial law of Massachusetts, and by the common practice of the country, wharves may be built out to low-water mark considering the river in its natural state, or further, if not injurious to public interests. And if the river recede by natural cause the wharf may follow it, but not if it is made to recede by some act of man. Com. v. Pierce, 2 Dane, Abr. 696.

At common law a riparian owner has a right to erect wharves, piers, or bulkheads for his own use, or the use of the public, subject only to such general rules and regulations as the legislature may prescribe. Norfolk City v. Cooke, 27 Gratt. 490.

In Musser v. Hershey, 42 Iowa, 365, it is said that it is true that a riparian owner, although owning only to high-water mark, will have the right to construct below high-water mark, bridges, piers, and landing places, and to reclaim the soil, if he conforms to the regulations of the state and does not obstruct the paramount right of navigation. This ruling was upon the authority of Dutton v. Strong, St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeir, and Yates v. Milwaukee.

In Tuck v. Olds, 29 Fed. Rep. 738, where the question was as to the character of wharf property, the court says it would seem safe to hold that the owner of the adjacent land has at least a qualified interest in the soil under the edge of the water at the shore, so as to give to him the right to construct and maintain a dock along the shore and extending the necessary distance into the water.

A riparian owner specially interested may recover for the wrongful filling up of a harbor to the injury of navigation. Clark v. Peckham, 10 R. I. 36, 14 Am. Rep. 664.

Rule where title extends to thread of stream.

The title of a grantee of land on the Illinois river extends to the middle thread of the stream, and he 40 L. R. A.

has a right to extend wharves into the stream providing he does not obstruct navigation or interfere with the rights of others. Chicago v. Laffin, 40 Ill. 172.

Where the ownership of the bed of the stream is private, the public rights are simply easements or privileges upon it, and the owner may do as he pleases so long as he does not injuriously affect the public enjoyment. The owner's use is lawful until it is shown to be unlawful. It can never be unlawful for a landowner to make such wharves as will accommodate all vessels ordinarily using the stream, unless there is some exceptional circumstance which may in particular cases render his structure improper. Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 196, 100 Am. Dec. 154.

If an individual has received a grant of the flats he may devote them to wharves without being subject to the control of the public, if they are not permitted to become a common nuisance. Galveston v. Menard, 28 Tex. 404.

Effect of custom.

In Bell v. Gough, 23 N. J. L. 624, it is said that it has been common understanding that owners of land bounding on navigable waters have an absolute right to wharf out and otherwise reclaim the land down to, and even below, low water, provided they do not thereby impede the paramount right of navigation, and that statement was repeated in New Jersey Zinc & I. Co. v. Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. 44 N. J. Eq. 398, 1 L. R. A. 133.

In this country a usage sprang up which at length acquired the force of law, and gave to the riparian owner upon navigable water either the absolute title to the soil or the exclusive right to erect wharves and to reclaim from the sea the flats in front of his land. Clement v. Burns, 43 N. H. 618.

A grantee of riparian land acquires no peculiar rights as incident to his estate in the land beyond the high-water line lying in front of his land. But in virtue of a local custom long prevailing in New Jersey, and now having the force of established law, the adjacency of his land to the stream vests him with a license to fill and wharf out on the public domain to such an extent as does not interfere with the public rights of fishing and navigation. And this license when executed becomes irrevocable and confers on the riparian owner a good and indefeasible title to the land thus reclaimed. New Jersey Zinc & I. Co. v. Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. 44 N. J. Eq. 398, 1 L. R. A. 133, citing Gough v. Bell, and Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co.

A canal company which acquired by condemnation a right of way for its canal along the high-water mark of a navigable stream does not deprive the former owner of his riparian rights. New Jersey Zinc & I. Co. v. Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. 44 N. J. Eq. 398, 1 L. R. A. 133.

Statutory right.

In Ball v. Slack, 2 Whart. 508, 80 Am. Dec. 273, it access and travel to and from the lake. The several defendants each separately; answered by way of admissions and denials, and allegations to the effect that the street mentioned was established and dedicated under and by virtue of a plat of the city duly made and executed according to law and recorded by James D. Doty, then owner of all the property and real estate upon which is now the city of Madison, May 7, 1887; that November 27, 1868, the common council of the city altered and changed the said street, and widened the same by extending the northerly boundary thereof several feet into block 149, along the eastern portion thereof, as therein alleged; that December 4, 1868, the common council vacated a portion of the street opposite lot 1 in block 149; that lots 6 and 7 in block 150 were platted by the Doty plat, and as a part thereof; that the southerly boundary of the street extends no further south, or nearer to the waters of the lake, than a certain iron railing, which now extends along said street south of the sidewalk, on the south side thereof, and that the northerly boundary of said lots 6 and 7 extends to the said iron railing; that the jurisdiction of the city over the lake is for limited and special purposes only, and not for the purposes set forth in the complaint; that the placing of stone and earth in the shallow waters of the lake, as alleged, prevents the nuisance and accumulation of débris and dead fish on the is said that our acts of assembly would seem to have recognized the right of the owner to erect wharves down to low-water mark.

The Oregon statute gave persons who had purchased tide lands from riparian owners the right to acquire the state's title to the same. De Force v. Welch, 10 Or. 507.

The New York act of 1813 provided for giving the owners of land abutting on the navigable water of New York city a right to erect wharves. Verplanck v. New York, 2 Edw. Ch. 228.

Riparian landowners to whom the land under water has been granted under the acts of 1813 and 1815 may erect wharves and piers into the water in front of their property, which the interests of commerce require. People v. New York & S. I. Ferry Co. 68 N. Y. 71.

The statutes giving the owners of land abutting on navigable waters in New York city a right to erect wharves does not make the wharves when erected public property subject to the right of any one to use them upon paying reasonable fees. Wetmore v. Atlantic White Lead Co. 37 Barb. 78.

In New York the legislature has given the owners of lands in Brooklyn the right to erect bulkheads as far into the East river as the permanent water line established by law. Wetmore v. Brooklyn Gaslight Co. 42 N. Y. 884.

In Morris Canal & Hkg. Co. v. Central R. Co. 16 N. J. Eq. 419, there was an express grant of the right to build wharves.

By the New Jersey wharf act the right to reclaim the shore in front of his land was vested in the shore owner. Stockham v. Browning, 18 N. J. Eq. 260.

But the rights conferred by the wharf act are revocable at any time before they are executed by the owner, and the state, having the title to the land under the navigable waters, may grant it to a third person without making compensation to the owner of the adjoining shore. Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co. 84 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 299.

On the other hand, in Massachusetts a statute authorizing a wharf proprietor to extend it into the channel to the harbor line is a grant, and cannot be revoked by a subsequent grant to a railroad company to lay tracks along the shore between the wharf and the water. Fitchburg R. Co. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 3 Cush. 58.

So, in Casey v. Inloes, 1 Gill, 501, 39 Am. Dec. 553, it is said that the right of wharfing out under the statute granting that right is a vested right peculiar in its nature; a quasi property of which the owner could not be deprived without his consent. And if a third person made the improvement the title would vest in the owner of the upland.

The Massachusetts act of 1806 gave to the owner of lots adjoining the Acushnet river, power to erect and maintain wharves extending to the channel of the river. Hamlin v. Pairpoint Mfg. Co. 141 Mass. 51; Hastings v. Grimshaw, 153 Mass. 497, 12 L. R. A. 617.

40 L. R. A.

Under the Massachusetts colonial act wharves could be built out to the channel if a sufficient passage or way was left for public navigation. Com. v. Crowinshield, 2 Dane, Abr. 697; Com. v. Pierce, 2 Dane, Abr. 696.

Under the Maryland statute the riparian proprietor has the exclusive right of making improvements into the waters in front of his lands, with the proviso that they shall not interfere with navigation. Goodsell v. Lawson, 42 Md. 348; Hess v. Muir, 65 Md. 596.

The Louisiana statute of 1857 authorizes the construction of wharves upon the Bayou Teche. Stevens v. Walker, 15 La. Ann. 577.

Under the New Jersey act of 1851, the riparian owner had a right to wharf out. Keyport & M. P. S. B. Co. v. Farmers Transp. Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 13.

In Iowa a riparian owner has a right to construct below high-water mark piers and landing places, if he conforms to the regulations of the state. Mills v. Evans, 100 Iowa, 712.

The law of Virginia gives the riparian owner title to low-water mark, and authorizes him to extend wharves from the land to the channel, provided navigation is not thereby obstructed. United States v. Bain, 3 Hughes, 593.

Rights as against individuals.

An individual who is specially injured by the erection of a wharf may maintain an action for the nuisance. Harrison v. Sterett, 4 Harr. & McH. 540.

But the mere building of a wharf beyond the wharf line does not give a private person a right to maintain a bill to have it removed if it is not in fact a nuisance. Harlan & H. Co. v. Paschall, 5 Del. Ch. 435.

The fact that a property owner has erected a pier without the consent of the state will not give a railroad company the right to take it for its own use without compensation. Davenport & N. R. Co. v. Renwick, 102 U. S. 180, 26 L. ed. 51.

The extension of a pier will not be enjoined at the suit of an adjacent owner if the public authorities have taken no action which renders it illegal. Jenks v. Miller, 14 App. Div. 474.

If persons have acted unlawfully and injuriously in extending their wharf below low-water mark they may be called to account by the sovereign, but individuals who have no interest in the land covered by the wharf cannot require compensation to be made to them for the use of the land. Gerrish v. Proprietors of Union Wharf, 26 Me. 384, 46 Am. Dec. 568.

The owner of lands not accessible by navigation from the sea has no cause of complaint because of being deprived by the erection of wharves of the ebb and flow of the tide to his premises, or the right thereby to drain over the lands of others. Henry v. Newburyport, 149 Mass. 552, 5 L. R. A. 179.

A wharf below high-water mark is a nuisance, but a private individual cannot without necessity defendant's land and the vicinity thereof, and enables him to more readily reach the deeper waters of the lake by boat, and prevents the action of the waters and ice upon his land to his damage.

At the close of the trial the court found, as matters of fact, that Spaight (formerly Rutledge) street is one of the public streets of the city, and extends between blocks 149 and 150; that the southerly line of said street is, and ever has been, the line marking the crest of the bank along said block 150, upon which was situated a certain iron fence or railing at the time of the commencement of this action, and being at all points along said block many feet distant from the waters of the lake; that said street between said blocks is a public street only by virtue of the fact that it has been used and worked and traveled for 20 years; that it is materially less than 66 feet wide (being of such width only as it has been worked and used); that the street so used and traveled between said blocks was never dedicated to the public by any of the plats of the city for the purpose of a public street; that it was not laid out, located, established, traveled, or used at the point or points fixed by the various plats of the city creating and fixing the streets, lots, and blocks of the city, and has never been used, worked, or traveled south of said iron fence or railing as it existed at the commencement of this action; that the loca-run his vessel against and injure it without liability for damages. Dimes v. Petley, 19 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 452, 15 Q. B. 276, 14 Jur. 1132.

Though the grant of a right to erect a wharf if destructive of the paramount right of navigation and fishing may be void, the remedy is not by injunction at the suit of an individual. Delaware & M. R. Co. v. Gill & J. 479, 29 Am. Dec. 561.

The owner of a right of fishery has no claim against one who, acting without license from the state, erects a wharf in the stream so as to interfere with the fishery, since that right is held subject to the paramount right of the public. Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 29, 100 Am. Dec. 557.

Right under grant or license.

A grant of a right to build a wharf as long as 1200 feet near the island in the tule in Suisun valley, in a certain county, on the land of the state, is not void for uncertainty, and the grantees have a right to select any property which is within the terms of the description for the erection of the wharf, and must proceed within a reasonable time with its erection. Rush v. Jackson, 24 Cal. 308.

A constitutional provision that no one shall be entitled to exclusive privileges but in consideration of public services will not prevent the legislature from granting to one person the exclusive right to erect wharves for the use of the public. The court says that the position taken, that the owners of lands lying on the sea have the right to build wharves for their own use into the sea adjoining the fronts of their lands, and cannot be deprived of that grant under legislative authority, cannot be maintained. Martin v. O'Brien, 34 Miss. 21.

Where a grant of a right to build a wharf of a certain length was made in 1852, and a structure only a part of that length was built and left for six years without addition, it was held that the power of the grantees had been exhausted, and that they could not afterwards extend it further without a new grant. Rush v. Jackson, 24 Cal. 308.

A grant to two persons of a right to erect a wharf in front of their lands, when the title appears to be in one alone, will not avail to defeat the right after the structure has been erected, if the one holding the title has conveyed to the other, and he to a third person who has held possession for more than thirty-five years. Brooks v. Roberts, 45 U. S. App. 395, 78 Fed. Rep. 411, 24 C. C. A. 158.

A state cannot grant to a railroad company its title to the lands under the navigable waters of an entire harbor so as to give it the right to regulate the construction and use of wharves. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 38 L. ed. 1018.

And in the lower court it had been held that there was nothing to prevent the state from withdrawing the authority which had been given to the railroad company, if it saw fit to do so. Illinois v. Illinois C. R. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 780.

40 L. R. A.

A grant of a right to make a wharf will not authorize the grantee to make fills which will cut off access from a highway which formerly terminated at the water's edge to the water. People v. Lambier, 5 Denio, 9, 47 Am. Dec. 273.

A statutory grant to a railroad company of the right to construct its track along the bank of a navigable body of water gives it no riparian rights which will entitle it to construct wharves into the water for the benefit of its business. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 38 L. ed. 1018.

A landowner has no common-law right to erect a wharf below high-water mark, and a legislative grant of the soil below high-water mark will not by implication prevent the construction of improvements in the harbor which will cut a wharf erected there off from access to the navigable part of the river. Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. 9, 21 Am. Dec. 50.

In Dugan v. Baltimore, 5 Gill & J. 387, the court, in speaking of the title to land which had been made by filling out in front of a market house under authority of the act of the legislature, says the improvements authorized and encouraged were those made by improvers in front of their own lands, not of their neighbors. The legislature never designed such an invasion of the rights of public property; nor indeed had they the power to legalize it, if such had been their intention.

The grant by Ramirez to Pintado of the right to make wharves in the Bay of Pensacola was void because of want of jurisdiction to make it. Richardson v. Sullivan, 38 Fla. 90.

To entitle the owner of land to a license to build a wharf he must be the owner of land adjoining the water's edge at ordinary high water. State v. Brown, 27 N. J. L. 13.

But the licensing board has no power to inquire into the applicant's title to the land. Brown v. Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. 27 N. J. L. 648.

So far as the right to wharf out extends under a license to wharf, the property is vested in the licensee. State, Roberts v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 530.

A state has the power to lease the space in front of a public street where it reaches navigable water, to a private person for the construction of a dock, which, when completed, may be treated as private property. United States v. Bain, 3 Hughes, 598.

In Baltimore v. McKim, 3 Bland, Ch. 453, it was held that permission given to an individual by the port wardens, to build a wharf on a certain public street, was a mere nullity.

The water in front of a plat of land dedicated by an individual for a public park at a time when the title to the water was in the government is not annexed to the park by a statute for benefit of commerce which requires the erection of wharves, and owners of land abutting on the park cannot enjoin the erection of wharves by a lessee of the government upon a space opposite the park. Euge v. Apalachicola Oyster Canning & Fish Co. 25 Fla. 636.

tion of Spaight street, according to the various plats of the city, is a number of feet north of the present north line of said street and as it now exists; that none of the defendants removed any earth, boulders, stones, or other materials from within the limits of Spaight street, or in any way injured or damaged the support of said street; that none of the defendants committed any nuisance of any kind or description at the point mentioned in the complaint; that, some years prior to the commencement of this action, certain persons, then owning lots in block 150, placed in the waters of the lake certain rocks and boulders, in front of and distant from the shore line; that the action of the waters and ice in succeeding years carried such rocks and boulders in and close to, and in some instances upon, the shore of block 150; that the only acts of any of the defendants were to remove said rocks and boulders further out into the lake, and so place them in a uniform line as to afford protection to the shore, and to prevent the accumulation of material at that point calculated to create a nuisance; that such acts created no nuisance, and had no tendency so to do, but rather to prevent one, and in no way interfered with or weakened the support of said street, but rather tended to strengthen and protect the same; that Heath is the owner in fee of lot 3, block 150, according to the several plats of the city; that the north part of lot 3, lying

To low-water mark.

Riparian owners are permitted to build wharves and make other improvements between high and low water mark if they do not materially interfere with the right of navigation common to all citizens. Cincinnati Co. v. Cooperage Co., 11 Ky. L. Rep. 629.

One of the earliest objects to which the settlers in Massachusetts gave their attention was commerce. For this purpose wharves erected below high-water mark were a necessity. But the colony was not able to build them at public expense. To induce persons to erect them the common law of England was altered by ordinance providing that the proprietor of land adjoining on the sea should hold to low-water mark where the tide did not abate more than 100 rods. Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 425, 4 Am. Dec. 155.

The title of a riparian owner of land bounded by the Ohio river extends at least to low-water mark, subject to the easement of navigation and the right of the state to control its use for the promotion of commerce. Barre v. Fleming, 29 W. Va. 314.

The owner may build his wharf to low-water mark without license. Frankford v. Lenning, 2 Phila. 403.

One owning the land to low-water mark may erect a wharf to the boundary of his property if he does not thereby create a nuisance to navigation. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Hun, 163.

The owner of land bordering on the Ohio river has a right to establish a private wharf as far as low-water mark. Ensminger v. People, 47 Ill. 384, 95 Am. Dec. 495.

The proprietor of land adjoining a navigable river has the exclusive right to the land between high and low-water mark for the purpose of erecting wharves thereon. East Haven v. Hemingway, 7 Conn. 202.

A wharf below high-water mark in tide waters is not, as matter of law, a nuisance. The question is one of fact. People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379.

Prescriptive right.

In Durham v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne (Angell, Tide Waters, p. 84, Appx.), the corporation prescribed for the right to erect and license wharves on the River Tyne, which was upheld by a dismissal of an appeal from a decree recognizing the claim.

The Federal cases.

Following the general understanding which has prevailed throughout the country, there are several expressions of opinion in decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the right to wharf out.

A riparian proprietor may erect a pier for his exclusive use and benefit if it terminates at the point of navigability, and does not interfere with the statutory regulations, and he is not obliged to permit other persons to fasten their vessels to it. The court says such structures are never held to be nuisances unless they obstruct the paramount right of navigation, and that is a question of fact. Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black, 23, 17 L. ed. 29.

Although riparian proprietors on navigable streams above the tide are limited to the bank of the stream, they have the same right to construct suitable landings and wharves as is accorded riparian proprietors on navigable water affected by the ebb and flow of the tide. St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall. 272, 19 L. ed. 74.

In Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984, municipal authorities acting under authority of the state attempted to remove a wharf which had been erected into the waters of a river, and in support of the right relied upon two grounds, one of which was that the one who had erected the wharf had no title to the soil. This raised the question between the individual and the state, and the court says that under the doctrine of the Federal courts he probably had no title to the soil, while the Wisconsin court, from which state the case came, recognized such title. After deciding this question, however, the court said: But whether the title of the owner of such a lot extends beyond the dry land or not, he is certainly entitled to the rights of a riparian proprietor whose land is bounded by a navigable stream; and among those rights are access to the navigable part of the river from the front of his lot, the right to make a landing, wharf, or pier for his own use or for the use of the public, which may be exercised subject to the general rules and laws for the protection of the public rights in the river. This proposition has been decided by this court. This riparian right is property, and is valuable, and, though it must be enjoyed in due subjection to the rights of the public, it cannot be arbitrarily or capriciously destroyed or impaired. It is a right of which, when once vested, the owner can only be deprived in accordance with established law, and, if necessary that it be taken for the public good, upon due compensation.

In Illinois v. Illinois C. R. Co. the railroad company had acquired by purchase certain lots on the shore of Lake Michigan, from which it had erected piers into the water, and it had acquired from the state a grant of all the land under water in the harbor, with authority to improve the same. The state brought suit to enjoin the maintenance of the piers or the erection of new ones, claiming that the grant was void and that the wharves had been erected without right upon the domain of the state, and asked that the unlawful structures be directed to be removed and the corporation enjoined from constructing others. Mr. Justice Harlan in the circuit court first considered the rights under the ownership of riparian lots, and held (33 Fed. Rep. 755), that in the absence of any legislative or governmental direction as to the manner of the occuimmediately south of the street, throughout its whole width, has, ever since said lot was platted, remained high and dry land, and is now high and dry land; that assuming Spaight street to be 66 feet wide, and located where the city claims it to be, yet Heath would still own dry land between the street and the lake along the whole width of his lot 3; that Powers is the owner and is possessed of lots 4 and 5, block 150, which extend from the iron railing or fence to the water's edge of the lake; that Mayers is the owner of lots 6 and 7 of block 150, which extend from the iron railing or fence to the water's edge of the lake; that continuously since said lots in block 150 were laid out and platted there has existed dry land on said lots at a point

66 feet south of the north line of Spaight street; that Kerns is and was the owner of lot 9 in block 150, and he and his ancestors in title have continuously owned the same since the platting thereof, and the same extends from the iron fence or railing south-erly to the lake; that there is and ever has been a portion of said lot, between the waters of said lake and a point 66 feet south of the north line of Spaight street as actually established, dry land; that the city has no title to any portion of the bed of the lake, and has no jurisdiction over its waters, except for the limited and specific purposes mentioned in the charter. And as conclusions of law the court finds, in effect, that the defendants, Heath, Power, Mayers, and Kerns, are and were re-pation of the bed of the lake within the state, the railroad company as riparian owner of the water lots had the right, in virtue of such ownership and as part of its purchase of such lots, to connect the shore line by artificial constructions with outside waters which were navigable in fact; although the exercise of that right is at all times subject to such regulations—at least those not amounting to prohibition—as the state may establish. And it was held that the piers in front of the riparian lots could not be removed, but it was held that the grant was void. The railroad company appealed from the decree. The Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Field, upholds the decision as to the rights of riparian owners upon the authority of Yates v. Milwaukee and Dutton v. Strong (Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 445, 36 L. ed. 1040), and although three of the justices dissent, this doctrine is not questioned in the dissenting opinion.

That case comes very close to being a direct decision of the question, for, although the state does not appear in terms to repudiate the doctrine of riparian rights, it does ask to have the piers removed, which the court refused to do so far as they were erected in front of riparian lots owned by the company.

In Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 381, in which Mr. Justice Gray attempts to review the decisions upon the question, he shows that passages in opinions of that court which were relied on as showing that a riparian owner had, independently of local law, a right of property in the soil below high-water mark, and the right to build out wharves to reach navigable water, must be interpreted in view of the fact that the states from which the cases came had recognized such right as part of the local law, and it was held that in case the state had absolutely repudiated such right the supreme court would follow its law.

The general language found in the prior decisions was doubtless used without considering the possibility that the doctrine of riparian rights might be repudiated in some state or states, and the implication would seem to be that the court regarded such right as a common-law right, or at least one not requiring express legislative permission to exercise. The law of the subject as gathered from the Illinois Central case, and those the doctrine of which it followed, as read in the light of Shively v. Bowlby, would seem to be that if a state does not expressly disallow all right of access both to navigable waters and to the water's edge such right exists and will vest upon the acquisition of the riparian lot, and after it vests it cannot be taken away without compensation. The effect of Mr. Justice Gray's opinion in Shively v. Bowlby would seem to be simply to leave the states free to establish their own rules unembarrassed by the expressions of opinion which have fallen from the 40 L. R. A.

members of the Supreme Court of the United States. But the expressions in those opinions have been adopted and followed in so many state courts that there is little reason to believe that the withdrawal of the support furnished by them now will have any material effect upon the development of the law.

It would seem that to some extent, at least, Justice Gray had changed his opinion in regard to the Federal cases, for in Boston v. Richardson, 105 Mass. 365, he cites Dutton v. Strong and Yates v. Milwaukee as holding that the riparian proprietor has the right to build out wharves for his own use and the use of the public, provided he does not obstruct navigation; and this without regard to the question whether he has or has not title in the soil under the water before he so builds upon it.

In Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 623, where the question was as to the title to a small inland lake, the court says the title of the shore and land under tide water is in the state, and it may dispose of the usufruct of such lands, as is often done by the erection of wharves and piers and other adventitious aids of commerce.

A private wharf may be maintained in a navigable river. Parkersburg & O. R. Transp. Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 691, 27 L. ed. 584.

Cases denying the right to build wharves.

All the courts agree that the obstruction cannot be extended beyond the point of navigability or be allowed if it is in fact a nuisance.

A wharf is not per se a nuisance. Laughlin v. Lamasco City, 6 Ind. 223.

At common law the erection of wharves in tide water is not indictable as a nuisance unless it obstructs navigation. Engs v. Peckham, 11 R. I. 210.

But the erection of a wharf which materially obstructs access from riparian property to the water will be enjoined as a nuisance. Shirley v. Bishop, 67 Cal. 543.

A city cannot declare a private wharf a nuisance, and order its removal, when in point of fact it is no hindrance or obstruction to navigation. Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984.

It is not every erection into tide waters which is a nuisance. In deciding whether a proposed wharf will be a nuisance, the character of the river and existing modes of navigation, as well as the necessity of wharves for commerce, should be borne in mind. Thornton v. Grant, 10 R. I. 477, 14 Am. Rep. 701.

The mere fact that a wharf may interfere with navigation does not render it unlawful unless it interferes to such an extent as to make it a nuisance. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Hun, 163.

The riparian owner, although owning the land to low-water mark, cannot construct his wharf so as to interfere with the navigation of the river.

spectively the owners of the several lots as stated; that each and all of said lots extended from the iron railing or fence to the lake; that neither the city nor any of the inhabitants thereof have any right of access to the waters of the lake over and across any of the said lots, but that the right to the same, as well as all other riparian rights incident to the ownership of land bordering upon the lake at that place, belongs to the respective defendants; that the city has no title to the bed of the lake, and is only given jurisdiction over its waters for the limited and specific purposes mentioned in its charter, which gave it no authority to enjoin or prevent any of the acts herein found to have been done by any of the defendants; that the injunction herein was improperly issued; that the defendants are entitled to judgment dismissing the complaint herein, vacating the preliminary injunction, and for their damages, including reasonable attorneys' fees, and costs and disbursements in this action. And it was thereby referred to a referee to assess the damages of each of the defendants, and report the same to the court, and judgment was entered thereon accordingly. Upon such findings judgment was entered ordering and adjudging, in effect, that the injunction be, and the same was thereby, dissolved, and the complaint dismissed with costs, taxed at $163.52 for Kerns and Blackner, and $42.27 for Heath, and ordering and adjudging that the defendants do have and recover against the plaintiff, as and for damages sustained by them by reason of Sherlock v. Bainbridge, 41 Ind. 35, 13 Am. Rep. 302.

Riparian proprietors have no right to erect wharves between high and low water mark if thereby the passage of vessels and boats will be materially straitened and injured. Kean v. Stetson, 5 Pick. 492.

It is no obstruction to build out a wharf if a sufficient passage or way is left for the public. Com. v. Crowninshield, 2 Dane, Abr. 606.

There is no right to erect a wharf in a narrow stream where the effect of it will be to obstruct and deflect the flow of the water to the detriment of the public. Murphy v. Bullock, 20 R. I. pt. 1, p. 36.

The right of an individual to build a wharf in front of his land in navigable waters is subject to the qualification that such wharf does not improperly impede the public navigation. Frink v. Lawrence, 20 Conn. 117, 50 Am. Dec. 274.

Cases absolutely denying right.

There are some courts which deny absolutely the right of the riparian owner unless he acquires the right by contract with the state.

In Washington, under a peculiar constitutional provision retaining the title to the tide ways in the state, it is held that—

As against the state a littoral owner can assert no valuable rights below the line of ordinary high tide. Harbor Line Comrs. v. State, Yeeler, 2 Wash. 530.

A riparian proprietor has no right as against the state or its grantees to extend wharves in front of his land below high-water mark. Eisenbach v. Hatfield, 2 Wash. 236, 12 L. R. A. 632.

Parliament has always had the power of depriving a riparian owner of his access to the water without compensation, and the state has succeeded to the same right in this country. Harbor Line Comrs. v. State, Yeeler, 2 Wash. 530.

In Oregon also, although the early dicta were the other way, it has been decided that the riparian owner has no right in the tide way.

In Wilson v. Welch, 12 Or. 353, it is doubted whether a sale by the state of land under navigable water could be made which would deprive the riparian owner of his rights.

It is said that the state, although having title to the bed of navigable waters, holds that title for the benefit of the public, and cannot take away the riparian rights of abutting owners without making compensation therefor.

So, it was said that under the Oregon law the owner of the shore has a right to build wharves out from his land and reclaim the submerged land from the water. Parker v. Taylor, 7 Or. 435.

The riparian owner has a right to build wharves out to the navigable water. Parker v. West Coast Pkg. Co. 17 Or. 510, 5 L. R. A. 61.

But in Bowly v. Shively, 22 Or. 410, it was finally settled that there is no right to wharf out. 40 L. R. A.

So upon repeal of the statute giving riparian owners the right to purchase the adjoining land under water, their right to do so ceased. Olney v. Moore, 13 Or. 238.

Although it is said that it is the policy of Oregon to permit owners of riparian lands on non-tidal rivers to build wharves in front of their property. Lewis v. Portland, 25 Or. 133, 22 L. R. A. 736.

The right to erect a wharf and to receive tolls for the use of it is a franchise, and cannot be exercised by a private citizen except under a grant from the sovereign power or by prescription. Wiswall v. Hall, 3 Paige, 313.

In Louisiana the banks of the Mississippi river are public property subject to be used by the public at large, and if an individual builds a wharf it will be upon the condition that the public will have the use of it. Hart v. Baton Rouge, 10 La. Ann. 171.

There is no right or property in the privilege of erecting a wharf below low-water mark. The exercise of the privilege is dependent upon a license from the state. Naglee v. Ingersoll, 7 Pa. 185.

A riparian owner has no right to erect a wharf below low-water mark. Borough v. The Geneva, 3 Lanc. L. Rev. 134.

At common law a riparian proprietor has no right to wharf out from his own land. Dana v. Jackson Street Wharf Co. 31 Cal. 113, 39 Am. Dec. 164.

There is no right to erect wharves as against the state. Murphy v. Bullock, 20 R. I. pt. 1, p. 36.

In New York the court held, in Lansing v. Smith, 8 Cow. 143, that there was no private right of action for an improvement in the river which interfered with access to wharves further up the stream.

And that decision was followed in Gould v. Hudson River R. Co. 6 N. Y. 522, where the right of access was cut off by a railroad built along the shore. But that case was overruled in Rumsey v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 138 N. Y. 79, 15 L. R. A. 613.

Statutory restrictions.

Under the New York act of 1845 a grantee of land under water on the river front of New York city could not construct a wharf below high-water mark without permission of the common council. Duryea v. New York, 26 Hun. 120.

Under the New Jersey act of 1891, no pier can be built into navigable water without authority of commissioners. Stockton v. American Luloi Co. (N. J. Ch.) 36 Atl. 572.

A riparian owner cannot since the act of March 30, 1877, build and maintain wharves in front of his land. Folsom v. Freeborn, 13 R. I. 200.

Wharf beneficial.

The rule which was at one time suggested in England, that if the wharf did more good than the injunction, the sum of ——— dollars and ——— cents, as assessed by the referee therein appointed. From that judgment the plaintiff brings this appeal.

Messrs. J. A. Aylward and R. M. Bashford for appellant.

Messrs. Erdall & Swansen and W. R. Bagley, for respondent Heath:

The title to the bed of a meandered lake or pond is in the state. The riparian owner along such lakes or ponds takes to the edge of the water in its ordinary condition, and has certain rights which are incident to his ownership of the soil immediately adjoining the water; namely, the right of exclusive access to and from the waters of the lake on his land; also the right, in case of a navigable lake, to construct in shoal water, in front of his land, proper wharves or piers in aid of navigation, and, at his peril of obstructing navigation, through the water far enough to reach actually navigable water.

Diedrich v. Northwestern Union R. Co. 42 Wis. 248, 24 Am. Rep. 399; Boorman v. Sunnucks, 42 Wis. 238; Delaplaine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 386; McLennan v. Prentice, 85 Wis. 437; Ne-Pee-Nauk Club v. Wilson, 96 Wis. 290; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018; Shively v. Bouly, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 331.

The intrusion only amounted to the creation of a purpresture, and not a public nuisance. A public nuisance is something which mate-harm it was not a nuisance, has not been recognized in this country.

It is no defense to an indictment for nuisance in building a wharf on public property that the wharf was beneficial to the public. Respublica v. Caldwell, 1 Dall. 150, 1 L. ed. 77.

Regulation of right.

There is a right on the part of the public to regulate the erection of wharves so that they may best promote the public welfare.

The right of a riparian owner to wharf out is subject to such regulations as the state shall see fit to prescribe. State v. Sargent, 45 Conn. 358.

All sovereignties within which are navigable rivers have a right to exercise jurisdiction over their waters. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Hun. 168.

The right to construct wharves is subject to the control of the state and municipal authorities. Bond v. Wool, 107 N. C. 139.

The state has a right to regulate the erection of wharves and piers for the benefit of commerce and navigation, even in cases where the riparian owners have a right to erect them. People v. New York & S. I. Ferry Co. 68 N. Y. 71.

In Atty. Gen. v. Evart Booming Co. 34 Mich. 462, the court says that while the state may limit wharves to the line of navigability, this is seldom done except under certain peculiar circumstances.

By the Maryland act of 1783 the port wardens of Baltimore were authorized to grant permission to make wharves, but in order to vest a title to a wharf it must have been made according to permission granted. Giraud v. Hughes, 1 Gill & J. 249.

An injunction may be issued against the construction of a pier 25 feet into a navigable river to a point where the water is 26 or 28 feet deep, if it will seriously injure the business of a ferry company, under the act of Congress providing that it shall be unlawful to build a wharf outside established harbor lines, or in navigable water where there are no harbor lines, without permission of the Secretary of War. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Backus, 46 Fed. Rep. 211.

When a riparian owner has built a wharf in accordance with the designation of the proper authorities as to what portion of the bulkhead line he shall be entitled to, his land being in a cove, he cannot be deprived of his wharf by a subsequent change of the method of appropriating the bulkhead line, by which he receives a shorter portion. But if he has not built he may be compelled to conform to the new designation. Classen v. Chesapeake Guano Co. 81 Md. 258.

A city cannot by building a wharf where a street terminates on the water's edge deprive a riparian owner owning the land under the water of the right to build a wharf, by reason of its authority 40 L. R. A.

to regulate wharves, and the statute providing that piers shall be a certain distance apart, so that it may maintain a suit to enjoin him from doing so. Brooklyn v. New York Ferry Co. 87 N. Y. 34. Affirming 23 Hun. 277.

The fact that a pier exceeds the width permitted by statute does not deprive it of the character of a lawful pier to the extent of the permitted width, nor justify the erection of another pier within the prohibited distance from it. People v. New York & S. I. Ferry Co. 68 N. Y. 71.

The building of a wharf without a license from the state, or someone to whom the authority to license has been delegated, beyond low-water mark, is a clear encroachment on the rights of the public. Frankford v. Lennig, 2 Phila. 408.

The owner of a lot on the water front of San Francisco has no right without a license to wharf out from his own land into the bay. Dana v. Jackson Street Wharf Co. 31 Cal. 118, 89 Am. Dec. 164.

Under the California act of 1870 an application for a franchise to construct a wharf must particularly describe its location. Templeton v. Coburn, 48 Cal. 563.

If a wharf is erected in tide water and upon soil belonging to the state, without a license from the state, it will belong to the state, and may be recovered by it in ejectment. People v. Davidson, 31 Cal. 379; Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 385, 28 Am. Rep. 634.

Harbor lines.

The establishment of harbor lines is a method of regulation which is commonly used. See note to Grand Rapids v. Powers (Mich.) 14 L. R. A. 496.

The legislature has power to establish lines beyond which no wharf shall be maintained. But such statute will not affect the right to maintain wharves erected before their passage. Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; Atty. Gen. v. Boston & L. R. Co. 118 Mass. 349.

Under the North Carolina statutes requiring the authorities of a town bordering on navigable water to fix the wharf line at deep water upon application of riparian owners, the mere fact that one location has been made and a wharf built in accordance with it does not deprive the riparian owner of the right to compel a second fixing of the line in case the former one does not reach deep water. Wool v. Edenton, 117 N. C. 1.

Where the navigable line has been established by dedication of lots and the establishment of a dock line by the authorities, a wharf cannot be extended beyond the line. Yates v. Judd, 13 Wis. 119.

The extension of a wharf beyond the established lines of the harbor is a purpresture. The Idlewild, 26 U. S. App. 469, 64 Fed. Rep. 603, 12 C. C. A. 32.

A statute establishing a wharf line beyond which no wharf can be built does not take the property rially injures, inconveniences, or damages the public.

Douglas v. State, 41 Wis. 387; State v. Carpenter, 68 Wis. 172, 60 Am. Rep. 848; Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 298, 8 L. R. A. 808; Gould, Waters, § 21; 1 Wood, Nuisances, § 4; People, Britton, v. Park & O. R. Co. 76 Cal. 156.

Under the circumstances, whether or not the acts of the respondent in this case amounted to a public nuisance was a question of fact.

Gould, Waters, § 21, p. 45.

The remedy for a purpresture is either by an information of intrusion at common law, or by information in equity, at suit of the attorney general. A common nuisance is abatable at suit of the Crown by virtue of its power of superintendence and control over public rights, and the attorney general, on the part of the Crown, may proceed by information in equity for the protection of either the jus privatum of the King, or the jus publicum of his subjects, from the nuisance.

Gould, Waters, § 21, p. 46. See also State v. Carpenter, 68 Wis. 172, 60 Am. Rep. 848; Diedrich v. Northwestern Union R. Co. 42 Wis. 248, 24 Am. Rep. 399; People, Britton, v. Park & O. R. Co. 76 Cal. 156; Stewart v. Fitch, 81 N. J. L. 17; Delaplane v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 386.

The city of Madison, in its public capacity, has no control over public nuisances within its limits, except such as is conferred upon it by its charter or some general law.

of a riparian owner. Harlan & H. Co. v. Paschall, 5 Del. Ch. 435.

The city of Evansville has under her charter the power to establish wharf lines, but her power does not extend to prevent wharves above high-water mark. Martin v. Evansville, 32 Ind. 85.

The legislature has no power to establish wharf lines upon a stream which is navigable only for floating logs and rafts. Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94, 14 L. R. A. 498.

In a state where the riparian owner owns to the middle of the stream the public authorities cannot, after he has erected a wharf, arbitrarily establish a wharf line hundreds of feet away from the point of navigability, and, without making the river navigable up to that line, deprive riparian owners of the right to avail themselves of the advantage of the navigable channel by building wharves or docks to it for that purpose, nor declare the wharf that extends beyond it a nuisance and proceed to abate it. Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984.

Right of municipal corporation to build wharf.

The power to erect wharves and charge wharfage is not one of the implied powers of the municipal corporation, but requires for its exercise an express legislative grant. The Geneva, 16 Fed. Rep. 874.

The power to erect wharves is not strictly one relating to municipalities, but it is competent for the legislature to make them, in such measure as it deems expedient, repositories of it. Mobile v. Moog, 53 Ala. 561.

A city cannot engage in the business of erecting wharves and charge for the use of them without legislative authority. But when one of its streets is laid out along a river it may make suitable structures to enable the public to make use of the rights of commerce and transportation afforded by the river. Webb v. Demopolis, 95 Ala. 116, 21 L. R. A. 62.

The power to erect wharves is a franchise which a municipal corporation can acquire only by legislative grant. St. Martinsville v. The Mary Lewis, 32 La. Ann. 1293.

The power of a municipal corporation to acquire land for wharf purposes must be derived directly from the legislature. Roberts v. Louisville, 92 Ky. 95, 13 L. R. A. 844.

The city of St. Louis was given power by charter to construct wharves. Waddingham v. St. Louis, 14 Mo. 190.

And the same is true of Alexandria. Matthews v. Alexandria, 68 Mo. 115, 30 Am. Rep. 776.

A city has power to build piers under a statute enabling it to enlarge slips, and, upon paying one third of the expense of building the necessary piers, shall be entitled to share in the slippage. Thompson v. New York, 11 N. Y. 115.

Under the Indiana statutes cities have power to 40 L. R. A.

construct wharves. Jeffersonville v. The John Shalleross, 35 Ind. 19.

A city has a right to build a wharf for public purposes where a street which has been duly dedicated to the public abuts upon a navigable river. Backus v. Detroit, 49 Mich. 110, 43 Am. Rep. 447.

Wharves may be constructed by the city either directly or by contract with others, giving them the revenue for a certain period as compensation for the expenditure. Geigor v. Flor, 8 Fla. 325.

In California a statute authorized San Francisco to construct wharves at the ends of all the streets which terminated on the bay. People v. Broadway Wharf Co. 31 Cal. 34.

The subsection of the California municipal government act, giving cities the right to erect wharves, does not give them the right to construct them at any point irrespective of the rights of others. San Pedro v. Southern P. R. Co. 101 Cal. 888.

The right of erecting wharves will pass to a town when the owner of land lays it out into lots and blocks which he sells according to a plat which leaves the space along the water open and marked for public use. Rowan v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. 256; Newport v. Taylor, 18 B. Mon. 699.

A city has a right to construct a wharf at the termination of a dedicated street which runs to the water. McMurray v. Baltimore, 54 Md. 103.

A city has a right to build a wharf for public purposes where any street which has been duly dedicated to the public abuts upon a navigable stream. Backus v. Detroit, 49 Mich. 110, 43 Am. Rep. 447. That case turned, however, upon the question of the extent of title in the public, and not upon the power of the city as such.

A city has a right to build and control a wharf in front of its streets. Galveston v. Menard, 23 Tex. 404.

But where the title to the fee of a street which runs to the water is in the abutting owners the municipal corporation is not a riparian proprietor upon the water so as to justify the port wardens in granting to it a license to erect a wharf from the end of the street into the water. Re Cramp, 18 Phila. 16.

A city in which the streets have been dedicated for public use has no authority to grant to a private person a right to erect a wharf at the termination of one of the streets, and take toll there. The title to the street being in the public, any wharf erected there must be free. Russell v. The Empire State, Newberry, Adm. 542.

The Indiana act of 1852 gave towns no authority to construct wharves. Snyder v. Rockport, 6 Ind. 237.

A municipal corporation may lease a small portion of a water front for a private wharf. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. v. Kimball, 114 Cal. 414.

A city which has been given power to construct wharves and fill up flats cannot make a lease of

2 Wood, Nuisances, § 748.

The general language of the charter is not intended to apply to acts such as are complained of in this case, but is intended to apply to such acts as intrinsically and inevitably amount to a nuisance; in other words, to acts which amount to a nuisance per se, and which necessarily affect the health and safety of the inhabitants of the city, or the property of such inhabitants.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 379, also § 374; Waupun v. Moore, 84 Wis. 450, 17 Am. Rep. 446; Felt v. Felt, 19 Wis. 194.

The fact that the legislature has delegated to the common council of this city the authority to prevent certain kinds of nuisances from being committed in this lake, by necessary implication excludes its authority to prevent others.

the right to a private corporation. Corpus Christi v. Central Wharf & W. Co. 8 Tex. Civ. App. 94.

Right of city to regulate wharf.

The corporation of Washington has the power under act of Congress to regulate the erection of wharves. District of Columbia v. Johnson, 3 Mackey, 120.

Under the Maryland acts of 1783 and 1796, the city of Baltimore may refuse its authority to the erection of a wharf, or may grant it with such conditions, limitations, or restrictions as it deems most beneficial to the navigation and use of the port of the city. Baltimore v. White, 2 Gill, 444.

Wharves erected within the corporate limits of a municipality must yield to the paramount right of the corporation under the law by which the corporation is created. Grant v. Davenport, 18 Iowa, 179.

If a city has been given the right to control the water front beyond a line drawn on the bay, a person who subsequently acquires land from the state will take in subordination to such right, and cannot erect a wharf against the will of the city. Weber v. State Harbor Comrs. 18 Wall. 57, 21 L. ed. 798.

If no title to tide lands has passed from the state to a municipal corporation, it cannot enjoin a railroad company from erecting a wharf over them under permission of the state authorities. San Pedro v. Southern P. R. Co. 101 Cal. 333.

Right of New York city.

The city of New York received a grant of a strip 400 feet wide around the whole water front of Manhattan Island before any private titles had been perfected. It therefore has a right different from that of other municipalities.

The city of New York, when private rights were not interfered with, had a general authority to lay out wharves whenever and wherever it should deem them expedient. Marshall v. Guion, 11 N. Y. 451.

An addition to a pier in New York harbor cannot be made without permission from the proper authorities, and if authority has been given for certain additions, which has been exhausted, no further additions can be made without further authority. Buck v. Post, 39 Fed. Rep. 249.

After the passage of the act of 1857 to reinvest in the people the title to the Hudson river outside of the port lines, the city of New York could not authorize the erection of a pier outside of such lines, but such erection would be a purpresture and nuisance, to be restrained and abated at the suit of the people. People v. Vanderbilt, 26 N. Y. 287.

Where a permanent pier and an exclusive right to its use is a necessity of large steamship lines, 40 L. R. A.

Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 63 Wis. 32.

Any ambiguity or doubt arising out of the words used by the charter must be resolved in favor of the public.

1 Beach, Pub. Corp. §§ 588, 577; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 91, note 2; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1089, 1042; Gilman v. Milwaukee, 61 Wis. 588; Bell v. Platteville, 71 Wis. 139; Kilvington v. Superior, 83 Wis. 222, 18 L. R. A. 46; Racine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 93 Wis. 118.

In the absence of special powers given to, or special duties imposed upon, a city by act of the legislature, a city can no more than an individual bring an action in equity to enjoin the commission of a public nuisance, unless it is specially injured in its corporate capacity.

Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 238, 8 L. R. A. 808; Sheboygan v. Sheboygan & F. du L.

without which business cannot be properly transacted, the duty rests upon the state or the municipality to provide such accommodations or to permit the companies to obtain them from private owners. Re New York, 135 N. Y. 253.

If the city is granted the right by the state to establish a new bulkhead line beyond the ends of the wharves of private owners, which have been made under contract with the city, and proceeds to do so, by which the access to the private owners' wharves is cut off, it will be compelled to make compensation to them for the damage so occasioned. Williams v. New York, 105 N. Y. 419.

A city which has granted to an individual its right to build a wharf and collect wharfage cannot, without express authority from the legislature, subsequently establish a new wharf line and erect a bulkhead there in such a way as to cut the other wharf off from access to the water. Langdon v. New York, 98 N. Y. 129, Reversing 6 Abb. N. C. 814, where it was held that by the terms of the deed to the claimants the city did not undertake to keep the land beyond the wharf line free from obstruction; that all the right that the claimants had was the right to the wharfage from the wharves as they were originally erected.

And that case was followed in Kingsland v. New York, 45 Hun. 198.

But it has been held that a city which owns the soil under the water of a river along its front to the distance of 400 feet from the shore is not precluded by a grant to one person of a right to build wharves upon less than the 400 feet upon condition that he is required to do so, from subsequently granting the right to another to build upon the space beyond his grant, the former grant never having been acted upon. Furman v. New York, 10 N. Y. 567.

A riparian owner cannot be deprived of his right of access to the water, without compensation, by the erection of a bulkhead for the use of the public. Van Dolsen v. New York, 17 Fed. Rep. 817.

Abatement of wharf.

If the soil of the river is in the sovereign he may remove the obstruction at pleasure, whether it is an injury to navigation or not. Weber v. State Harbor Comrs. 18 Wall. 57, 21 L. ed. 798.

An addition to a pier in the public waters of a harbor where the statute forbids it will be a nuisance so that the court will not interfere with the proceedings of the board of pilot commissioners to abate it. Moore v. Commissioners of Pilots, 32 How. Pr. 184.

Effect of street along shore.

The creation of a public street between the abutting owner's property and the stream will cut

R. Co. 21 Wis. 672; Milwaukee v. Milwaukee & B. R. Co. 7 Wis. 85.

The facts in this case are not such as to justify the interference by a court of equity to grant an injunction.

State v. Carpenter, 68 Wis. 165, 60 Am. Rep. 848; High, Inf. § 742, and cases cited in note 4; Woodruff v. Lockerby, 8 Wis. 369; Head v. James, 13 Wis. 642, 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 830.

Wherever an injunction has been finally dissolved, it is proper to ascertain the damages by a reference for that purpose.

Rev. Stat. § 2778; Parish v. Reeve, 63 Wis. 315; Kane v. Casgrain, 69 Wis. 430; Avery v. Ryan, 74 Wis. 591.

Where the sole purpose of the action is to obtain an injunction, and a temporary injunction is issued, which is dissolved on final hearing, the defendants are entitled to recover as damages reasonable attorneys' fees, even though a motion to dissolve the injunction was not made.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 999-1001; Ford v. Loomis, 62 Iowa, 586; Andrews v. Glenville Woolen Co. 50 N. Y. 282; 2 Sutherland, Damages, pp. 68, 69; Miles v. Edwards, 6 Mont. 180; Swan v. Timmons, 81 Ind. 243; Newton v. Russell, 24 Hun, 40; Creek v. McManus, 18 Mont. 152; Brownlee v. Fenwick, 103 Mo. 420; Colby v. Meservey, 85 Iowa, 555.

Messrs. Chynoweth & Wynne, R. M. La Follette, and G. M. Roe, also for respondents.

Cassoday, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint alleges, in effect, that off his right to build wharves. Potomac S. B. Co. v. Upper Potomac S. B. Co. 100 U. S. 672, 27 L. ed. 1070.

But it has been held in Minnesota that the dedication to public use of a street along the bank of a stream will not deprive the owner of the fee of his riparian rights to erect wharves into the stream. Brisbine v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 23 Minn. 114.

Where the title to the land below high-water mark is in the public it may widen a street running along the shore and erect wharves without the consent of the adjacent proprietor, and without making him any compensation. Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224.

Owners of land fronting on a public street which is laid out along the water front, and the title to which is in a third person, cannot wharf out from the other side of the street opposite their property. Potomac S. B. Co. v. Upper S. B. Co. MacArth. & M. 285.

Private contracts.

A lessee of a wharf cannot, as against his lessor, acquire a right during the existence of the lease to maintain a pier beyond the wharf, the effect of which will be to destroy the value of the wharf. Bedlow v. New York Floating Dry Dock Co. 112 N. Y. 263, 2 L. R. A. 629.

A riparian owner who has granted a license to a third person to fish in the water in front of his property is not thereby precluded from acting upon the license of the state to erect a wharf. Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 29, 100 Am. Dec. 567.

If the owner of a wharf conveys the upland by metes and bounds, retaining possession of the wharf, which he subsequently sells to a third person, and by gradual filling up the water line is at least 30 feet beyond the bounds of the first grantee, he will have no wharf rights so that he can maintain a suit for the abolishment of the existing wharf. Rivas v. Solary, 18 Fla. 122.

A deed giving title as far as a line which is placed at such a distance as to include a certain amount of land will not, although it extends to the flats, give the grantee a right to wharf out to the exclusion of the right of the prior owner. Simons v. French, 25 Conn. 352.

The riparian owner may contract to permit a third person to exercise his right to the use of the water within the harbor lines for wharves. Miller v. Mendenhall, 43 Minn. 95, 8 L. R. A. 89.

The right to wharf out may be alienated separate from the upland. Hanford v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 104, Overruling Lake Superior Land Co. v. Emerson, 35 Minn. 406.

Upon sale of land bounded by tide water the right of wharfage may be reserved. Parker v. Rogers, 8 Or. 133.

40 L. R. A.

The granting by a riparian owner to a third person of the right to build a wharf in front of his property will be binding upon a subsequent grantee of the riparian proprietor. McCann v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 18 Or. 455.

The right to erect wharves, severed from the ownership of the upland, is not a right which can be protected by an action of ejectment. Parker v. West Coast Pkg. Co. 17 Or. 510, 5 L. R. A. 61.

Direction of wharf.

The wharfing rights of adjoining proprietors is in the direction of their side lines which run at right angles with the shore, although by running the wharves in another direction the channel might be reached in a much shorter distance. New Haven S. B. Co. v. Sargent, 50 Conn. 199, 47 Am. Rep. 632.

Rights of state and general government.

It is within the power of the state government to authorize the construction of wharves on navigable streams within its territory, even below low-water mark, and such right does not interfere with the power of the general government over commerce. Savannah v. State, Green, 4 Ga. 26.

Effect of constructing wharf in front of private property.

A wharf constructed by a third person in front of property of a riparian owner will belong to the latter. Baltimore v. St. Agnes Hospital, 48 Md. 419.

If a city without right builds a bulkhead in front of a pier belonging to a riparian owner it will be treated as an accretion, and the title will vest in him. Steers v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 51.

But in Bedlow v. New York Floating Dry Dock Co. 44 Hun, 378, it is said that in case the authorities of New York city were to disregard the rights of the riparian owners and erect the piers themselves, or authorize them to be erected by a third person, the riparian owner would not, under the statutes, become the owner of the piers so built.

The provisions of a statute permitting a municipal corporation to enlarge a slip by extending a pier must be strictly complied with in order to cut off the right of the owner of the pier as it was formerly located. Marshall v. Vultee, 1 E. D. Smith, 234.

Right in wharf which has been erected.

When the lotowner has accepted the statutory authority and has erected the wharf, he has a right to the wharf, which, so long as he uses it, cannot be taken from him. Horner v. Pleasants, 66 Md. 475; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Chase, 43 Md. 23.

Spaight street, between Patterson and Livingston streets, was regularly laid out, platted, and recorded, and is 66 feet wide, and was and is traveled, and runs along the south side of block 149. The several answers allege that the street was established and dedicated under and by virtue of the Doty plat, duly executed and recorded May 7, 1837; that November 27, 1868, the common council of the city widened the street by extending the northerly boundary thereof opposite lots 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 in block 150, into block 149, as therein stated; that December 4, 1868, the common council vacated the portion of the street therein described, along a part of the south side of block 149; and that the several lots in block 150 were platted by that same Doty plat. Thus, it was expressly claimed by all the parties to this action that the section of Spaight street in question was originally established by a recorded plat or plats, and that the same ran along the south line of block 149, or between blocks 149 and 150, as designated on such plat or plats. The court found that it was a public street, "and extends between blocks 149 and 150," but that it was such only by virtue of being used, worked, and traveled for many years. The court then found that the true location of that street, according to the various plats, was a number of feet north of the present north line of the street. Since the present north line of the street is some 8 feet in the narrowest place, and some 32 feet in the widest place, north of the original south line of block 149, it is obvious that the court thus found that "the true location" of that section of the street was not between blocks 149 and 150, as previously found and as claimed by all parties, but "a number of feet north of the present north line" of the street (that is to say, across some of the lots in block 149, or entirely north of that block). Counsel was asked on the argument how many feet north of the present north line of the street the trial court, by such finding, had in mind as the true location of the street, according to the various plats; and his answer was, "About 200 feet." Such finding seems to be based upon the testimony of one of the surveyors to the effect that he had recently measured the distance on Patterson street from the shore line of Third lake to the shore line of Fourth lake, and found it to be 4,044 feet; that such distance, as indicated by the Pritchette plat of 1839, as near as he could ascertain it, was 3,762 feet (that is to say, 282 feet less than the true distance); and that, not with reference to where it is laid out, but according to that plat, the true location of Spaight street was, approximately, something over 200 feet north from where it is at present. Of course, if the true location of the street, according to the plat, would be 200 feet north of where it now is, then the true location of block 149, according to the plat, would be still further north of such true location, and that would necessarily place block 150 where block 149 is now. That would necessarily, according to the plat, disarrange, not only the balance of Spaight street, but other streets in the vicinity, and besides would be likely to unsettle numerous titles. The city engineer testified to the effect that there were no original monuments, either natural or made, in the city, except one in the Capitol Park, and that he thought no one had ever been able to find that; that there was no plat which covered the entire city which would agree with the land as laid out over the entire city; that he used a map made by McCabe, city surveyor, June 16, 1868, of the street and block 149 in question, attached to the petition for widening the street; that that map agreed with the Pritchette plat, recorded in the register's office in 1839; that there was a discrepancy between the two Doty plats and the Pritchette plat as to the location of the street in question, varying from nothing to 20-odd feet; that such discrepancy was owing to the fact that the Pritchette plat put the west end of the section of the street in question further south, and the east end of such section further north, than either of the Doty plats; that he assumed that the Pritchette plat was evidence that the original land had been staked out in accordance therewith; that in making the map in evidence, of the premises in question, he resorted to old fences, old buildings, and the streets as laid out and used for many years, as indicating the lines evidently established by former surveys

If a person without authority from the legislature erects a wharf below low-water mark, he acquires no exclusive right to the space immediately adjoining the wharf for the purpose of accommodating vessels, but the space may be occupied by the public. Gray v. Bartlett, 20 Pick. 186, 32 Am. Dec. 208.

Log pier.

A pier erected by a riparian owner in the navigable water of the Mississippi river as part of a boom for his logs is unlawful, and he will be liable for loss occasioned by a collision of a boat with it. Such structure differs from a wharf made to facilitate commerce. Atlee v. Union Packet Co. 21 Wall. 389, 22 L. ed. 619.

Individual property owners of the bank of navigable rivers have no right to construct piers for booming logs in it without authority from the legislature. Leigh v. Holt, 5 Biss. 338.

In 1873 Congress authorized the owners of saw-mills to construct piers in aid of the business on the banks of the Mississippi river, in front of their property, under the direction of the Secretary of War. Renwick v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co. 49 Iowa, 664.

Ejectment for pier.

In Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224, a recovery was denied of wharves in front of the plaintiff's riparian property, which had been erected by a railroad company under permission of the state.

In Austin v. Rutland R. Co. 45 Vt. 215, it is said that all that can be claimed for riparian owners seeking to recover in ejectment land that had been improved by a third person in front of their lot is the right to pass to and from the water of the lake within the width of the lot as it bordered on and was washed by the water. There was no right to appropriate land beyond the low-water mark. There is no right to wharf out except by provision of a statute. As the absolute owner of the lot he had the exclusive right to use it in passing to and from the lake. If one in making erections in the lake in front of his land violated his right he could seek redress in some proper way but not by action based on his right as the owner of them.

H. P. F.

in the city; that the Pritchette plat gives no dimensions, but that after he discovered that the McCabe plat practically agreed with it, and that that did give dimensions, he took those dimensions as being the true dimensions as originally staked out in block 149; that he assumed that the streets and blocks, as laid out, had approximately been accurately laid out by former surveyors; that the surveys he made in that part of the city correspond with those made by Capt. Nader and Prof. Conover; that, as his starting point in locating block 149, he took the stake located by Capt. Nader, after verifying the same to see that it was correct; that that gave him the south line of Jenifer and the west line of Patterson streets, and the corner of block 149; that, assuming that those two streets were accurately laid out, the block 149 would correspond with the Pritchette plat, with the exception of the widening of Spaight street mentioned; that the plat indicates that all regular lots are 66 feet wide, and all streets 66 feet wide, but as a matter of fact some of the lots run over more or less; that, if such actual distances were to control, houses would soon be in the streets, and streets in the lots, and so, in making the survey, he tried to ascertain from the streets as laid out, and the fences and buildings as they were located, where the street actually was on the ground, as laid out on the plat. Such evidence as to the practical location of the section of Spaight street in question, as actually laid out under the plats, does not seem to be overcome by anything in the record,—certainly not by the mere fact that the actual distance between the respective shores of the two lakes on the line of Patterson street is 282 feet greater than it would appear to be by the Pritchette plat.

The question recurs, whether, under the evidence and the admissions in the pleadings, the trial court was justified in holding that such section of Spaight street was never dedicated to the public as a street by any of such plats, and that it was never laid out, located, or established as such at the point or points fixed by such plats, but was a public street only by virtue of having been used, worked, and traveled as a street for many years. It is 60 years since the Doty plat was recorded, and 58 years since the Pritchette plat was recorded, and 29 years since the McCabe map was made. Those two plats, as to the premises in question, differ from each other, as indicated; yet such difference is too slight to prevent a practical location of the street under the Pritchette plat. It appears that Spaight, Livingston, Patterson, and Jenifer streets have each and all been actually located, opened, and traveled for a period of 40 years or more, that block 149 is between those streets, and that during that time lots in that block and other blocks in the vicinity have been occupied by persons residing thereon. In the absence of any original monuments which can be ascertained as indicated, such locations and occupancy, and the lines and corners of such streets and blocks, thereby established, as indicated by old fences, old buildings, and the streets as so laid out and used for many years, and stakes and monuments established by former surveyors, were competent evidence as tending to prove, and in our opinion do clearly prove, that the section of Spaight street in question was, more than forty years ago, actually located and laid out under and pursuant to the Pritchette plat, and hence the same was a practical construction of that portion of that plat. Numerous authorities might be cited in support of that proposition. Marsh v. Mitchell, 25 Wis. 706; Nys v. Biemeret, 44 Wis. 104; Racine v. J. I. Chase Plow Co. 56 Wis. 539; State v. Schwin, 65 Wis. 207; Miner v. Brader, 65 Wis. 537; Hrouska v. Janke, 66 Wis. 252; Koenigs v. Jung, 73 Wis. 178; Racine v. Emerson, 85 Wis. 80; Riley v. Griffin, 16 Ga. 144, 60 Am. Dec. 726. Thus, in one of the cases cited it was held that "in ascertaining the true location of the street's, lots, and blocks in a city, according to the plat and survey thereof, regard is to be had (1) to the natural monuments referred to therein, and (2) to the artificial monuments placed by the surveyor to mark lines or boundaries, before resorting to the courses and distances marked on the plat or survey. If no monuments are mentioned or in existence, evidence of long-continued occupation, though beyond the given distances, is admissible. If the description is ambiguous or doubtful, parol evidence of the practical construction given by the parties by acts of occupation, or recognition of monuments or boundaries, is admissible." Courts have gone still further, and held, in effect, that a competent surveyor may, as a witness, in a proper case, and under proper circumstances, give his opinion as to whether certain piles of stone and certain mark or marks on trees were made by a surveyor and indicated a boundary line. Davis v. Mason, 4 Pick. 156; Knox v. Clark, 123 Mass. 216; Brantly v. Swift, 24 Ala. 390; Clegg v. Fields, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 37, 75 Am. Dec. 450. Certainly a mere discrepancy in distance is not to overcome such practical location of the street under and in pursuance of the plat. We must hold, upon the evidence in the record as well as the pleadings, that the section of Spaight street in question was so laid out and opened under and in pursuance of the Pritchette plat, and that the recording of that plat was a dedication of such street to the public, and that such dedication covered and included the whole width of that street as indicated on that plat.

2. The mere fact that the eastern portion of that section of the street was widened by extending the same north into block 149, as mentioned, and that the western portion thereof was narrowed by vacating a piece on the north side of the street, as mentioned, in no way changed the south line of the street as located under that plat.

3. Nor does the fact that that section of the street was never worked or fitted for travel clear to the south line thereof, nor at all south of the iron railing or fence mentioned in the pleadings and findings, prevent the city from working and fitting the same for travel clear to the south line thereof, as located under the Pritchette plat, whenever it may choose to do so. It is well settled that no mere nonuser of that side of the street for the time mentioned can operate as a surrender or abandonment of the same for the purposes of a public street. Reilly v. Racine, 51 Wis. 526; State v. Leaver, 62 Wis. 387; Childs v. Nelson, 69 Wis. 123;

Maire v. Kruse, 85 Wis. 302, 26 L. R. A. 449; Nicolai v. Davis, 91 Wis. 370. In this last case it was held that "the mere fact that the plaintiff had for many years encroached upon the road by putting a portion of his fences in the road, and otherwise, did not bar the town from the legal right of having the road at any time opened to its full width as originally surveyed and laid out." It follows from what has been said that the space between the iron railing or fence and the south line of the street, as so located under the plat, was at the time of the commencement of this action, and is now, a part of Spaight street, and may be worked and fitted for public use as a part of the street whenever the city may choose to do so.

4. The several defendants as abutting lot owners, except Kerns, justified what they had done, respectively, in respect to removing stone, earth, and other materials from within the limits of the street as so laid out, by claiming that they severally owned the land clear up to the iron railing or fence, and that the street did not extend south of that railing or fence, and the findings of the court are in harmony with such claim. From what has been said, it is obvious that such ruling was erroneous. The question recurs whether the city has such an interest in that branch of the relief demanded as to maintain this action. The right of the city in the space between the iron railing or fence and such south line of the street, as so located, being as stated, it follows, under the repeated decisions of this court, that the city has such an interest therein that it may maintain this action so far as to restrain the respective defendants, as abutting lotowners, from so removing stone, earth, and other materials from within the limits of such street, or from impairing the embankment of the street as it now exists, or making it more expensive and difficult to fit the whole width of the street for travel. To that extent the injunction should have been made perpetual. In support of this proposition it is only necessary to cite the following cases: Waukesha Hygeia Mineral Spring Co. v. Waukesha, 83 Wis. 475; Neshkoro v. Nest, 85 Wis. 126; Eau Claire v. Matke, 86 Wis. 291.

5. Counsel contend, in effect, that block 150 on the plat is itself a monument, and that, according to that plat, there appears to have been a strip of land between the section of Spaight street in question and the lake shore, for the whole distance, which is divided up into lots numbered from 1 to 9 inclusive, and hence that the plat should be so construed and modified as in some way to satisfy such calls of land for such lots. But the fact remains that the whole of block 150 is south of Spaight street on the plat, and hence is necessarily south of it as actually located under and in pursuance of the plat. In other words, the location of the streets as mentioned necessarily located that block. Certainly the several owners of land between that street as so located, and the lake shore, have all the rights of abutting owners upon the street, and also all the rights of riparian owners on the shore of the lake. But if there is any defendant who owns no land between the street as so located, and the shore of the lake, then we are unable to perceive upon what theory he could properly be regarded as an abutting owner or riparian owner. A mere mistake as to the quantity or shape of the land in the block, or as to whether the shore of the lake, at some particular point, was within the limits of the street, cannot be allowed to frustrate the plat, as such mistake comes within the well recognized maxim, Falsa demonstratio non nocet. Sherwood v. Sherwood, 45 Wis. 384, 30 Am. Rep. 757; Paine v. Benton, 32 Wis. 496; Du Pont v. Davis, 30 Wis. 175; Kennedy v. Knight, 21 Wis. 347, 94 Am. Dec. 548. The dimensions of the several lots in the block, as they appear upon the plat, must, like other courses and distances, yield to the actual condition of things as they existed, and be determined by the practical construction and location of the plat upon the grounds.

6. There is another branch of this case. The complaint alleges, in effect, that the city has jurisdiction over the entire surface of the lake; that the defendants have placed stones, earth, and other materials in the waters of the lake, not only within the limits of the street, but outside of, and beyond the limits of, the street, even to the distance of 60 or 70 feet from the south line of that street,—and prays an injunction to restrain the defendants from so filling in the lake. The several answers allege, and the court found, in effect, that such jurisdiction of the city over the lake was for limited and special purposes only, but not for any of the purposes set forth in the complaint. So far as the right of the city to work and prepare the street for travel, for the whole width thereof, even where the shore of the lake may be within the limits of the street, enough has already been said. But the question recurs as to whether the city may properly, in this action, restrain the defendants from so filling in the lake outside and beyond the limits of the street. The provisions of the charter, cited in the brief of counsel, give the city power to enact ordinances for the benefit of trade, commerce, and health, and to provide for the abatement and removal of nuisances thereunder, and "generally to take such other measures for the public health as shall be deemed proper." Such police regulations may well be conceded, but they do not authorize the city to restrain the filling in of the lake in question, outside of the limits of the street. Under the repeated decisions of this court, there can be no question but what the title to the bed of the lake was and is in the state. But such of the defendants as own lots between the shore of the lake and the south line of the street have the rights of riparian owners on the shore of the lake. Such rights include the right of each to construct in front of his land, in shoal water, proper wharves, piers, and booms in aid of navigation, without obstructing it, far enough to reach water actually navigable for such boats as are in use or appropriate to the lake. Cohn v. Wausau Boom Co. 47 Wis. 332; J. S. Keator Lumber Co. v. St Croix Boom Corp. 72 Wis. 82; Northern Pine Land Co. v. Bigelow, 84 Wis. 163, 164, 21 L. R. A. 776; Priene v. Wisconsin State Land & Improv. Co. 93 Wis. 547, 83 L. R. A. 645, and cases there cited. Such right, however, is a private right, and is subordinate to the public right to navigate the lake, and may be regulated or prohibited by law. Ibid. Obviously, the city has no proprietary or corporate interest in the lake, nor the shore of the lake, outside of the limits of the street. Nor does it appear that the acts complained of are such as to affect the health of anyone. We are clearly of the opinion that the city has no such interest or right in the lake or the waters thereof, outside of the limits of the street, as to enjoin the defendants from the acts complained of. Milwaukee v. Milwaukee & B. R. Co 7 Wis. 85; Sheboygan v. Sheboygan & F. du L. R. Co. 21 Wis. 668; Racine v. Crotzenberg, 61 Wis. 481, 50 Am. Rep. 149; Janessville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 288, 8 L. R. A. 808. In such a case the right of the city to remove such a purpresture or public nuisance is no greater than that of an individual, and this court has expressly held that an individual could not remove the same. Larson v. Furlong, 50 Wis. 681. In England such purpresture or public nuisance was removable or abatable only by suit of the Crown, having superintendence and control over public rights, at the instance of the attorney general. Gould, Waters, §§ 21, 167. In this country such right of action is in the state. Id. §§ 98, 168. Thus, in People v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 896, 84 Am. Dec. 851, it was held that "the remedy to prevent the erection of a purpresture and nuisance in a bay or navigable river is by injunction at the suit of the attorney general." See also People v. Davidson, 80 Cal. 879. We must hold that the court properly refused to enjoin the defendants from filling in the lake outside of the limits of the street, and that as to that branch of the case the complaint was properly dismissed.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to enter judgment in accordance with this opinion. In view of the fact that the findings of the trial court are sustained in part and set aside in part, costs and disbursements are allowed in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants, except Kerns, for the expense of printing the case, and for the fees of the clerk of this court; but no other costs or expenses are allowed to either party.

Josephine M. KASTEN, Respt.,
v.

INTERSTATE CASUALTY COMPANY OF NEW YORK, Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

Under a policy insuring a person against bodily injury sustained by external, violent, and accidental means, with a provision for payment to a beneficiary or beneficiaries in case of death from such injuries within ninety days therefrom, independently of all other causes, and with a condition that the liability of the assurer shall not extend to injuries, fatal or otherwise, resulting wholly or in part from poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled;—held, that death caused by blood poisoning from the effects of the absorption into the system of septic poison evolved by the propagation of germs in cotton inserted by a dentist in wounds caused by the removal of teeth from the mouth of the deceased, to stop hemorrhage, is within the condition, and creates no liability under the policy.

Headnote by MARSHALL, J.

NOTE.—As to whether accident or disease was the cause of death, see note to Fidelity & C. Co. v. Johnson (Miss.) 80 L. R. A. 206; also Modern Woodmen Aocl. Asso. v. Shryock (Neb.) 39 L. R. A. 820; Western Commercial Travelers' Asso. v. Smith (C. C. App. 8th C.) post, 653.
40 L. R. A.

(March 22, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of accident insurance. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action to recover on a $2,000 policy of accident and life insurance, which insured Fred A. Kasten against bodily injury sustained through external, violent, and accidental means, and provided that in case of death from such injuries within ninety days therefrom, independently of all other causes, the company should pay the sum of $2,000 to his wife, Josephine M. Kasten, if surviving, otherwise to his legal representatives, subject, however, to several conditions, among which was the following: "This insurance does not cover . . . injuries, fatal or otherwise, resulting wholly or in part from poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled." The cause of death was alleged to be the accidental injection of septic matter into a wound caused by the extraction of two teeth, at the time they were extracted. At the commencement of the trial there was a demurrer ore tenus to the complaint, made, overruled, and the ruling duly excepted to. The evidence tended to show that the deceased, while suffering from some serious derangement of his system, which manifested itself, among other ways, by severe toothache, had two of his teeth extracted by a dentist; that there was a diseased condition of the membrane surrounding some of the teeth, and a general foul condition of the mouth; that the teeth were extracted in the usual way, but it caused a rupture of the upper maxillary artery, or a branch of it, from which a violent hemorrhage ensued, and to stop that the dentist plugged the cavities with cotton; that thereafter blood poisoning ensued from the absorption into the system of some chemical poison supposed to have been caused by the propagation of disease germs in the cotton, the seat of the affection being where the teeth were extracted. The blood poisoning progressed to a fatal determination. At the close of the evidence both sides moved for the direction of a verdict. Defendant's motion was denied and plaintiff's granted. Judgment was entered accordingly and defendant appealed.

Messrs. Winkler, Flanders, Smith, Bottum, & Vilas, for appellant:

In construing a policy of insurance, some particular operation, effect, and meaning should be assigned to each sentence, phrase, and word used, and when this may fairly and properly be done, no part of the language used can be rejected as superfluous or unmeaning.

Merrill v. Travelers Ins. Co. 91 Wis. 329.

The injury in this case certainly resulted from poison or something accidentally or otherwise absorbed.

Bacon v. United States Mut. Acci. Assn. 123 N. Y. 304, 4 L. R. A. 617.

Where a policy of insurance in an accident insurance company provides that its benefits shall not extend to death or injury caused "by the taking of poison," an involuntary taking of poison by mistake, causing death, is within said provision of the policy.

Pollock v. United States Mut. Acci. Assn. 102 Pa. 230, 48 Am. Rep. 204; Cole v. Accident Ins. Co. 61 L. T. N. S. 227.

A disease aggravated and made fatal by an accident cannot be a ground for recovery.

Freeman v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Assn. 156 Mass. 851, 17 L. R. A. 753; McCarthy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 8 Biss. 362; Anderson v. Scottish Acci. Ins. Co. 27 Scot. L. R. 20; McKechnie v. Scottish Acci. Ins. Co. 17 Sess. Cas. (Scotland) 6; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 817.

Messrs. La Boule & Hunt, for respondent:

The unintentional and accidental introduction of the septic matter and its confinement in the cotton was an accident within the meaning of the policy.

The insertion into a wound of cotton containing matter which will cause blood poisoning is as much an accident as would be the giving by a physician to his patient of a deadly poison supposing it to be some harmless drug.

In all cases, a policy must be liberally construed in favor of the insured, so as not to defeat without a plain necessity his claim to the indemnity which in making the insurance it was his object to secure. When the words are, without violence, susceptible of two interpretations, that which will sustain his claim and cover the loss must in preference be adopted.

May, Ins. 3d ed. § 175.

The words "excepting death by poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled," mean "poison or anything, accidentally or otherwise, consciously and by an act of volition, drawn into the system by inspiration," and do not apply to a case of accidental asphyxiation while the insured is asleep.

Fidelity & C. Co. v. Waterman, 161 Ill. 632, 32 L. R. A. 654.

It is a question for the jury whether an injury from the sting of a venomous insect is an injury from poison, the court making a distinction between venom and poison.

Preferred Mut. Acci. Assn. v. Beidelman, 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 481; Pickett v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 144 Pa. 79, 13 L. R. A. 661.

Where there is an unusual or unforeseen occurrence during the performance of a voluntary act, which unforeseen occurrence results in injury, even though the injury is a disease, a recovery should be had under policies insuring against injuries received through external, violent, and accidental means.

United States Mut. Acci. Assn. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60; Bailey v. Interstate Casualty Co. 8 App. Div. 127; North Ameri- 40 L. R. A.

can Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212; Freeman v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Assn. 156 Mass. 351, 17 L. R. A. 753; McCarthy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 8 Biss. 362; Sinclair v. Maritime Pass. Assur. Co. 3 El. & El. 478; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 293.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The evidence goes no further than the complaint. It may be said to establish the fact of death as alleged, that is, that it was produced by the accidental planting of septic matter in the mouth of the deceased at or about the time his teeth were extracted. While the inference from the allegations of the complaint is that the introduction of the foreign substance, which subsequently caused death, into the person of the deceased, was accidental, it was nevertheless by an act to which he consented. So the rulings on the demurrer to the complaint and the motions for the direction of a verdict, all present the same question, which is, Admitting everything alleged, is plaintiff entitled to recover? Such being the case, the rulings will be considered together.

The theory upon which the complaint was sustained and the verdict directed in respondent's favor, and upon which her counsel seek to sustain such rulings, defeats them if the plain wording of the contract is to be given effect according to the obvious intention of the parties thereto. It is contended that the septic matter was accidentally introduced into the wound caused by the extraction of the teeth, by its being in the cotton with which the wound was plugged to stop the hemorrhage; that it was absorbed from the cotton into the surrounding parts; that death was the result; and that because the poisonous substance was thus accidentally planted, the calls of the policy for an injury caused by external, violent, and accidental means were all satisfied. Whether that be so or not, and if so, whether it can be said from the evidence, as a matter of law, that death ensued from the injury independently of all other causes, so as to satisfy the terms of the policy in that regard, are not by any means free from difficulty, but they are questions unnecessary to decide, because the injury having been admittedly caused by something accidentally taken, administered, or absorbed, and death caused in whole or in part from such circumstances, by the plain language of the policy the verdict should have been directed in favor of the defendant instead of the plaintiff.

While the word "poison," as used in the policy, may be construed to mean liquids commonly known as poisons, it is followed by the words "or anything," which clearly indicates that the intent was to include under the entire term everything of a poisonous nature. While it is true that, where the meaning of words in an insurance contract is in doubt, courts are to lean to that reasonable construction most favorable to the assured, they can go no further without making contracts for the parties which they did not intend to make. If words are plain, courts must give effect to them accordingly, or contractual obligations will be subject to variations and violations to suit the exigencies of particular cases. Here, in order to sustain a recovery, the court is asked, after having successfully passed difficulties in the way of holding that the death of the assured was caused solely by external, violent, and accidental means, in the face of evidence that the septic poison was voluntarily, though accidentally, planted in the system of the deceased, to pass the barrier by which the defendant excepted from the contract death caused in whole or in part by the administration or absorption, accidentally or otherwise, of poison or any other substance. No precedent to which we have been referred by counsel, or which we have been able to discover, warrants a construction of the contract of insurance that will enable the court to do that. Numerous cases may be found to the effect that the clause excepting death caused by inhaling gas, accidentally or otherwise, only covers cases of voluntary conscious inhalation. Such are Fidelity & C. Co. v. Waterman, 161 Ill. 682, 32 L. R. A. 654; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Dunlap, 160 Ill. 642; Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 3 L. R. A. 448; Menneiley v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 148 N. Y. 596, 31 L. R. A. 686; and Pickett v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 144 Pa. 79, 13 L. R. A. 661 but they do not apply to this case. Here there was not that absence of volition and consciousness that were the turning circumstances of those cases. The rule itself is by no means free from criticism, nor has it passed without criticism from respectable courts. Richardson v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 843. Certainly, no good reason can be given for extending it to cases of accidental taking or absorption of poisonous substances into the system through the voluntary use, for a remedial purpose, of some other substance. In the instances cited the word "inhaled" and the word "take," in view of other language used in the contract, were easily construed to contemplate voluntary conscious action, not in the sense that the victim should know the precise nature of what he was taking or inhaling, or its effect on his system, but that the thing taken should be by his act or permission. Here the cotton was placed in the mouth of the deceased by his permission. True, the fact that it contained the germs which propagated and evolved the poison which was absorbed into the blood with fatal effects was unknown and accidental: but that was within the express terms of the exception under consideration. In Early v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 71 N. W. 500, a very recent case, the supreme court of Michigan reached the same conclusion at which we have arrived, and to the same effect is Westmoreland v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. 75 Fed. Rep. 244, where chloroform was administered, from the effects of which, and some other cause, death ensued; and it was held that, as the chloroform would not alone have caused death, the accidental concurrence of some other unknown cause did not make a cause of action. Here the cotton alone would not have produced death. It was properly used, but on account of its containing the poisonous germs not known to exist in it, they were voluntarily, though accidentally, introduced into the system of the deceased, and the poison evolved by their propagation was thereby carried into the circulation, corrupting the blood and causing death. That is one of the very things most carefully guarded against by the words of the insurance contract.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings according to law.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

WESTERN COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS' ASSOCIATION, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Sarah I. SMITH.

(56 U. S. App. 396, 85 Fed. Rep. 401.)

1. No notice of an accident or injury causing death need be given by the beneficiary of the death loss until the death occurs, where the policy provides for immediate notice "in the event of any accident or injury for which claim shall be made, . . . or in case of death resulting therefrom," as this provides for two notices for different claims, one of injury not resulting in death, and the other of death.
2. An abrasion of the skin of a toe, unexpectedly caused, without design, by unforeseen, unusual, and unexpected friction in the act of wearing a new shoe, is an accidental injury, within the meaning of an insurance policy.

NOTE.—On the question whether death is due to accident or disease, see preceding case of Kasten v. Interstate Casualty Co. (Wis.) ante, 651, and references in footnote thereto.

40 L. R. A.

3. Blood poisoning caused by an accident, and which is a mere link in the chain of causation between the accident and the death which it produces, is not an intervening and independent cause of death which will prevent liability on insurance against accident.

(February 14, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of an accident insurance certificate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Sanborn and Thayer, Circuit Judges, and Philips, District Judge.

Messrs. Judson & Taussig and Louis R. Tatum, for plaintiff in error:

The conclusiveness attached to the special finding as to the verdict of a jury extends only to the finding of facts. It does not attach to the conclusions of law and the court's deductions from the special findings of fact, though the findings of fact and conclusions and deductions therefrom may be filed together as in the case at bar.

Norris v. Jackson, 9 Wall. 125, 19 L. ed. 608; Jennison v. Leonard, 21 Wall. 302, 22 L. ed. 539; Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 688, 26 L. ed. 526; Quinn v. Dimond, 44 U. S. App. 469, 72 Fed. Rep. 993, 19 C. C. A. 337; United States v. Harris, 46 U. S. App. 653, 77 Fed. Rep. 821, 23 C. C. A. 488; Wesson v. Saline County, 34 U. S. App. 680, 73 Fed. Rep. 917, 20 C. C. A. 227; Sneed v. Sabinol Min. & Mill. Co. 34 U. S. App. 688, 73 Fed. Rep. 925, 20 C. C. A. 230; 2 Thomp. Trials, §§ 2658, 2661.

Where the facts are not in dispute, the reasonableness of a notice in respect of time is a question of law for the court.

Earnshaw v. United States, 146 U. S. 60, 36 L. ed. 887; Brown v. Kimmel, 67 Mo. 430; Powell v. Pacific R. Co. 65 Mo. 658; Burger v. Burger, 34 Mo. App. 153.

The finding of facts is that neither Freeman O. Smith during his lifetime, nor plaintiff, gave to the defendant any notice of the accident to the deceased prior to his death.

The finding goes on to say that due notice of the death and of plaintiff's claim was given within a reasonable time after death, and the court finds in effect that this notice was a sufficient compliance with the notice of accident required by the contract.

But these findings were not of facts, but of the court's legal conclusions from the facts specially found. Where the facts are undisputed it becomes a question of law for the court to determine whether a notice in point of time was sufficient.

Earnshaw v. United States, 146 U. S. 60, 36 L. ed. 887.

But in the case at bar, it is not a mere question of reasonableness of time of a notice, but it is conceded that no notice whatever was served.

These findings of the court are none the less questions of law, though included by the court in, and called, a special finding of facts.

Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 688, 26 L. ed. 526.

Notice was a condition precedent of liability.

McFarland v. United States Mut. Acci. Assn. 124 Mo. 204; McCullough v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 113 Mo. 606; Williams v. Preferred Mut. Acci. Assn. 91 Ga. 698; Standard Life Acci. Ins. Co. v. Strong, 13 Ind. App. 315; Merrill v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 91 Wis. 329; Railway Pass. Assur. Co. v. Burwell, 44 Ind. 460; Gamble v. Accident Assur. Co. Ir. Rep. 4 C. L. 204; Cusley v. National Employers' Acci. & General Assur. Assn. 1 Cal. & E. 597; Cooke, Life Ins. p. 211; Kentzler v. American Mut. Acci. Assn. 88 Wis. 589; North America Ins. Co. v. Brim, 111 Ind. 281; Whitehurst v. North Carolina Mut. Ins. Co. 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 433, 78 Am. Dec. 246; Trask v. State F. & M. Ins. Co. 29 Pa. 198, 72 Am. Dec. 622; Kimball v. Howard F. Ins. Co. 8 Gray. 33.

The finding of the court that the death was caused by external, violent, and accidental means is simply the court's deduction or conclusion that the death caused by the specific facts found was the result of such external, violent, and accidental means. As the burden rested upon the plaintiff in the court below to establish death by accident, it is to be assumed that the special finding contains all the findings necessary to recovery. The silence of a special finding as to a fact is equivalent to a finding against the party who has the burden of establishing proof as to such fact.

United States v. Harris, 46 U. S. App. 653, 77 Fed. Rep. 821, 23 C. C. A. 488; Sneed v. Sabinol Min. & Mill. Co. 34 U. S. App. 688, 73 Fed. Rep. 925, 20 C. C. A. 230.

The term "accident" in its application to insurance policies has been defined as an injury which happens by reason of some violence, casualty, or vis major, to the insured without his design or consent or voluntary co-operation.

See 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 87.

The accident must be the approximate, and not the remote, cause of the injury or death. That which merely brings into activity a dormant disease is not an accident.

Sinclair v. Maritime Pass. Assur. Co. 3 El. & El. 478.

Disease produced by the action of a known cause cannot be considered as accidental.

Doxter v. Fidelity & C. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 446, 13 L. R. A. 114; Bacon v. United States Mut. Acci. Assn. 123 N. Y. 804, 9 L. R. A. 617; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Selden, 42 U. S. App. 253, 78 Fed. Rep. 285, 24 C. C. A. 92; McCarthy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 8 Biss. 363; Clidars v. Scottish Acci. Ins. Co. 29 Scot. L. Rep. 308; United States Mut. Acci. Assn. v. Barry, 191 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60.

Messrs. S. L. Swarts, E. M. Merriman, and George H. Sanders for defendant in error.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The Western Commercial Travelers' Association, the plaintiff in error, has sued out a writ of error to reverse a judgment against it upon a certificate of insurance against accident which it issued to Freeman O. Smith, one of its members, for the benefit of Sarah I. Smith, the defendant in error. A jury was waived, the court tried the case and made a special finding of the facts, and the error assigned is that the facts found do not support the judgment (1) because they show that immediate notice of the accident or injury was not given to the association, as required by the policy, and (2) because they fail to show that the death of the member was produced "by bodily injuries effected by external, violent, and accidental means."

These are the facts relative to the two questions thus raised, which appear from the pleadings and the findings: The certificate upon which the suit is based secured to the member, Freeman O. Smith, indemnity in various amounts for total disability, for the loss of an arm or a leg, or one arm and one leg, and for the loss of both arms or both legs, by accident; and it also secured to his beneficiary, the defendant in error, indemnity for his death produced "by bodily injuries effected by external, violent, and accidental means" alone. It contained this provision: "In the event of any accident or injury for which any claim shall be made under this certificate, or in case of death resulting therefrom, immediate notices shall be given in writing, addressed to the secretary, at St. Louis, Missouri, stating the full name and address of the member, number of certificate, occupation, and name and address of the attending physician, with full particulars of the accident or injury, and failure to give such notice shall invalidate all claim under the certificate; and unless direct and affirmative proof of the death or duration of total disability shall be furnished the association within ninety (90) days from the happening of such accident, as per forms of proof furnished, and questions prepared on same by the board of directors of the association, then all claims under this certificate shall be waived and forfeited to the association."

In the latter part of August, 1895, while this certificate was in force, Freeman O. Smith, who was a strong and healthy man, commenced wearing a pair of new shoes. About September 6, 1895, the friction of one of the shoes against one of his feet, unexpectedly and without design on his part, produced an abrasion of the skin of one of his toes. He gave the abrasion reasonable attention, but it nevertheless caused blood poisoning about September 26, 1895, which resulted in his death on October 3, 1895. Neither the deceased nor the defendant in error gave any notice of this accident or injury to the association before his death, but within a reasonable time thereafter due notice thereof and of her claim under the certificate was given to the association by the defendant in error.

The agreement of the parties was that the failure to give the notice required by this certificate should invalidate all claim under it, and there can be no question but that the service of this notice was a condition precedent to the enforcement of any such claim. St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Kyle, 11 Mo. 278, 289, 49 Am. Dec. 74; McCullough v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 113 Mo. 606; McFarland v. United States Mut. Acci. Assn. 124 Mo. 204. The real question here is, therefore, What was the notice exacted of the beneficiary by the contract, and when was it to be given? The agreement was that, "in the event of any accident or injury for which any claim shall be made under this certificate, or in case of death resulting therefrom, immediate notice shall be given." In the interpretation of this provision, the fact must be borne in mind that all claims under this contract for accidents and injuries which do not result in death accrue to the member himself. The beneficiary of the death loss has no interest in them. It is only in a case in which death results from an accident or injury that any claim in favor of the defendant in error arises. In the nature of things, she cannot know whether she will have a claim until the member whose life is insured for her benefit is dead. Must she give notice of the accident or injury on account of which her claim may arise before she knows whether or not it will ever come into existence? A provision which exacts such a notice should be plain, clear, and unambiguous. Forfeitures are not favored in the law, and a strained and unnatural construction must not be given to this contract in order to impose one here. A stipulation could have easily been drawn which would have plainly imposed upon this beneficiary the duty of giving such a notice. If this contract had simply omitted the words, "or in case of death resulting therefrom," and had provided that, "in the event of any accident or injury for which any claim shall be made under this certificate, notice of such accident or injury shall be given immediately after it happens," there would have been no doubt that the beneficiary was required to notify the association of the accident as soon as it occurred. If it had required only that, "in case of death resulting from any accident or injury for which any claim shall be made under this certificate, immediate notice shall be given," it would have been equally certain that she was not required to give any notice until the death had supervened. As it stands, it seems to us to be intended to provide two different classes of notices for the two classes of claims,—one an immediate notice of the accident or injury which does not result in death, the other an immediate notice of the death which results from such an accident or injury, to be given by the beneficiary as soon as it occurs. If this is not the correct construction of the provision, the words, "or in case of death resulting therefrom," are without significance or effect, because the stipulation, without those words, would require the beneficiary of a death loss to give notice of the accident or injury immediately after it occurred.

There is no better canon for the interpretation of contracts than the rule that the court may put itself in the place of the parties to the agreement at the time it was made, and may then consider how its terms affected its subject-matter, and ascertain what those who made it intended thereby. Accumulator Co. v. Dubuque Street R. Co. 27 U. S. App. 364, 372, 64 Fed. Rep. 70, 74, 12 C. C. A. 37, 41, 42; Westervelt v. Mohrenstecher, 40 U. S. App. 221, 227, 228, 76 Fed. Rep. 118, 121, 22 C. C. A. 93, 95, and 84 L. R. A. 477; Rockefeller v. Merritt, 40 U. S. App. 666, 675, 76 Fed. Rep. 909, 915, 22 C. C. A. 608, 613, 614, 35 L. R. A. 638; Prentice v. Duluth Storage & F. Co. 19 U. S. App. 100, 110, 58 Fed. Rep. 437, 443, 7 C. C. A. 298, 298. When this is done, it can hardly be successfully maintained that the parties to this certificate intended to require the beneficiary of a loss by death under it to give notice of the accident or injury before the death occurred and before her claim arose. When the provision, "in the event of any accident or injury for which any claim shall be made under this certificate, or in case of death resulting therefrom, immediate notice shall be given," is read in the light of the events to which it refers, and of the relation of the parties to the contract to each other, its natural and obvious meaning is that, in the event of any accident or injury which shall not result in death, immediate notice of such accident or injury shall be given, or, in the case of death resulting from any such accident or injury, immediate notice of such death shall be given, because in the one case it is the injury, and in the other it is the death, which conditions the existence of the claim. The conclusion is that this certificate required no notice of the accident or injury to be given to the association by the beneficiary of the death loss before the death occurred, and the due notice which the court finds she gave immediately after death was a sufficient compliance with this stipulation of the agreement.

It is earnestly contended, however, that the death was not caused by bodily injuries effected by external, violent, and accidental means (1) because the disease of blood poisoning was the cause, and the abrasion of the skin of the toe was only the occasion, the locality in which the disease first appeared; and (2) because the abrasion of the skin was not an accident, but was made in the ordinary course of things. The contract does not differ, in respect to the subject presented by this proposition, from those which have been repeatedly considered by this court, and we state its legal effect briefly, because the reasons and authorities in support of our views here have been frequently set forth in the opinions of this court which are cited below.

If the death was caused by a disease, without any bodily injury inflicted by external, violent, and accidental means, as in the case of the malignant pustule (Bacon v. United States Mut. Acci. Assn., 123 N. Y. 304, 9 L. R. A. 617), and as in the case of sunstroke (Sinclair v. Maritime Pass. Assur. Co. 3 El. & El. 478; Dozier v. Fidelity & C. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 446, 13 L. R. A. 114), the association was free from liability by the express terms of the certificate. If the deceased suffered an accident, but at the time he sustained it he was already suffering from a disease or bodily infirmity, and if the accident would not have caused his death if he had not been affected by the disease or infirmity, but he died because the accident aggravated the disease, or the disease aggravated the effects of the accident, as in the case of the insured who was subject to such a bodily infirmity that a short run, followed by stooping, which would not have injured a healthy man, produced apoplexy (Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Selden, 42 U. S. App. 253, 78 Fed. Rep. 285, 24 C. C. A. 92), the association was exempt from liability, because the death was caused partly by disease and partly by accident. If the death was caused by bodily injuries effected by external, violent, and accidental means alone, the association was liable to pay the promised indemnity. If the death was caused by a disease which was not the result of any bodily infirmity or disease in existence at the time of the accident, but which was itself caused by the external, violent, and accidental means which produced the bodily injury, the association was equally liable to pay the indemnity. In such a case, the disease is an effect of the accident, the incidental means produced and used by the original moving cause to bring about its fatal effect, a mere link in the chain of causation between the accident and the death, and the death is attributable, not to the disease, but to the causa causans, to the accident alone. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547, 560, 561, 65 Fed. Rep. 178, 186, 12 C. C. A. 544, 552, 27 L. R. A. 629; Union P. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 12 U. S. App. 541, 550, 56 Fed. Rep. 988, 994; 6 C. C. A. 205, 210; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 475, 24 L. ed. 256, 259; National Masonic Acci. Assn. v. Shryock, 36 U. S. App. 653, 663, 73 Fed. Rep. 774, 776, 20 C. C. A. 8, 5.

Now, the finding of the facts made by the 40 L. R. A.

trial court is conclusive in this case, and the only question here presented is whether those facts warrant the judgment below. That court has found that the deceased was an exceptionally strong and healthy man when the abrasion in question was produced. It has found that the wearing of the new shoe produced the abrasion on September 6, 1895, that this abrasion was the cause of blood poisoning on September 26, 1895, and that the blood poisoning produced the death on October 3, 1895. The question whether the death was produced by the abrasion or by the disease is therefore extracted from this case. There is no ground for the contention that the disease of blood poisoning was an intervening and independent cause of the death, because the finding of the court below is that that disease was a mere link in the chain of causation between the abrasion which produced it and the death which it produced.

The only question remaining, therefore, is whether or not the abrasion of the skin of the toe was produced by accidental means. If it was, the death was so produced; and if it was not, there was no accident, and consequently no cause of action. The contract was that the association would pay the promised indemnity for any death caused "by bodily injuries effected by external, violent, and accidental means." There is no claim that the friction of the shoe which caused the abrasion was not external and violent. The contention is that it was not accidental. The significance of this word "accidental" is best perceived by a consideration of the relation of causes to their effects. The word is descriptive of means which produce effects which are not their natural and probable consequences. The natural consequence of means used is the consequence which ordinarily follows from their use,—the result which may be reasonably anticipated from their use, and which ought to be expected. The probable consequence of the use of given means is the consequence which is more likely to follow from their use than it is to fail to follow. An effect which is the natural and probable consequence of an act or course of action is not an accident, nor is it produced by accidental means. It is either the result of actual design, or it falls under the maxim that every man must be held to intend the natural and probable consequence of his deeds. On the other hand, an effect which is not the natural or probable consequence of the means which produced it, an effect which does not ordinarily follow and cannot be reasonably anticipated from the use of those means, an effect which the actor did not intend to produce and which he cannot be charged with the design of producing, under the maxim to which we have adverted is produced by accidental means. It is produced by means which were neither designed nor calculated to cause it. Such an effect is not the result of design, cannot be reasonably anticipated, is unexpected, and is produced by an unusual combination of fortuitous circumstances; in other words, it is produced by accidental means. Chicago, & P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 12 U. S. App. 381, 386, 387, 389, 5 C. C. A. 347, 350, 351, 353, 55 Fed. Rep. 949, 952, 953, 955, 20 L. R. A. 592.

Was the abrasion of the skin of the toe of the deceased the natural and probable consequence of wearing new shoes? It must be conceded that new shoes are not ordinarily worn with the design of causing abrasions of the skin of the feet, and the trial court has found that the abrasion upon the toe of the deceased was produced unexpectedly and without any design on his part to cause it. An abrasion of the skin, certainly, is not the probable consequence of the use of new shoes; for it cannot be said to follow such use more frequently than it fails to follow it. Nor can such an abrasion be said to be the natural consequence of wearing such shoes,—the consequence which ordinarily follows, or which might be reasonably anticipated. How, then, can it fail to be the chance result of accidental means,—means not designed or calculated to produce it? If the deceased, without design, had slipped, and caused an abrasion of his skin, as he was walking down the street, or had punctured the skin of his foot by stepping on a nail in his room, or had pierced it with a nail in his shoe as he was drawing it upon his foot, there could have been no doubt that these injuries were produced by accidental means; and it is difficult to understand why an abrasion of the skin, produced unexpectedly and without design by friction caused by wearing a new shoe, does not fall within the same category.

In McCarthy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 8 Biss. 362, it is held that death from the rupture of a blood vessel caused by swinging Indian clubs for exercise may be a death from bodily injury caused by accidental means. In Martin v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 1 Fost. & F. 505, a total disability caused by straining the back while lifting a heavy burden was declared to be a disability produced by accident. In North American L. & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 48, 51, 8 Am. Rep. 212, the court said that an accident is "an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; an event which proceeds from an unknown cause, or is an unusual effect of a known cause, and therefore not expected; chance; casualty; contingency."—and held that a strain of the abdominal muscles produced by pitching hay, which caused an inflammation that resulted in death, was an accident. Death by drowning, by involuntarily inhaling illuminating gas, or by fright, is death by accidental means. Trew v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 6 Hurlst. & N. 839; Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410; Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 8 L. R. A. 443; McGlinchey v. Fidelity & C. Co. 80 Me. 251. In Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547, 65 Fed. Rep. 178, 12 C. C. A. 544, 27 L. R. A. 629, this court affirmed a judgment based upon a verdict that a death caused by lockjaw, which was produced by a shot wound unexpectedly inflicted upon himself by the deceased, without design, was a death caused by bodily injury produced by accidental means alone. In United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Barry, 181 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, three persons jumped from the same platform at the same time and place. Two of them alighted in safety, while the third suffered a stricture of the duodenum which produced a disease which caused his death. The supreme court affirmed a judgment founded upon a verdict that his death was the result of bodily injuries effected through external, violent, and accidental means, and approved an instruction to the jury that "the term 'accidental' was used in the policy in its ordinary, popular sense, as meaning 'happening by chance; unexpectedly taking place; not according to the usual course of things; or not as expected;' that, if a result is such as follows from ordinary means voluntarily employed in a not unusual or unexpected way it cannot be called a result effected by accidental means; but that if, in the act which precedes the injury, something unforeseen, unexpected, unusual occurs, which produces the injury, then the injury has resulted through accidental means."

We are unable to distinguish the case at bar from those to which we have referred, and the case last cited is of controlling authority in this court. The abrasion of the skin of the toe of the deceased was unexpectedly caused, without design on his part, by unforeseen, unusual, and unexpected friction in the act of wearing the shoe, which preceded the injury. It was not the natural or probable consequence of that act, and it was, therefore produced by accidental means.

The judgment below must be affirmed, with costs; and it is so ordered.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

William A. TURNER

v.

REVERE WATER COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Mass.....)

A regulation of a water company by which it refuses to turn on water for a building until unpaid rates of previous owners or tenants are paid is unreasonable and invalid, unless authorized by statute.

(May 21, 1898.)

NOTE.—As to regulations concerning the supply of water to a consumer, see Ladd v. Boston (Mass.) 40 L. R. A. 371, and references in footnote thereto.
40 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Superior Court for Suffolk County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to compel defendant to furnish plaintiff with water upon premises from which the water had been turned off for failure of former occupants to pay the water tax. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Benjamin N. Johnson, for appellant:

There is no general statutory requirement or prohibition which imposes the duty upon the defendant to furnish water to any person or classes of persons.

There is no provision in the defendant's charter which requires it to supply water within the territory in question upon any specific terms or conditions.

Acts 1882, chap. 142, § 4.

The defendant still had the right to conduct its business under fit and reasonable rules and regulations, and was only bound to furnish water when requested in a reasonable way, and in accordance with such rules and regulations.

Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 29 L. R. A. 376; Shepard v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479; Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 556, 10 L. R. A. 122.

Water companies may make reasonable rules for the government of their customers in the use of the water supply, and enforce the same by stopping their supply as a penalty for the violation thereof. In such cases the company is not limited to an action for damages.

29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 18, and cases cited; Shepard v. Citizens' Water Co. 90 Cal. 635; Shiras v. Ewing, 48 Kan. 170.

Regarding the situation of the parties, it is more reasonable to require that one proposing to purchase, lease, or otherwise hire a building, house, or other tenement should make inquiry as to the practicability of obtaining a supply of water therefor, and as to the terms and conditions on which such supply may be secured, than that the municipality or corporation furnishing the supply should be compelled to keep itself informed of the shifting ownerships and tenancies of all the habitations and other buildings within its territory.

Girard L. Ins. Co. v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. 398; Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 556, 10 L. R. A. 122; Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 29 L. R. A. 376; Com., Roman Catholic High School Trustees, v. Philadelphia, 182 Pa. 288; Atlanta v. Burton, 90 Ga. 486; Brumm's Appeal (Pa.) 12 Atl. 855.

Mr. C. R. Morse, for appellee:

The act under which the defendant company was organized does not give any right or lien to said company against any estate for water furnished and not paid for, so as to deprive a subsequent owner, tenant, or occupant of said premises of the use of said water, who may be willing to comply with said rules and regulations, without first paying for the water used and unpaid for by the former occupant.

Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 556, 10 L. R. A. 122; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 821 and notes; Rockland Water Co. v. Adams, 84 Me. 472.

Water rates are not to be collected in the exercise of the taxing power, unless made so by some special authority of law, but the obligation to pay for the use of water rests upon either a special or implied contract on the part of the consumer to make compensation for water which he has applied for and received, on the terms and conditions made public.

Young v. Boston, 104 Mass. 95; Atlanta v. Burton, 90 Ga. 486; Girard L. Ins. Co. v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. 398; Com., Roman Catholic High School Trustees, v. Philadelphia, 182 Pa. 288; Shepard v. Citizens' Water Co. 90 Cal. 635.

40 L. R. A.

Lathrop, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On February 1, 1897, the plaintiff hired a dwelling house in Winthrop from Clarissa C. Doane, its owner. Two days later he applied to the defendant to have water turned on, and tendered the price charged from January 1, 1897, to January 1, 1898. The defendant refused to turn on the water until the amount due the defendant for water supplied to Mrs. Doane from January 1, 1896, to October 10, 1896, had been paid. In October, 1893, one Emmet J. Doane, the then owner of the house, made an application for water for the house, and paid the bills sent to him on July 1, 1894, and on July 1, 1895. On July 13, 1895, Emmet J. Doane conveyed the house to his mother, Clarissa C. Doane, who since that date has been the owner. The defendant received no notice of this conveyance until June 8, 1896. On July 1, 1896, the defendant sent a bill to Clarissa C. for water during the year 1896. The bill was not paid, and on July 17, 1896, the defendant sent notice to Clarissa that the water would be cut off unless the bill sent on July 1st should be paid immediately. On October 10, 1896, the water was shut off. The defendant refuses to turn on the water until the plaintiff pays the bills incurred by his landlord, because it has the following rule or regulation: "The rates for use of water shall be payable on the 1st day of July in each year. All charges for specific supplies, or for fractional parts of the year, shall be payable in advance, before the water is let on. In all cases of nonpayment of rates fifteen days after same are due, the water may be shut off without further notice, and not be again turned on until rates are paid and $1.50 additional for shutting off and letting on." The superior court entered a decree restraining the defendant from refusing or neglecting to furnish the plaintiff a suitable supply of water so long as he continues to pay the regular water rates, and complies with all other reasonable and usual regulations of the defendant in the future, except those relating to the payment of the water rates remaining unpaid of previous owners or tenants. The case is before us on appeal, and the principal question presented is whether, if the rule applies to a case like this, it is reasonable. The defendant was incorporated, under Stat. 1882, chap. 142, "for the purpose of furnishing the inhabitants of Revere with water for domestic and other purposes." By § 4 it was given the power to "establish and fix from time to time rates for the use of such water, and collect the same." By Stat. 1884, chap. 259, it was authorized to contract with the town of Winthrop to supply that town with water "for the extinguishment of fires and for other purposes as authorized by said act." It was also authorized to "distribute water through said town, and establish and collect rates therefor in like manner as by said act it is authorized to do in the town of Revere." The amendment of its charter by Stat. 1887, chap. 387, is immaterial to the case.

It is contended that the rule is a reasonable one, because similar rules have been established by ordinances in various cities of this commonwealth, and in a statute of Georgia granting a charter to the city of Atlanta, and that it has been decided to be reasonable in Pennsylvania. It is also argued that it is easy for a person hiring or buying a house to ascertain whether the debt of some former owner has been paid. Of course, it cannot be disputed that if the legislature gives a lien upon the land to a water or gas company for unpaid dues, or uses words equivalent to giving a lien, it has the right to do so, and there is nothing more to be said. In Atlanta v. Burton, 90 Ga. 486, the charter provided that the board of water commissioners shall have the power to "require the payment in advance for the use or rent of water furnished by them in or upon any building, place, or premises, and, in case prompt payments shall not be made, they may shut off the water from such building, place, or premises, and shall not be compelled again to supply said building, place, or premises with water until said arrears, with interest thereon, shall be fully paid." It was held that the commissioners might furnish water on credit; that the charter did not contemplate a personal credit, because water was not furnished to persons, but to buildings. "The charter did not contemplate nor intend that water should be furnished upon individual or personal credit, but that the supply should be made a charge upon the property to which the water was conveyed." In Girard L. Ice Co. v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. 393, the words of the ordinance were that, after the water was turned off, it "shall not again be supplied or furnished to the said premises except upon payment of all arrears of water rent and the sum of $2 for expenses incurred." The opinion of the court states that the validity of the ordinance was conceded. The only question was whether, as the defendant had not sooner cut off the water on rates not being paid, the plaintiff was obliged to pay three years' rates due from a former owner, instead of the rates for one year, of which it had made a tender. The case of Com. v. Roman Catholic High School Trustees, v. Philadelphia, 182 Pa. 288 (a gas case), simply considered the question as settled by the former case, and the opinion does not discuss it. In Brumm's Appeal (Pa.) 12 Atl. 855 (a water case), the charter expressly provided that the real estate to which the water was furnished should be bound by the water rates. The argument derived from foreign legislation, and ordinances of cities in other states, seems to us to be of little consequence in determining the question before us, as to the effect of the regulation in this case. It may be noted, however, that in New York it is expressly provided that a gas company cannot refuse to turn on gas because a former occupant of the premises has not paid for the gas consumed by him. N. Y. Stat. 1859, chap. 311, §§ 6, 9; 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 1896, pp. 1856, 1857. In England it has been held, under Stat. 10 & 11 Vict. chap. 17, that, if a tenant does not pay water rates, the water company may sever the connection between the house and the main pipes, and that, if a new tenant occupies the house, he has the right to have the water turned on, on reconnecting the pipes, but until he does so the water company is not liable to a penalty under the act for not supplying him with water. The remarks of Bramwell, L. J., on the point of not compelling the new tenant to pay an old debt, will be cited later. Waterworks Co. v. Wilkinson, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 410. Under 50 & 51 Vict. chap. 21, § 4, arrears of water rates, where the rent does not exceed £20, may be recovered in a personal action against a purchaser of land, but the water cannot be cut off. East London Waterworks Co. v. Kellerman [1892] 2 Q. B. 73.

So far as legislation is concerned in Massachusetts, the case of a gas company is covered. Pub. Stat. chap. 61, § 16, gives the company the right to "stop the gas from entering the premises" of a person neglecting to pay the amount due, and to enter the premises between certain hours, and remove the meter, etc. Nothing is said about making subsequent users liable for old debts. Stat. 1894, chap. 299, makes it unlawful for a gas company to refuse to supply gas for any building or premises "for the reason that a gas bill remains unpaid by any previous occupant of said building or premises; provided the person or persons applying for gas shall not be in arrears to such corporation for gas previously furnished to or for said building or premises, or to or for any other building or premises." So far as gas is concerned, the question is settled. As to water, there was no general legislation until after this action was brought. Stat. 1898, chap. 168, makes the same provision as to water that Stat. 1894, chap. 299, made as to gas. The statute is not retroactive, and the question before us must be decided on general principles. There is much in our special legislation to show that we should not hold that one man is obliged to pay the debt of another, or that a water rate is a charge upon the land. The charter of the defendant is one of the simpler forms. The one which is generally found, and which applies to most of the cities and towns of this commonwealth, after giving the right to regulate the price or rents for the use of water, contains this provision: "The occupant of any tenement shall be liable for the payment of the price or rent for the use of the water in such tenement; and the owner thereof shall be also liable. If, on being notified of such use, he does not object thereto." Stat. 1846, chap. 167, § 14 (Boston); Stat. 1863, chap. 168, § 18 (New Bedford); Stat. 1864, chap. 268, § 14 (Salem); Stat. 1865, chap. 158, § 9 (Cambridge); Stat. 1867, chap. 60, § 7 (Medford); Id. chap. 848, § 13 (Roxbury); Stat. 1869, chap. 462, § 12 (Lynn); Stat. 1871, chap. 307, § 8 (Woburn); Id. chap. 138, § 17 (Fall River); Stat. 1872, chap. 343, § 14 (Brookline); Id. chap. 188, § 9 (Concord and Lincoln); Id. chap. 62, § 9 (Holyoke); Id. chap. 79, § 11 (Lawrence); Id. chap. 844, § 14 (Newton); Id. chap. 845, § 10 (Springfield); Id. chap. 336, § 14 (West Roxbury); Id. chap. 837, § 11 (Waltham); Stat. 1878, chap. 274, § 7 (Lexington); Id. chap. 76, § 9 (Natick); Id. chap. 822, § 9 (Westfield); Stat. 1874, chap. 191, § 9 (Danvers); Id. chap. 256, § 9 (Marlboro); Id. chap. 125, § 10 (Newton); Stat. 1875, chap. 199, § 14 (Watertown); Stat. 1881, chap. 206, § 8 (Framingham); Stat. 1884, chap. 256, § 13 (Cambridge); Stat. 1887, chap. 416, § 11 (Malden). The following charters have the "occupant and owner" clause, but add that the water rates are "to be collected in an action of contract in the name of the city." Stat. 1891, chap. 848, § 9 (Haverhill); Id. chap. 401, § 13 (Quincy); Stat. 1894, chap. 187, § 12 (Stoneham); Stat. 1897, chap. 478, § 10 (Stoneham). The following charter provides that the notice of objection to the owner must be in writing: Stat. 1875, chap. 217, § 9 (Taunton). The following charters provide that the notice of objection from the owner must be in writing: Stat. 1876, chap. 98, § 9 (Clinton); Stat. 1881, chap. 174, § 9 (Weymouth). The following charter provides that both the notice to the owner and the objection from the owner must be in writing: Stat. 1875, chap. 158, § 6 (Rockport Water Company). The following charter provides: "The owner of any tenement shall be liable for the payment of the rent for the use of the water in such tenement, to be collected in an action of contract in the name of the city." Stat. 1892, chap. 384, § 12 (Chicopee). This must mean an action of contract, for it is simply a liability for rent; and in some charters the words are added, "to be collected in an action of contract in the name of the town." Our legislature has never authorized the making of an unpaid water rate a lien or charge upon the land. It has authorized holding the owner liable, after notice, in some instances, for the debt of a tenant; but in no instance has a tenant been held liable for the debt of an owner. If the authority to create a lien or charge is to be derived from the right to make rules, there would have been no necessity to insert the words above cited.

In the absence of legislation, can a regulation such as the one in question, if it imposes a lien on land, be considered a reasonable one? We are of opinion that this question must be answered in the negative. In Lumbard v. Stearns, 4 Cush. 60, it was declared by Chief Justice Shaw that a private water company, by accepting its charter, would abuse its franchise if it failed to furnish water, and that it was its duty to supply all who should apply for water on reasonable terms. See also Young v. Boston, 104 Mass. 95. The ordinance of the city of Lowell, which was before the court in Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 556, 10 L. R. A. 122, was much more explicit than the one before us. It provided that, in case the water was cut off for nonpayment of rates, it should not be let on, "either for the present or any subsequent occupant," except upon payment of the amount due. The point decided was that, after the city had received the money for a year's use of the water, it could not cut it off during the year because a former occupant had not paid his bill. There is no intimation in the opinion that a water rate constitutes a charge upon land, and the case goes upon the ground of contract. Indeed, it is said by Mr. Justice Knowlton, speaking of payments of rates: "It seems to be more consistent with the nature of the transactions to consider them as payments of the price of a commodity, sold under a general authority to provide for the public, and to sell upon request, in a reasonable way, to the persons who constitute the public." It may be desirable that a water company or a gas company should have an easy way of collecting its debts, but we see no reason why it should be enabled by the court to collect a debt from one who is not a party to the contract, when it sells its commodity on credit. The legislature may give such a company a lien, as it has given one to mechanics. We have no doubt that payment may be demanded in advance, as is done in Boston; though whether the owner of the house could not have the water shut off during the year, and recover for what he had not used, may be considered an open question. See Rockland Water Co. v. Adams, 84 Me. 472. In this case the owner of a house had paid bills which contained the words, "One year's rent will be required in all cases." During a subsequent year he used the water for four months only, and was sued for a year's supply. It was held that the regulation was unreasonable and void, and that the plaintiff could not recover unless the defendant expressly assented to the regulation, and that payment of former bills was not such assent. See also Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 29 L. R. A. 376, where there are some strong remarks in favor of the consumer. We have also no doubt that a water company may demand a deposit, as is required by the Boston Gaslight Company, where it does not know the consumer. This was held to be reasonable in the case of a gas company in Williams v. Mutual Gas Co. 52 Mich. 499, 50 Am. Rep. 266. See also Shepard v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479, 15 Wis. 318, 82 Am. Dec. 679. The right to shut off water or gas if a bill is not paid is undoubted, so far as the consumer is concerned. People v. Kennedy, v. Manhattan Gaslight Co. 45 Barb. 136; McDaniel v. Springfield Waterworks Co. 48 Mo. App. 273; Sheward v. Citizens' Water Co. 90 Cal. 635; Shiras v. Ewing, 48 Kan. 170. If gas is supplied to the owner of different houses, under separate contracts, failure to pay the gas bill on one house does not authorize the cutting off of the gas from the other. Gaslight Co. v. Collday, 25 Md. 1. See also Lloyd v. Washington Gaslight Co. 1 Mackey, 331. In American Waterworks Co. v. State, Walker, 46 Neb. 194, 30 L. R. A. 447, where a consumer of water (who was in default), after the water was turned off, tendered his arrears due, but refused to pay $1, as required by regulation of the company, for turning the water on, the court, by mandamus, compelled the company to turn the water on, holding the regulation to be unreasonable. See also Smith v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 104 Ala. 315. It is difficult to see how a lien or charge upon land can be created, except by the written consent of the owner or by an act of the legislature, when it is provided by Pub. Stat. chap. 120, § 8, "and no estate or interest in land shall be assigned, granted, or surrendered, unless by such writing [i. e., an instrument in writing signed by the grantor], or by operation of law." Water is at the present time a necessity, and without it a house cannot be occupied in our cities. The water must be obtained from a water company, and to compel a man to pay another's debt in order to obtain it seems to us a result that ought not to be reached. Water is even a greater necessity than gas, for there are other means of lighting in use; yet in the case of gas there is a decision directly in point. In New Orleans Gaslight & Bkg. Co. v. Paulding, 12 Rob. (La.) 376, the plaintiff refused to supply the defendant with gas unless he paid an unpaid bill contracted by a former owner of the building. He promised to do so, in order to obtain the gas. The plaintiff turned on the gas, and afterwards sued him on his promise to pay the amount due from the former owner. The court held that the promise was void, and that the plaintiff had no right to require such a payment. In Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Wilkinson, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 410, 421, 422, it is said by Bramwell, L. J.: "My judgment does not proceed upon this, that the appellants have a right to insist upon the communication with their main remaining severed until their claim for rates due from the preceding occupier is satisfied. I do not think they have such right. That was, no doubt, the notion upon which they acted; but in my opinion it is not sustainable. The learned magistrate who has stated this case has argued it extremely well, and I agree with him in thinking that it was not the intention of the legislature that the undertakers should be at liberty to withhold the supply of water from the respondent's premises until the arrears due from someone else are paid. I also agree with him in thinking that ample provision is made for their security, by enabling them to demand the rates in advance, without having what may be called something in the nature of a lien upon the property itself for bygone rates." It is suggested that a lessee or purchaser can easily protect himself by finding out whether the water has been paid for. The answer to this is obvious. The records of a water company are not public records, to which anyone has access. If inquiry be made, there is no law to compel the company to give a certificate in writing. The answer would be a verbal one. If there should be a controversy as to what it was, it would be a matter to be proved. An answer in the negative would only operate by way of estoppel, and this would have to be proved. Suppose it turned out that there was an old bill which the clerk who gave the answer supposed had been paid, when in fact it had not been, and the company should show that the clerk had no authority to answer the question. Is the man who proposes to buy a house to be kept from completing the purchase until all these matters are determined by a court of law? See Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 292, 29 L. R. A. 376. It seems to us that if an unpaid gas or water bill is made a charge upon the land, without authority of a statute, there are numerous difficulties to be encountered, and that the better rule is that any such regulation as that before us, if construed as the defendant seeks to construe it in this case, is unreasonable and void.

Decree affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Samuel D. PETERSON, Respnt.,
v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Applt.

(.....Minn.....)

- *1. A written message, alleged to be libelous, was delivered to defendant's operator at New Ulm, and by him transmitted by sound over the wires to the operator at St. Paul, to be by him reduced to writing and delivered to the plaintiff. Held, that this constituted a publication of the libel.
2. Mere negligence, unless so gross as to amount to positive bad faith, is not a ground for awarding punitive damages. Hence an instruction to the effect that the jury might award exemplary damages, if they found that the defendant was negligent in employing the operator who transmitted the message, or in failing to adopt proper rules to prevent the transmission of libelous messages, is erroneous.

(April 22, 1898.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Brown County refusing a new trial after verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged publication of a libel. Reversed.

*Headnotes by MITCHELL, J.

NOTE.—For prior decision in this case, see Peterson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Minn.) 38 L. R. A. 302.
40 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ferguson & Kneeland, for appellant:

The words of the message must speak for themselves, unaffected by anything extraneous. If they are not libelous per se, they are not libelous at all.

Hankinson v. Bilby, 16 Mees. & W. 445; Shull v. Raymond, 28 Minn. 66.

The broad distinction between slander and libel, or the two distinct wrongs which those terms are used to designate and distinguish, is that one is the communication of defamatory matter by transitory means,—like the human voice; the other by means more or less permanent,—as written language, pictures, caricatures, effigies, etc.

Newell, Defamation, p. 38; Townshend, Slander & Libel, 3d ed. §§ 18, 98, citing Holt, Libel, p. 254; Folkhard's Starkie, Slander & Libel, p. 92, *67, note; Odgers, Libel & Slander, § 22.

The transmission of this message was not a publication in writing either under authority or in reason.

Spoken words are actionable in themselves if they (1) charge the plaintiff with the commission of some indictable offense; (2) impute to the plaintiff a contagious disorder tending to exclude him from society; (3) or speak of the plaintiff in the way of his profession or trade, or disparage him in an office of public trust. But in all other cases of spoken words the fact that the plaintiff's reputation has been injured thereby must be proved at the trial by evidence of the consequences, etc.

Odgers, Libel & Slander, § 2; see also Townshend, Slander & Libel, §§ 153a et seq.; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 349.

A corporation cannot be liable for slander.

Townshend, Slander & Libel, 3d ed. § 265; Odgers, Libel & Slander, § 368; Newell, Defamation, p. 361; Gilbert v. Crystal Fountain Lodge, 80 Ga. 284; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 257; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 449.

Such a publication, if it is a publication, is privileged in the absence of express malice.

Gray v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 87 Ga. 350, 14 L. R. A. 95; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ferguson, 57 Ind. 495; Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, §§ 2635, et seq.; Primrose v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 154 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 888; Wenman v. Ash, 13 C. B. 844, cited in Townshend, Slander & Libel, § 209; Marks v. Baker, 28 Minn. 162; Traynor v. Seilaff, 62 Minn. 420; Rector v. Smith, 11 Iowa, 302; Taylor v. Hawkins, 16 Q. B. 308; Toogood v. Sprynging, 1 Cramp. M. & R. 181; Moore v. Butler, 48 N. H. 161; Aldrich v. Press Printing Co. 9 Minn. 183, 86 Am. Dec. 84; Bishop, Non-Cont. L. § 302.

A verdict for purely vindictive damages, if excessive, should be set aside.

Sedgw. Damages, 520-528; Pratt v. Pioneer Press Co. 32 Minn. 217; Bridge v. Oshkosh, 71 Wis. 363; McCarthy v. Niskern, 22 Minn. 90; Dennis v. Johnson, 42 Minn. 301.

The question of actual malice and punitive damages should not have been submitted to the jury at all.

Wiggin v. Coffin, 3 Story, 1; Hoffman v. Northern P. R. Co. 45 Minn. 53.

Malice of agent is not imputable to principal.

Existon v. Cramer, 57 Wis. 570; Wardrobe v. California Stage Co. 7 Cal. 118, 68 Am. Dec. 231; Hill v. New Orleans, P. & G. W. R. Co. 11 La. Ann. 292; Detroit Daily Post Co. v. McArthur, 16 Mich. 447; Sedgw. Damages, 523, and note.

Mr. S. L. Pierce, for respondent:

When it is the purpose of the speaker of the words to have the person spoken to reduce the spoken words to writing, and this is done, the writing is published to the writer.

Townshend, Slander & Libel, § 86; Pullman v. Hill [1891] 1 Q. B. 524; Snyder v. Andrews, 6 Barb. 43; McCombs v. Tuttle, 5 Blackf. 431.

Where one, knowing a writing to be a libel, reads it to others, that is an unlawful publication of it.

Lamb's Case, 9 Coke, 59b, 108; Kiene v. Ruff, 1 Iowa, 483; Bacon v. Michigan C. R. Co. 55 Mich. 224, 54 Am. Rep. 372; State v. McIntire, 115 N. C. 769; Munson v. Lathrop, 96 Wis. 386; The Case De Libellis Famosis, 5 Coke, 125a; Adams v. Lawson, 17 Gratt. 250, 94 Am. Dec. 455.

In common-law actions the parties are entitled to trial of issues of fact by jury.

Judges may differ widely with the jurors, but that is no justification for disturbing the decision of a jury on matters left by the law to their determination, unless the damages given are excessive, and this fact appears to have 40 L. R. A.

been given "under the influence of passion and prejudice."

Fabrigas v. Mostyn, 2 W. Bl. 929; Meeks v. St. Paul, 64 Minn. 220.

Aside from the question of punitive damages, was there not here something in the way of actual injury to the plaintiff of a serious and, indeed, irreparable character?

Williamson v. Freer, 43 L. J. C. P. N. S. 161.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was here on a former appeal (63 Minn. 18, 33 L. R. A. 302), the opinion in which may be referred to for a full statement of the facts. It was there held that the forwarding of the alleged libelous message by the defendant over its wires to its operator at St. Paul constituted a publication; that the message was on its face fairly susceptible of a libelous meaning; also that the evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in finding that defendant's operator published or transmitted the message maliciously, and not in good faith. If there is any difference between the evidence on this last point on the first trial and that adduced on the last trial, the latter is the stronger against the defendant.

The message was delivered in writing to the operator at New Ulm, and by him transmitted over the wires to the operator at St. Paul, to be by him reduced to writing and delivered to the plaintiff, which was done. The fact affirmatively appears on the second trial that the message was transmitted over the wires by sound, and the point is now made that the mode of communication was oral, and not written, and therefore there was no publication of a libel; the distinction between slander and libel being that the former is oral defamation by spoken words, while the latter consists of a publication by writing, printing, pictures, or other durable mode. The alleged materiality of the point lies in the facts that, as defendant claims, the words complained of are not actionable in themselves unless published in writing, and that a corporation cannot be liable for slander. This point was not raised or considered on the former appeal. We are of the opinion that it is without merit. Whether the means employed by the operator at New Ulm in dictating or communicating the contents of the message to the operator in St. Paul consisted of sounds representing letters, or dots or dashes representing the same thing, can make no difference. In either case, the purpose and result would be the same, viz., the transmission and copying in written form the contents of the written message in the hands of the operator in New Ulm. The result was to put the message in the hands of the St. Paul operator in written, durable form, which he could read and understand as effectually as if the original had been placed in his possession. Words communicated for such an accomplished purpose "have an existence per se off the tongue." When the means of reproducing the contents of a writing are by repeating its contents orally to another, to enable him to put it into writing, and the person to whom it is repeated reduces it to writing, the writing thus produced does not depend for its identification on the oral utterances of the person who reads or repeats, but on the writing itself, which is thus communicated to the person who reduces it to writing; and it can make no difference whether the contents of the writing are communicated by sound over telegraph wires by one operator to another, or by a person in audible words to an amanuensis at his side. See Pullman v. Hill [1891] 1 Q. B. 524; M'Combs v. Tuttle, 5 Blackf. 481; Adams v. Lawson, 17 Gratt. 250, 94 Am. Dec. 455. As long ago as Lamb's Case, 9 Coke, 59a, it was held that where one, "knowing a writing to be a libel, reads it to others, that is an unlawful publication of it;" and in The Case De Libellis Famosis, 5 Coke, 124b, it was held that a libel may be published (1) verbis aut cantilenis, as where it is maliciously repeated or sung in the presence of others." It is not necessary to go as far as this in order to hold that the facts in the present case constituted the publication of a libel.

2. There was no evidence that the New Ulm operator was not competent and generally faithful in the discharge of his duties, or that he was ever guilty of any breach of duty, unless in the transmission of this message, and there is no evidence that the defendant had any reason, prior to its transmission, to anticipate that he would transmit an improper message. Neither is there any evidence that the defendant ratified or approved of his wrongful act (if it was such) in transmitting this message, unless it is the bare fact that it subsequently retained him in its service. Upon this state of the evidence the court, after instructing the jury that if they found that the defendant or its agent was actuated by malice in fact, and that it ought to be punished, further instructed them in that connection as follows: "Perhaps the only fault that can be charged against the defendant in the premises is that it had and retained an operator who would receive and transmit such improper messages, or that it did not have a rule prohibiting the sending of unsigned messages libelous on their face; and, if the jury should be of that opinion, they should make the amount of exemplary damages, if any, reasonably proportionate to the degree of defendant's fault." (It should be stated in this connection that the defendant had a rule forbidding its operators from sending messages containing profane or obscene language, but none in regard to unsigned or libelous messages). When the court had completed his charge, defendant's counsel took the following exceptions: "I except to that portion of the general charge which submits the question of punitive damages to the jury; and I especially except to that portion of the charge reading as follows: [The part above quoted]." Then ensued the following colloquy between counsel, and between the counsel and the court: "Mr. Pierce: If there is an exception to that part of the charge, I would consent to strike that portion of the charge out. Let's get that, —that it might be possibly construed to be a recognition of the fact of fault, I suppose that is the point counsel makes. I just as soon, if they object to do it, to have that clause stricken out. Mr. Ferguson: I have referred to that. If that is stricken out, why, then, the case should be dismissed, because there isn't any other fault of the company. Mr. Pierce: I think, perhaps, that clause might be stricken out. Mr. Ferguson: I except to it. If you want to strike it out, I move to dismiss. By the Court: I guess I won't strike it out. Mr. Ferguson: That is the gist of your action; that is why I except to it. Mr. Pierce: Now, I will ask counsel, then, the particular feature of that—What is it that you object to? Object to the question of submitting the question of punitive damages at all, under the evidence of this case? Mr. Ferguson: I except to this, which is the only specific point called out. I don't think that the question of punitive damages should be submitted to the jury. Mr. Pierce: I might say that it might be modified, with the suggestion that, if these facts might be found, it is rather a matter for the jury to determine. By the Court: I don't feel disposed to change that at present." We are of the opinion that the part of the charge especially excepted to contains material error. It may be that it is erroneous in assuming or implying that the defendant was at fault or negligent in each and all of the matters mentioned. But that is not its chief vice. The fatal error in this part of the charge lies in the fact that, in effect and substance, it amounts to an instruction that the mere negligence of the defendant in the respects mentioned would justify the jury in awarding punitive or exemplary damages. The defendant's liability, if any, rests upon the doctrine of respondet superior. If the act of the servant in transmitting the message was wrongful, the defendant is liable, whether it was negligent or not; and, on the other hand, if his act was lawful, the defendant is not liable, however negligent it may have been. Hence the question of defendant's negligence in the employment of its operator, or in the failure to adopt proper rules, was really foreign to the issues in the case.

40 L. R. A.

Moreover, mere negligence, unless so gross as to amount to positive bad faith, is no ground for awarding punitive damages. The liability of the defendant for such damages, if the act of the agent was actuated by malice or bad faith, is an entirely different matter. It is urged very strenuously by plaintiff's counsel that defendant is not in position to raise this objection, for the reason that, by what subsequently occurred in court, he put his exception to the charge exclusively upon the ground that the question of exemplary damages should not have been submitted to the jury at all, and that he did not specifically call the court's attention to the particular vice in this part of the charge. We cannot so construe the colloquy between the court and defendant's counsel.

Counsel took two entirely distinct exceptions: First, to the submission of the question of exemplary damages to the jury at all; and, second, to the part of the charge which stated the grounds upon which the jury might award such damages; and we cannot see anything in what followed that amounted to a waiver of either of the exceptions or a merger of the second in the first. The second exception was sufficiently explicit. Counsel called the court's attention specifically to the particular part of the charge excepted to, embodying it verbatim in his exception. We do not think he was required, under the circumstances, to go further, and explain to the court the reasons why the charge was erroneous. The error in it was not one of mere verbal inaccuracy or incompleteness of statement. As it appears that this case has been tried three times, it is unfortunate that error should have occurred on the trial, but the error is so manifest and so substantial that we cannot avoid granting a new trial. This renders it unnecessary to consider any of the other points discussed by counsel.

Order reversed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Re Assignment of Alfredrick S. HATCH et al.

Re Claim of Collis P. HUNTINGTON.

(155 N. Y. 401.)

1. A claim accruing after an assignment for creditors on a contract previously made by the assignor is assets in the hands of the assignee only to the extent of the balance due after deducting a claim against the assignor which was a valid existing set-off at the time of the assignment.
2. Only one of mutual debts or claims need be due at the time of an assignment for creditors by one of the parties, in order to give the right of set-off in equity.
3. A claim which was due when the debtor made an assignment for creditors can be set off against a claim in favor of the assignee against the creditor for a share of the proceeds of collections made after the assignment on judgments which the assignor, before the assignment, had transferred to the creditor under a contract for a division of the proceeds.

(April 19, 1886.)

APPPEAL by Collis P. Huntington from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing an order of a Special Term for New York County entered upon order of a referee allowing his claim upon the assets of the insolvent estates of the Hatches. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Maxwell Evarts, for appellant:

Mr. Huntington had a right under the statute to set off his claim for money loaned to Hatch prior to the assignment, against the claim of Hatch's assignee for his proportion of the money collected by Huntington in the Baltimore and Canadian suits under the agreement of June 24, 1886.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 501, 502; Norton v. McCarthy, 10 Misc. 222.

Mr. Huntington is entitled to set off pro tanto the $\frac{1}{11}$ of the net collections made by him under the agreement of June 24, 1886, against the amounts due him from Hatch and his firm at the date of the assignment.

Hughitt v. Hayes, 138 N. Y. 163; Scott v. Armatrong, 146 U. S. 499, 36 L. ed. 1059; Yardley v. Clothier, 49 Fed. Rep. 337, 8 U. S. App.

207, 51 Fed. Rep. 506, 17 L. R. A. 462; Adams v. Spokane Drug Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 888, 23 L. R. A. 334; Van Wagoner v. Paterson Gaslight Co. 23 N. J. L. 284; Smith v. Felton, 43 N. Y. 419; Smith v. Fox, 48 N. Y. 674; Rothschild v. Mack, 115 N. Y. 1; Skiles v. Houston, 110 Pa. 254; Martin v. Kunzmüller, 87 N. Y. 896; French v. Fenn, 3 Dougl. 257; Cooke, Bankrupt Laws, 569; Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 731.

Where the claim against the insolvent matured before the assignment, and the claim in favor of the insolvent became due after the assignment (the present case), the right of set-off has always been allowed.

Smith v. Felton, 43 N. Y. 419; Smith v. Fox, 48 N. Y. 674; Hughitt v. Hayes, 138 N. Y. 163.

It has invariably been held by this court that it is immaterial, so far as the right of set off is concerned, that the claim in favor of the insolvent became due after the date of the assignment.

Rothschild v. Mack, 115 N. Y. 1; Richards v. La Tourette, 119 N. Y. 54; Fera v. Wickham, 135 N. Y. 223, 17 L. R. A. 456.

A pledgee cannot set off against his debt to a pledgee the value of the collateral as existing at any earlier time than the time when the account is taken to the court.

Granite Bank v. Richardson, 7 Met. 407; Rozet v. McClellan, 48 Ill. 345, 95 Am. Dec. 551.

Messrs. Hatch & Wickes and George C. Lay, for respondent:

Demands to be set off must be legal and within the jurisdiction of the court. They must be mutual between all the parties to the action; and the set-off must be a subsisting cause of action.

Waterman, Set-Off, 2d ed. § 25.

At the date of the assignment there was no subsisting demand, actual or contingent, against Huntington.

Chance v. Isaacs, 5 Paige, 592; Hatch v. New York, 82 N. Y. 442; Pond v. Harwood, 139 N. Y. 111.

In cases of cross demands, both due at the date of the assignment, the equity of the person owing the insolvent is deemed superior to the equities of creditors entitled to a share in the estate, and a set-off is allowed.

Richards v. La Tourette, 119 N. Y. 54; O'Connor v. Brandt, 12 App. Div. 596.

On the other hand, where the estate has a

NOTE.—As to the effect of the immaturity of a claim at the time of insolvency upon the right of set-off, see note to Fera v. Wickham (N. Y.) 17 L. R. A. 456.

40 L. R. A.

As to the right to set off an insolvent's obligation upon a claim in the hands of his receiver or assignee or trustee for creditors, see note to Merrill v. Cape Ann Granite Co. (Mass.) 23 L. R. A. 313.

claim against A due at the date of the assignment, and A, the debtor, is also a creditor upon a claim against the estate, falling due after the assignment, the set-off is not allowed, on the theory that at the date of the assignment the rights of the other creditors have become fixed for the recovery of all the assets of the estate and the collection of claims then due.

Martin v. Kunzmüller, 87 N. Y. 896; Hamilton v. Piza, 6 App. Div. 598; Fera v. Wickham, 185 N. Y. 223, 17 L. R. A. 456.

Where an insolvent has an existing matured claim against a third person at the date of the assignment, and where at that date there is a contingent liability of said third person upon a note of the assignor, which ripens into a claim against the estate after the assignment, the set-off is not allowed.

Chance v. Isaacs, 5 Paige, 592.

The rights and equities of the other creditors, which became fixed by the assignment, are superior to the right of the secured creditor to a set-off.

Chance v. Isaacs, 5 Paige, 592; Fera v. Wickham, 185 N. Y. 223, 17 L. R. A. 456; Hatch v. New York, 82 N. Y. 486.

The claim of the estate against Huntington was unliquidated, and its amount could only be determined after an accounting.

Hackett v. Connett, 2 Edw. Ch. 73; Cummings v. Morris, 25 N. Y. 625; Elliott v. Smith, 77 Hun, 116.

The right of set-off depends upon the situation of affairs at the moment of insolvency, and the allowance of a set-off creates a preference to the prejudice of other creditors.

Wingate v. Orchard, 44 U. S. App. 522, 75 Fed. Rep. 241, 21 C. C. A. 315; Yardley v. Philler, 167 U. S. 844, 42 L. ed. 192.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question necessary for us to consider in this case is that of the right to offset one claim against another. The facts that bear upon this question are these: On the 14th of November, 1887, the firm of A. S. Hatch & Co., as a firm, and each of the individual members as such, made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors. At that time, Huntington had a claim against A. S. Hatch, individually, of $17,899.23, and against the firm of $20,167.49; and he still holds these claims against the individual and firm estate in the hands of the assignee. On the 24th of June, 1886, more than a year before the assignment, Huntington had entered into a written contract with A. S. Hatch, individually, whereby the latter transferred to the former certain judgments which were to be collected, and; when collected, divided between the parties in the manner indicated in the agreement. Nothing, however, had been collected on these judgments, and nothing was due on this contract at the date of the assignment above mentioned. Several years after the assignment was made, a considerable sum of money was paid to Huntington in compromise and satisfaction of the judgments by the defendants therein; and for a certain share of the sum so paid, after deducting certain expenses, Huntington is bound to account to Hatch, or, in this case, to his assignee. This was a proceeding, under the statute relating to general assignments, for the purpose of ascertaining and adjusting the claim of the assignee against Huntington by reason of the money in his hands received on the judgments, and of Huntington against the assignee, in consequence of his debt against Hatch individually, above stated. The amount of the claim of each party was determined upon a reference under the statute, and subsequently confirmed by the court. The referee and the court permitted Huntington to set off, against the claim of the assignee for the moneys collected on the judgments, the debt held against Hatch individually at the date of the assignment; but the appellate division reversed the order in so far as it permitted the offset, and this presents the only question of law which we need consider.

In the view that we have taken of the case, it is not necessary to decide whether the right of set-off exists under the statute on that subject. Code, §§ 501, 502. The question can be disposed of under the rule in equity, which exists, as it always did, quite independent of the statute. It is this rule that the learned court below dealt with, as will appear from the opinion. But we think that the learned judge who spoke for the court misapprehended the true scope and application of the decisions on the question in assuming, as he evidently did, that it is necessary that the mutual debts or claims should both be due at the time of the assignment of the insolvent estate. The insolvency of one of the parties in this case draws the question with respect to the right of set-off into the domain of equity. The party who asserts the right is Huntington alone. His debt was due when the assignment was made, though the claim of the assignee against him did not accrue until some years afterwards. The question is whether Huntington is not entitled to apply the former in extinguishment of the latter. The general language used in some of the decisions would seem to sustain the decision below; but it will be seen on closer examination that it is not necessary, in order to warrant the set-off, that both debts should be due at the time of the insolvency. The learned court below supposed that the case of Fera v. Wickham, 185 N. Y. 223, 17 L. R. A. 456, deprived Huntington of the right of set-off. In that case neither claim was due at the time of the assignment, but both accrued afterwards, and the right was for that reason denied. It was held that, where this right did not exist at the time of the insolvency or assignment, it could not arise afterwards. In Smith v. Felton, 43 N. Y. 419, an assignee of an insolvent sued upon a note made by the defendant to the insolvent not due at the time of the assignment. The defendant had a debt against the insolvent exceeding the amount of the note, which was due at the time of the assignment. It was held that the defendant was entitled to set off his claim against the note. In Smith v. Fox, 48 N. Y. 674, the debt due to the assignee did not accrue till after the assignment, but that held by the defendant was due, and the latter was allowed to set off the debt so due. In Richards v. La Tourette, 119 N. Y. 54, the debt due from the assignee accrued prior to the assignment, while the debt due to him matured afterwards, as is the case here, and it was held that the right of set-off existed in such a case. In Rothschild v. Mack, 115 N. Y. 8, the court said: "It has been frequently held that, as to the right of set-off in equity, the fact that the debt owing to the insolvent is not due when he makes an assignment is entirely immaterial." The same rule was laid down in the same words in the case of Richards v. La Tourette, 119 N. Y. 58, and a careful reading of the opinion in Fera v. Wickham, 135 N. Y. 223, 17 L. R. A. 456, will show that the learned judge had the same principle in mind.

The principle upon which the rule proceeds is that, in case of mutual debts, it is only the balance which is the real and just sum owing by or to the insolvent. Hence, when the assignee in this case became vested with the assets of his insolvent assignor, he took the contract above mentioned, which had not then matured into a claim or right of action, but which did mature in his hands some years thereafter. He acquired no greater right than his assignor had prior to the assignment, had the claim then matured, and since Huntington had, prior to the assignment, a valid existing set-off against what the assignee took, that right was not lost or impaired by the assignment. The rights of the parties being adjusted in equity as of the date of the insolvency, all the assignee took as assets was the balance subsequently accruing on the contract, after deducting Huntington's debt due against the assignor before the rights of creditors intervened. Had Huntington's debt accrued after the insolvency, as that of the assignee did, then equity would not permit the set-off, and the case would come within the rule laid down in Fera v. Wickham, 135 N. Y. 223, 17 L. R. A. 456; but, as already shown, such was not the case. When the debt of the party claiming the set-off does not exist when the insolvent estate passes into the hands of a trustee for creditors, but accrues subsequently during the administration of the estate, then the equities of the other creditors will intervene to prevent the depletion of the assets in the hands of the trustee by extinguishing a good debt due to the estate by a bad one due to the creditor from the estate. In all cases of mutual debts, it is the insolvency of one of the debtors and the rights of the other creditors in the assigned estate that equity takes notice of, and modifies the legal right of set-off accordingly, in order to promote equality and justice. But that condition of things exists only from the time when the assignment takes effect; and, while it is the general rule in the administration of insolvent estates that equality among creditors is equity, yet the court will not ignore the principle that it is only the balance in case of mutual debts or obligations which is the real sum owing by or to the insolvent; and the assets in the hands of the trustee for distribution to creditors are measured by this rule. Equity always regards as done what ought to have been done, and hence in this case it applies the past-due debt of Huntington, existing at the time of the assignment, upon his unmatured obligation in the hands of Hatch, which passed to the trustee. Hughitt v. Hayes, 136 N. Y. 163. This is the rule that prevails with respect to the right of set-off in the Supreme Court of the United States. In Scott v. Armstrong, 146 U. S. 499, 38 L. ed. 1059, the receiver of an insolvent national bank sought to recover upon a note which fell due after his appointment. The maker of the note claimed a right to set off against his obligation a sum of money deposited to his credit with the bank prior to the insolvency. The precise question certified to the court for its decision was this: "Where a national bank becomes insolvent, and its assets pass into the hands of a receiver appointed by the controller of the currency, can a debtor of the bank set off against his indebtedness the amount of a claim he holds against the bank, supposing the debt due from the bank to have been payable at the time of its suspension, but that due to it to have been payable at a time subsequent thereto?" The court answered the question in the affirmative, and, in delivering the opinion, the learned chief justice said: "Where a set-off is otherwise valid, it is not perceived how its allowance can be considered a preference; and it is clear that it is only the balance, if any, after the set-off is deducted, which can justly be held to form part of the assets of the insolvent."

The state of case where the claim sought to be offset is acquired after the act of insolvency is far otherwise, for the rights of the parties become fixed as of that time, and to sustain such a transfer would defeat the object of these provisions. The transaction must necessarily be held to have been entered into with the intention to produce its natural result, the preventing of the application of the insolvent's assets in the manner prescribed." From this review of the authorities, I think it is quite apparent that the decision of the court at special term allowing the set off in this case was correct. The order of the Appellate Division should therefore be reversed, and that of the special term affirmed, with costs.

All concur.

Rehearing denied May 13, 1898.

Louis BLANCK, Appt.,

v.

Frank X. SADLIER, Receiver, etc., of Cassidy et al., Reept.

(153 N. Y. 551.)

An undisclosed gold clause in a mortgage subject to which real estate is bought at auction is not a defect in title which will enable the purchaser to withdraw from his contract, nor will a contract be implied on the part of the vendor that no such clause existed, a breach of which will entitle the purchaser to rescind the contract and recover his deposit, where the government has pledged its faith to keep all its funds at par, and the terms of the mortgage are such that there is no probability that the policy of the government will be changed before the mortgage becomes due.

(Bartlett and Haight, JJ., dissent.)

NOTE.—As to contracts for payment in coin, see note to Skinner v. Santa Rosa (Cal.) 29 L. R. A. 512; also Dennis v. Moses (Wash.) ante, 302.

(October 5, 1897.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for New York County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover money which had been deposited as part performance of a contract to purchase real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Spink & Martin, for appellant:

The provisions of the terms of sale must be construed most strongly against the defendant who prepared them.

Pom. Spec. Perf. §§ 866-868; Gibson v. D'Este, 2 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 542; Greaves v. Wilson, 4 Jur. N. S. 271; Dykes v. Blake, 4 Bing. N. C. 463; Jones v. Edney, 3 Campb. 285.

The purchaser cannot be compelled to do anything more than, or to take something different from, that which is provided by the clear meaning of the terms of sale. He is not bound to take upon himself any risk or trouble not contracted for.

Webster v. Kings County Trust Co. 145 N. Y. 275; Schmidt v. Reed, 182 N. Y. 108; Oppenheimer v. Humphreys, 31 N. Y. S. R. 622; Zorn v. McParland, 11 Misc. 555; Smyth v. Sturges, 108 N. Y. 495.

By the terms of the contract the property was to be conveyed subject to a "lawful money" mortgage. This is clear, under legal principles of interpretation. It is also the practical construction put upon it by the defendant.

Metropolitan Bank v. Van Dyck, 27 N. Y. 400; Juilliard v. Greenman, 110 U. S. 421, 28 L. ed. 204; Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 457, 28 L. ed. 217; U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 3589-3590; Laws of 45th Cong. chap. 20, passed Feb. 28, 1878; Laws of 51st Cong. chap. 708, passed July 14, 1890.

There is nothing in the case from which an agreement to pay in gold can be presumed.

Maryland v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 22 Wall. 105, 22 L. ed. 713.

The statement of the defendant on June 26, when told that the mortgage was payable in gold coin, shows that his understanding of the contract was the same as that claimed by the plaintiff.

Such practical interpretation by the parties must control.

Snyder v. Seaman, 2 App. Div. 258, and cases cited.

If plaintiff had agreed to pay part in cash and give mortgage for $16,000, he could not have been compelled to execute a "gold" mortgage.

Peabody v. Dewey, 153 Ill. 657, 27 L. R. A. 322.

The mortgage in fact on the property is enforceable in gold.

Bronson v. Rodas, 7 Wall. 229, 19 L. ed. 141; Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. 687, 20 L. ed. 460.

The plaintiff is suing for money had and received, to recover back money paid by him on a consideration which has failed.

Green v. Green, 9 Cow. 50.

The defendant does not ask equitable relief, 40 L. R. A.

but assumes the position of exacting a forfeiture.

Oppenheimer v. Humphreys, 31 N. Y. S. R. 622; Zorn v. McParland, 11 Misc. 555.

It is now too late for the defendant to seek specific performance.

Page v. McDonnell, 55 N. Y. 308.

The courts will take judicial notice of all matters of public history affecting the whole people, whether they be events relating to war or peace.

Swinerton v. Columbian Ins. Co. 37 N. Y. 188, 93 Am. Dec. 560.

The uncertainty as to a "gold" standard is a matter which not only ought to be generally known, but is generally known throughout the state, and above all within New York city, its great commercial and financial center.

People v. Snyder, 41 N. Y. 898; Oliver v. State, 86 Ala. 88, 4 L. R. A. 83, note.

Mr. Henry Yonge, with Messrs. Johnson & Lamb, for respondent:

The defendant here is an officer of the court. To set aside a sale made by such an officer, it is necessary to establish fraud or grave mistake. Mere technicalities the court will not notice.

Riggs v. Pursell, 66 N. Y. 198; High, Receivers, 3d ed. § 191; Hackley v. Draper, 60 N. Y. 88.

The mortgage upon the property was as described in the bill of sale.

Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. 687, 20 L. ed. 460.

The complaint does not allege, and there is no evidence of, any damage by reason of the mortgage being what is termed a gold mortgage. The absence of proof of this character is fatal to the plaintiff's contention.

Riggs v. Pursell, 66 N. Y. 198, 74 N. Y. 375; Wetmore v. Bruce, 118 N. Y. 323; Gould v. Allen, 1 Wend. 182; Thompson v. Gould, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. 424.

A man paying the mortgage in gold value would have paid just the amount in actual value of the encumbrance as originally made, and the mortgagor would receive just that amount.

That he has been deprived of a situation where he might have realized a speculative profit is the foundation of his claim. Such profits the court will not regard unless they are distinctly proved.

Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489, 69 Am. Dec. 718; Casidy v. Le Fevre, 45 N. Y. 562; Messmore v. New York Shot & Lead Co. 40 N. Y. 422; Starbird v. Barrons, 38 N. Y. 280; Rochester Lantern Co. v. Stiles & P. Press Co. 135 N. Y. 209.

Where prospective loss is claimed there must be evidence that such loss will result.

Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. § 172.

There is not a scintilla of proof in this case that the plaintiff made any mistake, or that he did not know that this mortgage was a gold mortgage. Therefore he can have no relief.

1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 152, p. 166; Lyman v. United States Ins. Co. 2 Johns. Ch. 630; Gillespie v. Moon, 2 Johns. Ch. 585, 7 Am. Dec. 559; Southard v. Curley, 134 N. Y. 148, 16 L. R. A. 561; Devoreux v. Sun Fire Office, 51 Hun, 151.

The court should apply the maxim De minimis non curat lex.

Corwith v. Griffing, 31 Barb. 9; Searles v. Cronk, 38 How. Pr. 320; Crook v. Rindskopf, 105 N. Y. 476.

The principles of equity are available by the defendant, although the action is at law.

Sheehan v. Hamilton, 2 Keyes, 306; Brown v. Miles, 61 Hun, 453; Phillips v. Gorham, 17 N. Y. 270; Dobson v. Pearce, 12 N. Y. 156, 63 Am. Dec. 152; Crary v. Goodman, 12 N. Y. 266, 64 Am. Dec. 506; New York C. Ins. Co. v. National Protection Ins. Co. 14 N. Y. 85; Cummings v. Morris, 25 N. Y. 625; McHenry v. Hazard, 45 N. Y. 580; Savage v. Allen, 54 N. Y. 458; Cavalli v. Allen, 57 N. Y. 508; Hopough v. Struble, 60 N. Y. 430.

The plaintiff had constructive notice of the terms of the mortgage, and may not now plead ignorance of its provisions.

Riggs v. Pursell, 66 N. Y. 198; Gilbert v. Peteler, 38 N. Y. 165; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 364; Coven v. Paddock, 48 N. Y. S. R. 342; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 364.

Andrews, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, on June 6, 1895, became the purchaser at public auction of premises known as No. 138 West 188d street in the city of New York, for the sum of $19,700. The sale was made by the receiver of the firm of Cassidy & Adler, under the order of the court. There was at the time of the sale a mortgage on the premises for $16,000, dated January 8, 1894, and payable January 30, 1899, "in gold coin of the United States of America, of the present standard of weight and fineness." The sale was made as stated in the conditions of sale, "subject to a mortgage of $16,000, to be at 5 per cent, three years to run;" and there was no further or other statement or representation made at the time as to the terms or character of the mortgage. The conditions of sale further provided that all liens and encumbrances upon the premises would be allowed out of the purchase money. The plaintiff, at the time of the purchase, paid 10 per cent of the purchase price and the auctioneer's and salesroom fees, as required by the terms of sale. Subsequently, upon the examination of the title by his counsel, the provision in the mortgage requiring payment to be made in gold coin was discovered. The plaintiff, at the time appointed for the closing of the title, stated the fact so ascertained, and refused to accept the conveyance tendered by the defendant, unless he would procure a change in the mortgage by the elimination therefrom of the provision requiring its payment in gold. The defendant refused to comply with such requirement, and stood upon the validity of the title tendered and the insufficiency of the objection made to the mortgage. Thereupon the plaintiff, having first obtained the consent of the court, brought this action against the receiver to recover back the 10 per cent of the purchase money and the auctioneer's and salesroom fees paid on the sale, and also the expenses incurred in the examination of title. It seems that neither the plaintiff nor the receiver, at the time of the sale, knew that the mortgage contained the provision in question. There was no proof that the provision for the payment of the mortgage in gold affected the salable value of the premises.

The sole question presented by this record is whether the plaintiff, by reason of the presence in the mortgage of this provision, was justified in refusing to accept the title, and became entitled to maintain this action. The general rule is well settled that a vendor, under an executory contract for the sale of land, unless exempted by the terms or nature of the contract, is bound to convey a good title free from any essential defect; and the purchaser cannot be compelled to accept a conveyance of property differing from the contract in any material particular. The obligation of the vendor to convey a good title exists, independently of any express undertaking in the contract. Where not expressed, it is implied from the nature of the transaction. And, although the title tendered may in fact be good, yet if it is subject to reasonable doubt, depending upon the ascertainment of some material fact extrinsic to the record title, to be found by a jury when the question arises, the purchaser, in general, will not be required to complete the purchase, for he is entitled to a title not only good in fact, but marketable. Burwell v. Jackson, 9 N. Y. 585; Fleming v. Burnham, 100 N. Y. 1; Moore v. Williams, 115 N. Y. 586, 5 L. R. A. 654; Leake, Contr. p. 831. Where the vendor refuses to perform his contract, or is unable to do so by reason of some defect in the title affecting the substance of the thing contracted for, or where the contract was induced by fraud or misrepresentation, the vendee may treat the contract as rescinded, and recover back any deposit made on account of the purchase money and the necessary expenses to which he has been put preliminarily to the completion of the contract on his part. Lawrence v. Taylor, 5 Hill, 114; Graves v. White, 87 N. Y. 463; Leake, Contr. 107, 1070.

The action brought by the vendee in the present case proceeds on the theory that, by the contract of sale, the mortgage subject to which he purchased was to be a mortgage payable in any lawful currency, and that the provision therein which required its payment in gold coin was not the encumbrance described in the conditions of sale, and that he was not bound to accept the conveyance tendered by the defendant unless he procured the mortgage to be reformed in this respect. Whether this action is regarded as an action based on a rescission of the contract by the plaintiff for the default of the defendant in performing the contract, or as an action for damages for its breach, it is plain that in either aspect it is a fundamental condition to its maintenance that the plaintiff should establish that there was an undertaking by the defendant, based upon contract, or upon a representation equivalent to a contract, that the mortgage subject to which the plaintiff purchased was payable generally, and could be discharged by payment in any legal currency. We think there was no such contract or representation. It is not claimed that there was any representation as to the terms of the mortgage, outside of the conditions of sale. The amount of the mortgage was stated, the rate of interest, and the time it was to run. It made no reference to the medium of payment. Obviously, therefore, if there was any contract that it was payable generally in any lawful money, and not in gold coin only, it was an implied, as distinguished from an express, contract. If such implication existed in this case it was an unexpressed term which the law reads into the contract to effectuate the actual, though unexpressed, agreement of the parties. Implied contracts are familiar to the law. The court, as has been said, will imply such a contract whenever there is something not expressed which it is clear to all men of ordinary intelligence and knowledge of business must either have been latent in, or palpably present to, the minds of both parties when the contract was made. Brett, J., Thorn v. London, L. R. 10 Exch. 123. The case of the implication of a contract to give a good title in contracts for the sale of land is an illustration of the application of this principle. So, on principles of natural justice or to overreach covin or fraud, courts often force upon a wrongdoer the implication of a contract, although none existed in fact.

In this case the land was the subject of sale, and not the mortgage. The purchaser was notified of the existence of the mortgage and its amount. He made no inquiry as to whether it contained any special terms. He purchased subject to this encumbrance, entering into no personal obligation for its payment. The provision in this mortgage, that it should be paid in gold coin, although not present in most mortgages, was not unusual or infrequent. Such a provision is found in many corporate mortgages, and in mortgages taken by savings and other institutions. It was an important provision at a time when treasury notes or legal tenders were not convertible into coin. Law of United States, February 25, 1862; Bronson v. Rhodes, 7 Wall. 229, 19 L. ed. 141. Now, under the laws of the United States the paper currency of the government and silver coins are exchangeable at the treasury for gold coin at their nominal amount; and, as shown in the opinion of Judge Ingraham, the faith of the government of the United States is pledged by solemn and repeated declarations by Congress and the various departments of government to maintain the parity of all the currency issued by the government. The only hazard which the plaintiff would assume in taking the premises subject to the mortgage in question, beyond what would exist if the mortgage was payable without specification of the medium of payment, is the contingency that the United States government would violate its plighted faith, and, within the three years which the mortgage has to run, refuse to redeem its obligations in gold. We think this possibility is quite too remote to justify the assumption that the contract was made in reference to the mortgage being payable generally in lawful currency, and not in a particular kind of lawful money. Special clauses in mortgages are not infrequent. They sometimes contain what is known as the "insurance clause," or a clause making the whole mortgage due after a specified default, and other special terms are sometimes inserted. It would not, we conceive, be a valid ground of objection on the part of a purchaser of land subject to a specific mortgage, wherein the contract did not set out such special clauses, that they were not disclosed at the time the contract was made, if there was no deceit or misrepresentation. The contract here is sought to be avoided, not by reason of any fraud or misrepresentation, nor by reason of any variation in the subject of the sale from the description in the contract, but by reason of an incident connected with an encumbrance on the property, as to which the contract was silent, which, so far as appears, did not affect the value of the property or influence the purchaser in making his bid, and which we cannot assume, in view of the fact that the government is pledged to maintain the parity and the equal exchangeable value of treasury notes and silver and gold coin, will impose upon the plaintiff, in case the contract is completed, any additional burden. The law will not imply a contract, under such circumstances, that the mortgage was payable generally in any lawful currency, since whether it was or not cannot be supposed to have been a material circumstance entering into the substance of the transaction, or an efficient element in inducing the contract.

The judgment should therefore be affirmed.

O'Brien, Martin, and Vann, JJ., concur with Andrews, Ch. J., for affirmance. Haight, J., concurs with Bartlett, J., for reversal.

Gray, J., absent.

Bartlett, J., dissenting:

I am for reversal. Presiding Justice Van Brunt, in his dissenting memorandum below, said: "When I contract to pay for property I may pay in any legal tender; when I take subject to an obligation, I may assume that I can discharge it in any kind of legal tender." In my judgment, this quotation contains the law of the case clearly and briefly stated. This was a sale at the Real Estate Exchange in the city of New York, under terms of sale which provided: "The property is sold by a good title in fee simple, . . . subject to a mortgage of $16,000, to be at 5 per cent, three years to run." These sales are attended by a large number of bidders, and the purchaser is given ample time to search the title after the property is sold. In this case, by the terms the sale was made June 6, 1895, and the deed was to be delivered and balance of purchase money paid July 2, 1895. The bidders rely upon the terms of sale, and no search of the title is ever made until the property is purchased. If it was the intention to sell this property subject to a mortgage not payable in legal tender, it should have been so stated in the terms of sale. Any other rule will compel bidders to search titles for the terms of encumbrances before they can safely bid at the exchange. The mere statement of this proposition, which will compel hundreds of bidders at the exchange to examine titles they may never purchase, shows how unwise and inconvenient is the rule that is sought to be established in this case. In the legal tender case of Juilliard v. Greenman, 110 U. S. 421, 28 L. ed. 204, the Supreme Court of the United States laid down the rule (p. 449, 110 U. S., and p. 215, 28 L. ed.) that a contract to pay a certain sum in money, without any stipulation as to the kind of money in which it shall be paid, may always be satisfied by payment of that sum in any currency which is lawful money at the place and time at which payment is to be made. The plaintiff in the case at bar, on consulting the terms of sale, found that the property was "subject to a mortgage of $16,000, to be at 5 per cent, three years to run." He had the right to assume, in the absence of a statement to the contrary, that the mortgage was payable in whatever should be legal tender at the time of payment, whether it might be gold, silver, greenbacks, or treasury notes. If this general right was curtailed by the stipulations of the contract, the terms of sale should have so stated, in order to have put bidders upon their guard. This plaintiff is not seeking to recover damages. He rests upon the presumption that all contracts are payable in legal tender, unless the contrary is made to appear; and, as the terms of sale were silent as to this important point, he disaffirms the contract of sale, and asks to have restored to him what he paid at the time of the sale. I think he is entitled to recover.

John F. BAXTER, Respt.,

v.

Charles E. McDONNELL, Appt.

(155 N. Y. 83.)

1. A complaint alleging an implied liability of a bishop of the Roman Catholic church to a priest under the rules and regulations of the church, without alleging any express agreement to that effect, or anything to show the nature of the church or its civil rights, power, or capacity, or whether it is a corporation, a voluntary association, or a mere name adopted by the pleader for some purpose undisclosed,—does not state a cause of action.
2. Judicial notice of the nature and powers of the Holy Roman Catholic Church, so far as its civil rights and duties are concerned, will not be taken without any averment or proof upon the subject.
3. A bishop of the Roman Catholic Church cannot be held liable on the contracts of his predecessor, in the absence of an express agreement.
4. The same evidence is required to constitute a "church trust," and to bind a bishop as trustee thereof, as would be required in the case of a layman alleged to be a trustee under like circumstances.
5. A receipt of trust property by a bishop of the Roman Catholic Church as trustee does not make him liable on the contracts of his predecessor.
6. A receipt of trust property as trustee constitutes no consideration for an individual promise to pay an obligation of a predecessor as trustee.
7. A bishop is not the employer of a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, although he has power to assign priests to duty, and is not personally liable under the laws of the church, in the absence of any express promise, to pay the priest for his services to the church.

8. An answer is not demurrable when the complaint is defective.

Per Haight, J.

9. The validity of a defense demurred to may be considered notwithstanding defects in the complaint, when the question is certified for review to the court of appeals, under Code Civ. Proc. § 190, subd. 2, and the defendant has waived the defects in the complaint by omitting to call attention to them or to have any questions with reference thereto certified.
10. The decision of an ecclesiastical tribunal concerning the rights, duties, and obligations of a priest or minister of the church who has submitted the controversy to it for decision is a bar to a subsequent action by him in a civil court.

(March 1, 1898.)

APPPEAL by defendant by permission, and to determine certified questions, from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term for Kings County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of salary alleged to be due to plaintiff as a priest. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Henry C. M. Ingraham and Joseph E. Owens, for appellant:

If the allegations demurred to set forth a defense to either of the two causes of action alleged by the plaintiff, the demurrer should be overruled.

Hale v. Omaha Nat. Bank, 49 N. Y. 637; Henderson v. Commercial Advertiser Assn. 46 Hun, 504, Affirmed, 111 N. Y. 685; Wheeler v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 82 N. Y. 543, 37 Am. Rep. 594; Boyle v. Brooklyn, 71 N. Y. 1; 6 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. p. 801.

The fact that plaintiff is suing for a pastor's salary while acting as chaplain, claiming that such salary is more than the salary paid him, does not introduce any conflicting claim to church property or funds, or to the use of them, or introduce a question of civil rights.

1 Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 77.

The admissions which flow from the plaintiff's demurrer are conclusive against the plaintiff, even though, as matter of fact, the defendant is in error as to the allegations constituting his third separate and affirmative defense.

Milliken v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 110 N. Y. 403, 1 L. R. A. 281; Arrow S. S. Co. v. Bennett, 78 Hun, 81.

The demurrer, as matter of law, admits all the allegations of the pleading demurred to, and such pleading will be held to state all facts that can be implied from the allegations by reasonable and fair intentment; and facts so impliedly averred are traversable in the same manner as though directly stated.

Sage v. Culver, 147 N. Y. 241, and cases cited; Zebble v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 139 N. Y. 461; Cornwell v. Clement, 87 Hun, 50; Marie v. Garrison, 83 N. Y. 14.

Parties may in many ways bind themselves by their admissions and stipulations.

NOTE.—The question of liability for the salary of a pastor is the subject of a note to First Presby. Church v. Myers (Okla.) 38 L. R. A. 687.
40 L. R. A.

Embury v. Conner, 3 N. Y. 511, 53 Am. Dec. 325; Baird v. New York, 74 N. Y. 382; Re New York, L. & W. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 447; Foley v. Royal Arcanum, 151 N. Y. 196; Brady v. Nally, 151 N. Y. 258; Rood v. Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors Mut. Ben. Assn. 81 Fed. Rep. 62; Hembeau v. Great Camp K. of M. 101 Mich. 161; Watson v. Jones, 18 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666.

The church court having passed upon the question of church law as to the individual liability of the defendant to pay the salary of a priest, adversely to the plaintiff, the allegation of fraud found in the plaintiff's first cause of action is immaterial, and such judgment, being upon a question of church law, is conclusive upon a civil court.

Connitt v. Reformed Prot. Dutch Church, 54 N. Y. 551; St. James Church v. Huntington, 82 Hun, 125; Walker v. Wainwright, 16 Barb. 486; Union Church v. Sanders, 1 Houst. (Del.) 160, 63 Am. Dec. 187; Chase v. Cheney, 58 Ill. 527; McGuire v. St. Patrick's Cathedral, 54 Hun, 207; Tusgg v. Sheehan, 101 Pa. 363, 47 Am. Rep. 727; Rose v. Vertin, 46 Mich. 457, 41 Am. Rep. 174; Stack v. O'Hara, 98 Pa. 213; Moseman v. Heitshousen, 50 Neb. 420.

If it should be held that the defendant was responsible for the plaintiff's salary from the time of his installation to the end of the plaintiff's pastorate, the complaint shows that plaintiff has received $1,500 on account of his claim for salary, which is much more than the amount of his salary for these ten months, and, inasmuch as the plaintiff does not say from whom he received the $1,500, it must be held that he received it from the party against whom he makes his claim for salary.

Clark v. Dillon, 97 N. Y. 370.

Trustees have no power to bind the trust estate by any executory contract.

Stanton v. King, 8 Hun, 4, Affirmed, 69 N. Y. 609; Austin v. Munro, 47 N. Y. 360; Ferrin v. Myrick, 41 N. Y. 815; Schmittler v. Simon, 101 N. Y. 554, 54 Am. Rep. 737; New v. Nicoll, 12 Hun, 481, 73 N. Y. 127; Blevitt v. Olin, 13 N. Y. S. R. 76; Clark v. Dillon, 97 N. Y. 370.

When the vital question is whether the complaint is sufficient, the prayer must show the nature of the action.

Stuart v. Boughton, 85 Hun, 281; Edson v. Girvan, 29 Hun, 423; Fisher v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 67 How. Pr. 191; Alexander v. Kattle, 63 How. Pr. 262; Kelly v. Downing, 42 N. Y. 71.

Mr. L. J. Morrison, for respondent:

Defendant's predecessor in the bishopric was personally liable to plaintiff as employer under an express contract.

Where services are performed at the request of another, the law implies a promise to pay, on the part of the person requesting performance.

Williams v. Hutchinson, 3 N. Y. 312, 53 Am. Dec. 801; Wood, Mast. & S. § 67; 1 Parsons, Contr. 446.

As the employment of plaintiff was pursuant to the constitution, rules, regulations, and ordinances of the church, they necessarily bound both plaintiff and the bishop in so far as they established contractual relations, as under similar conditions the courts have held that the by-laws of the association made under authority of the constitution have this effect.
40 L. R. A.

Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159; Flint v. Pierce, 99 Mass. 68, 96 Am. Dec. 691; Cummings v. Webster, 43 Me. 198.

The title to the church property is vested in the bishop individually, upon the trust and confidence that he will apply it for the purpose intended, and the acceptance of the property by the appellant with the knowledge of its character constitutes an agreement on his part that he will use it for the purposes intended.

1 Perry, Tr. § 95; Baldwin v. Humphrey, 44 N. Y. 609; Ryan v. Dox, 84 N. Y. 807, 90 Am. Dec. 696; Despard v. Walbridge, 15 N. Y. 874; Wood v. Rebe, 96 N. Y. 414, 48 Am. Rep. 640.

The appellant occupies the same position logically and equitably as that of a devisee or legatee charged with certain payments, who becomes personally bound by accepting the devise or legacy.

Gridley v. Gridley, 24 N. Y. 180; Taylor v. Dodd, 58 N. Y. 335; Brown v. Knapp, 79 N. Y. 186; Ettler v. Greenawalt, 98 Pa. 422; Dodge v. Manning, 1 N. Y. 298.

In determining the adequacy of a consideration the extent or benefit derivable therefrom is not considered; a value, however small or nominal, if given or stipulated in good faith, is sufficient to support an action.

Hubbard v. Coolidge, 1 Met. 84; Hind v. Holdship, 2 Watts, 104, 26 Am. Dec. 107; Randle v. Harris, 6 Yerg. 508; Kidder v. Chamberlin, 41 Vt. 62; Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. 426, 11 L. ed. 326; Follett v. Rose, 8 McLean, 332; Stewart v. State, Riggin, 2 Harr. & G. 114; Brachan v. Griffin, 3 Call (Va.) 484.

The transfer of the property to the appellant was a good consideration for his promise to pay the debts of the deceased contracted with respect to the property transferred.

Austin v. Munro, 47 N. Y. 360; Davis v. Staper, 58 N. Y. 473.

All of this property has been transferred and handed over to the appellant upon his agreement to discharge the liabilities of the testator incurred in respect thereto. As the property transferred to appellant was the fund out of which a court of equity in marshaling the assets and liabilities of the deceased bishop's estate would have decreed the payment to respondent, the liability assumed by appellant accords with the equities (Gifford v. Corrigan, 117 N. Y. 258, 6 L. R. A. 610), and the transfer of the property in advance of the settlement of the estate is a good consideration for the promise of the appellant.

Oakley v. Boorman, 21 Wend. 588; Harlan v. Harlan, 20 Pa. 308; Clark v. Gaylord, 24 Conn. 484; Powell v. Brown, 3 Johns. 100; Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268; Chitty, Contr. 8d Am. ed. p. 29; Todd v. Weber, 95 N. Y. 181, 47 Am. Rep. 20; Van Loan v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Assn. 90 N. Y. 280; First Nat. Bank v. Chalmers, 144 N. Y. 432.

If this church property is to be treated as a part of the decedent's general estate for the purposes of administration, the executor, by voluntarily handing over the personal property bequeathed before duly ascertaining and paying debts, assumed a personal risk.

The general rule is, where an executor volunteers to pay the whole or any portion of a legacy, and it subsequently turns out that the assets are not sufficient to justify a payment to that extent, the loss must fall on him, and he cannot compel the legatee to refund.

Redfield's Sur. Practice, p. 632; Re Underhill, 117 N. Y. 471.

Therefore the agreement of the appellant to pay the debts contracted by his predecessor in respect to the property bequeathed was based upon a valuable consideration within the rule as laid down by this and other courts.

Sands v. Crooke, 48 N. Y. 564; Cary v. White, 52 N. Y. 138; Weaver v. Barden, 49 N. Y. 286; Chrysler v. Renois, 43 N. Y. 209; Cardell v. Hicks, 87 Barb. 458; Pond v. Starkweather, 99 N. Y. 411; Beckwith v. Brackett, 97 N. Y. 52; Morehouse v. Second Nat. Bank, 98 N. Y. 503; Todd v. Weber, 95 N. Y. 181, 47 Am. Rep. 20; Dunham v. Griswold, 100 N. Y. 224; Traders' Bank v. Bradner, 43 Barb. 379; Brown v. Leavitt, 31 N. Y. 113; Leonard v. Duffin, 94 Pa. 218; Austyn v. M'Lure, 4 Dall. 227, 1 L. ed. 811; Snow v. Hiz, 54 Vt. 478; Gove v. Newton, 58 N. H. 359; Hall v. Wear, 92 U. S. 728, 23 L. ed. 500; Harmon v. Adams, 120 U. S. 368, 30 L. ed. 683; Rogers v. Union Stone Co. 184 Mass. 31; Washburne v. Pintsch, 17 Fed. Rep. 582; Ware v. Morgan, 67 Ala. 461; Howe v. Taggart, 183 Mass. 284; Memphis v. Brown, 20 Wall. 289, 22 L. ed. 264; Sinclair v. Redington, 58 N. H. 364; Planters' Bank v. Union Bank, 16 Wall. 483, 21 L. ed. 478; Dawson v. Beall, 68 Ga. 328; Ring v. Kelly, 10 Mo. App. 411; Wharton v. Anderson, 28 Minn. 301; Little v. Allen, 56 Tex. 133; Flannagan v. Kilcome, 58 N. H. 443.

Treating the church property as a part of the general estate of the deceased bishop applicable to the payment of his debts, the executor of the estate assumed a risk or liability in parting with it before the debts had been paid, which is a sufficient consideration to support the promise of the appellant to pay certain debts existing against the estate.

Hannigan v. Allen, 127 N. Y. 639; Arnold v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 117; Dingeldein v. Third Ave. R. Co. 37 N. Y. 575; Kingsbury v. Earle, 27 Hun. 141; Snell v. Ives, 85 Ill. 279.

It is immaterial whether the promisee is the estate of the late bishop or the church, if the appellant as promisor was in receipt of any consideration for the promise made by him (Coster v. Albany, 43 N. Y. 399). It is the agreement made for the benefit of respondent as a third party which gives the right of recovery.

Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268.

An individual who enters a partnership, or succeeds to the business of a sole trader, may make himself liable for debts which accrued prior to his becoming a partner or succeeding to the business of a sole trader.

Hall v. Herter Bros. 83 Hun. 19; Hannigan v. Allen, 127 N. Y. 639; Dingeldein v. Third Ave. R. Co. 37 N. Y. 575.

The question for this court to determine is whether, assuming all the facts alleged to be true, enough has been well stated to constitute any cause of action.

Sage v. Culver, 147 N. Y. 241.

40 L. R. A.

The duties performed by respondent were performed for the benefit of the church, and hence appellant's agreement, on accepting the church property, to pay debts and liabilities incurred by his predecessor "in behalf of the church," was by its terms an agreement to pay the debts existing in favor of respondent, incurred partly by his predecessor and partly by appellant in continuing to accept respondent's services after the death of the former bishop.

Coster v. Albany, 43 N. Y. 399.

If either cause of action set forth in the complaint contains facts sufficient to entitle respondent to recover, then the respondent is in a position to have his issue of law determined upon his demurrer to the separate defense pleaded by appellant.

Wheeler v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 82 N. Y. 543; Boyle v. Brooklyn, 71 N. Y. 1.

No judgment of any court not existing under governmental sanction can, proprio vigore, be binding where its decision purports to be an adjudication of property rights simply.

Const. art. 6, § 19; People, Townsend, v. Porter, 90 N. Y. 68; Dunston v. Higgins, 138 N. Y. 76, 20 L. R. A. 668; 3 Bl. Com. 23; Hobart v. Hobart, 45 Iowa. 501; Glass v. The Betsey, 8 Dall. 8, 1 L. ed. 486.

Nor can consent of parties confer jurisdiction.

Coffin v. Tracy, 3 Cal. 129; Dudley v. Mayhew, 3 N. Y. 9.

The contention that there is in any way a question of church law involved is not borne out by the record.

The burden, of course, is upon respondent to prove the existence of those rules as pleaded, and also to establish the fact that his agreement was made with reference thereto.

State v. Overton, 24 N. J. L. 440, 61 Am. Dec. 671; Com. v. Worcester, 3 Pick. 463.

The authority of an organization, church or otherwise, to take action which affects the rights of its members, must be pursuant to some by-law or rule reasonable in character, not opposed to the law of the land, and passed or assented to by its members by virtue of its charter or constitution.

Austin v. Searing, 16 N. Y. 112, 69 Am. Dec. 665.

Whether or not the church was duly organized is a question to be determined by the court on the facts.

Graham v. Machado, 6 Duer. 517; Myers v. Machado, 6 Abb. Pr. 198.

It is not enough to allege in general terms that the court had jurisdiction, but the facts on which jurisdiction depends must be pleaded.

Turner v. Roby, 3 N. Y. 198; McLaughlin v. Nichols, 13 Abb. Pr. 244.

Where property rights are involved the ecclesiastical courts have no power whatever to pass upon them so as to bind the civil courts. 2 Black, Judgm. § 523; Watson v. Garvin, 54 Mo. 353.

The appellant is in no position to urge the decision of the church tribunal as an arbitration and award.

The adjudication is not pleaded as an arbitration and award, nor are the facts essential to such a defense alleged in the answer.

Brazill v. Isham, 13 N. Y. 9; Estee, Pl.

Pomeroy's 8d ed. § 8239, p. 492; Denny v. Smith, 18 N. Y. 567; Lorenzo v. Deery, 26 Hun, 447; Gihon v. Levy, 2 Duer, 176.

Vann, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

While the question certified to us for decision involves, directly, the sufficiency of the third defense set forth in the answer, it involves, indirectly, as we have held, the sufficiency of the complaint also. Barter v. McDonnell, 154 N. Y. 482. When reduced to their simplest form, the substantial allegations of the first cause of action purporting to be alleged are that, by the rules and regulations of the Holy Roman Catholic Church in the diocese of Brooklyn, the bishop holds all its property in his own name, as trustee for its benefit, and is liable individually upon all contracts for services rendered or materials furnished to the church; that each priest assigned to duty is authorized to hold the bishop individually liable for his salary, and that it is the duty of the bishop to provide by will for the devolution of all the trust property to the church or to his successor; that in September, 1885, the plaintiff was appointed pastor of a parish in said diocese by Bishop Loughlin, who died in December, 1891, after devising and bequeathing all the trust property held by him for the church to his successor in the bishopric; that in May, 1892, the defendant was installed as bishop, and soon after received the trust property subject to the trust upon which his predecessor had held it, and upon accepting the same on his installation as bishop agreed, by virtue of the law of the church, to pay all debts incurred and to perform all contracts entered into by the late bishop in behalf of the church, in the same manner and to the same extent as if the debts had been incurred and the contracts entered into by himself. There were further allegations to the effect that, upon this basis of liability, the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in a certain amount. The second cause of action is based on the assignment of the plaintiff to duty as chaplain of a hospital, made by the defendant on the 4th of December, 1892, and it is claimed that by virtue thereof he became entitled, under the constitution and ordinances of the church, to a salary of $1,000 per annum, and that the defendant is indebted to him for the balance unpaid on that basis.

Thus, in both counts of the complaint the liability of the defendant is founded upon a promise implied, as it is claimed, from the law of the church. In the first count two promises are said to arise therefrom, one on the part of Bishop Loughlin to become personally liable for the salary of the priests, and the other on the part of Bishop McDonnell to discharge the obligations assumed by his predecessor in office. The theory of the complaint is that, while the bishop holds the property of the church in trust for its benefit, he is personally liable for all services rendered to it in his diocese. No express agreement to that effect is alleged, but simply one to be implied from the rules and regulations of the church. No consideration is suggested, unless one springs from the relation of trust existing between the bishop and the church, and that relation is dependent upon the law of the church. Yet there is nothing to show the nature of the church except as it may be implied from its name and the names given to certain of its officers. There are no allegations as to its civil rights, power, or capacity. We cannot tell from the complaint, which is our sole guide, whether it is a corporation, a voluntary association, or a mere name adopted by the pleader for some purpose undisclosed. What it is, what it can do, and what can be done to it; whether it can become the beneficiary of a trust and enforce its rights as such, or sue and be sued,—are not made known to us. No valid trust is alleged, unless the church is shown to be a body capable of making a contract and suing to enforce it. A trust created by the rules of a church which is not shown capable of making contracts, accepting benefits, or compelling performance, is not recognized by the law. The pleader seems to have assumed that the court would take judicial notice of the nature and powers of the Holy Roman Catholic Church, so far as its civil rights and duties are concerned, without any averment or proof upon the subject. Judicial notice is to be taken with caution, and every reasonable doubt as to the propriety of its exercise in a given case should be resolved against it. Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 87, 23 L. ed. 200; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 151. According to the general practice of the courts in all jurisdictions, proof has been required upon the subject of church rights and powers, and whatever is to be proved must be alleged. Even if we should attempt to take judicial notice of the legal powers and duties of the church, it is doubtful whether the result would aid the plaintiff. Thus, Judge Strong, in his work on Relations of Civil Law to Church Polity, says: "A very large portion of the religious societies in the country are unincorporated, and in a few of the states charters cannot be obtained for them. They are, therefore, not legal entities, recognized as having a legal existence. They can neither sue nor be sued in civil courts. They cannot hold property directly, yet they may control property held by others for their use. Donations and grants may be legally made to trustees for the use and benefit of an unincorporated religious society, or for the support of the gospel ministry in connection with any particular church." P. 71. "There is still another mode in which property is largely held in this country for religious or church uses. In the Moravian congregations the property devoted to pious uses is held neither by a corporation nor by trustees, nor yet by the congregation itself. In some of the congregations, and I presume in all, the title to the churches, schoolhouses, and cemeteries is held by the bishop, who transmits it by will to his successor in office. And such is the tenure of most Roman Catholic churches in the country. The title to the real estate resides in the bishop of the diocese. In a certain sense he is a trustee thereof for religious uses, but there is no declaration of trust, and he controls the enjoyment and transmits the title by devise. The purpose of this arrangement is to exclude the laity from that power of interference which they would have were the title vested in a corporation. But, inasmuch as the holders of such titles are not corporations, either sole or aggregate, as are the English bishops, deans, and even parsons, lands held by them do not pass to their successors in office unless through the instrumentality of a deed or will." P. 109.

We have been referred to no statute authorizing the incorporation of the church at large. By chapter 45 of the Laws of 1863, provision was made for the incorporation of Roman Catholic churches, and for the government thereof, but it is confined to a congregation, society, or assemblage of persons accustomed to stately meet for divine worship. This is now embodied in the religious corporations law, which also provides for the incorporation of ecclesiastical bodies with governing authority over churches. Laws 1895, chap. 723, §§ 14, 50, 51; Laws 1878, chap. 110; Laws 1886, chap. 210; Laws 1882, chap. 28.

Under the act of 1813, both real and personal property may be held in trust for the use of an unincorporated religious society without any restriction as to time, except that it shall terminate upon the lawful incorporation of the religious society, when, by virtue of the act, the title vests in the corporation. Laws 1813, chap. 60, § 4. This also refers to congregations, and not to the church at large. Indeed, in Petty v. Tooker, 21 N. Y. 267, 270, it was held that the existence of the church proper as an organized body is not recognized by the municipal law. In Van Buren v. Reformed Church, 62 Barb. 495, 497, it was said: "In order to give an organization for public worship legal rights, and to impose on it legal obligations as a corporate body, there must be a special law declaring its existence, or there must be an incorporation under the provisions of the general law relating to religious societies." And in Hardin v. Second Baptist Church, 51 Mich. 137, 47 Am. Rep. 555, Judge Cooley said: "The church is not incorporated, and has nothing whatever to do with the temporalities. It does not control the property or the trustees; it can receive nobody into the society and can expel nobody from it. On the other hand, the corporation has nothing to do with the church except as it provides for the church wants. It cannot alter the church faith or covenant, it cannot receive members, it cannot expel members, it cannot prevent the church from receiving or expelling whomsoever that body shall see fit to receive or expel." In Silsby v. Barton, 16 Gray, 329, it was said that "churches are not corporate bodies, and commonly have no occasion for the exercise of corporate powers." Kynett and Cotton, in their work on Churches and Other Religious Societies, say that "these two bodies, namely, the religious corporation and the church, although one may exist within the pale of the other, are in no respect correlative. The objects and interests of the one are moral and spiritual; the other deals exclusively with things temporal and material. Each as a body is entirely independent and free from any direct control or interference by the other. . . . The church by the nature of its organization may be entirely independent of other ecclesiastical associations, or may be a subordinate part of some general organization or denomination in which there are superior ecclesiastical tribunals, with general and ultimate power of control, more or less complete, in some superior judicature, over the whole membership of the general organization." These citations show the danger of an attempt to take judicial notice of what the civil rights of the Holy Roman Catholic Church are, and emphasize the necessity of allegations in the complaint as the basis of evidence upon the subject.

40 L. R. A.

We have no statute to guide us upon the assumption that, by implication, it is part of the complaint. If, instead of the Holy Roman Catholic Church, the pleader had made use of an abstract term or a name that might be applied to various organizations, incorporated or voluntary, the complaint would have had the same effect as a pleading that it now has. If, wherever the word "church" appears, by its full name or otherwise, a mere abstraction had been used, as, for the sake of illustration, the letter "X," the complaint would then allege that by virtue of the rules and regulations of "X" the defendant assumed certain obligations and the plaintiff became entitled to certain rights, yet no one would seriously contend that such allegations constituted a cause of action. The defendant cannot be held liable on the contracts of his predecessor, unless he has expressly agreed in proper form and for a sufficient consideration to become liable thereupon. An agreement by one person to become liable for the debts of another must be an express promise in writing, and cannot arise by implication from the fact of membership in an organization having rules to that effect. The personal contracts of a bishop are the same as those of a layman, so far as their form, force, and effect are concerned. This is true of his engagements as trustee. The same evidence is required to constitute a "church trust," and to bind a bishop as trustee thereof, as would be required in the case of a layman alleged to be a trustee, under like circumstances. The mere receipt of property by one person alleged to be the trustee of such a trust, under the will of another person alleged to have been the preceding trustee thereof, forms no consideration for a promise subsequently made by the former, as an individual, to or for the benefit of third persons. No promise in any form is alleged to have been made by the defendant to the plaintiff, but simply a general promise, made to the church, as we read the complaint, by virtue of its rules and regulations. The promise could not have been made to Bishop Loughlin, for he was not alive when it is said to have been made. A promise made to pay the personal debts of the deceased bishop out of trust funds could not be enforced, as it would be a misappropriation. If, as alleged, Bishop Loughlin was individually liable to the plaintiff for his salary, that individual liability could be enforced against his individual estate by the usual procedure against his personal representatives. We find no trust set forth that is capable of enforcement, but simply a moral obligation, dependent entirely upon the integrity of the bishop. For aught that appears, the church at large depends wholly upon moral power to carry on its functions, without appealing to the civil authorities for aid, either through the legislature or the courts. The complaint alleges.

no common-law, equitable, or statutory cause of action. If all averments relating to the rules and regulations of the church were stricken out, nothing of substance would remain upon which the defendant could be held liable. No force can be given to the rules and regulations as alleged, because there is no allegation as to the civil standing, position, or rights of the body that is supposed to have made them. Even if an express promise had been made by the deceased bishop, as an individual, to the plaintiff, instead of a promise implied from the usages of the church, there would have been no consideration to support an agreement by the defendant, as an individual, to carry out the promise made by his predecessor. The receipt of trust property by him, as trustee, constitutes no consideration for an individual promise. In other words, the defendant cannot be held liable as trustee of the church to use trust funds to pay the individual debts of Bishop Loughlin, for that would be an unlawful use of trust funds, and he cannot be held liable as an individual to pay those debts for the want of a sufficient consideration and an express promise in proper form.

The claim of the respondent, that the bishop individually is the employer of the plaintiff, and liable as such for his compensation, is not sustained by the complaint. The legal relation of master and servant is not alleged, either expressly or impliedly; for, according to the complaint, the bishop, as such, holds the property of the church in trust, and has the power to assign priests to duty, but is liable as an individual, and not as trustee, for the services of the priests upon such assignments, by virtue of the laws of the church, and not through his personal promise. Obviously this relation is in no sense that of master and servant, but that of an ecclesiastical superior and inferior, with an alleged obligation arising from the laws of the church on the part of the former to become personally liable for the services rendered by the latter to the church. The relation of priest and congregation is not involved, but that of priest and bishop.

This subject was considered in Twigg v. Sheehan, 101 Pa. 363, 47 Am. Rep. 727, where a priest sued his bishop for salary, and the canon law bearing on the organization of the church and the relation of the priesthood and the bishops was before the court. The trial court found that the plaintiff was entitled to a salary of $800 per year under the common law of the church, which guaranteed him a support when he was ordained as priest. The supreme court, however, held that, while the organic law of the Roman Catholic Church was to the effect that the church was bound to provide a decent support for its priests, this did not constitute an implied contract on the part of the bishop of the diocese to support the priests therein; that no priest, in the absence of an express contract, could bring assumpsit against his bishop for an amount sufficient to decently support him; and that the relation between a Roman Catholic bishop and priest is not that of hirer and hired or principal and agent. In deciding the case the court said: "The plaintiff alleges that the law of his church creates a duty from which springs an implied contract on the part of the bishop to support him so long as he remained a priest of the diocese, and was not convicted of any offense or suspended from his priestly functions. Is this position sound? The obvious test is to reverse the position, and treat this as a suit by the bishop to recover damages from the plaintiff for a failure to perform his priestly functions, or any duty prescribed by his ordination vows. No one will contend that such a suit could be maintained. The plaintiff can lay down his office and its duties at pleasure. For doing so he could only be visited with ecclesiastical censure, and such punishment, if any, as the canons of the church prescribe. The bishop would have no remedy in the courts of law. It will thus be seen that there is no mutuality. . . . It would be doing a wrong to the Catholic Church, and degrade its priesthood from their high position, were we to hold that the relation between the bishop and his priest was that of hirer or hired, or employer and employee. The moving consideration in such contracts is the pecuniary advantages flowing from the relation. When a priest dedicates his life to the church, and takes upon himself the vows of obedience to its laws, he is presumed to be actuated by a higher principle than the hope of gain. Where he has an actual contract with his congregation or his bishop for a salary, it may be enforced as any other contract; but where he relies upon the duty of his church to support him, he must invoke the aid of the church if he seeks redress." In Rose v. Vertin, 46 Mich. 457, 41 Am. Rep. 174, it was held that a bishop is not liable for the salary of a priest whom he has engaged, and that they are fellow servants of the church, for which the bishop acts merely as a superior agent, and not as a principal. The learned justices united in saying that "the bishop was the priest's superior, and according to the established order of things in the economy of the church government, regulating the degrees of subordination and the methods of administration; it was the province of the bishop to designate the place for the priest to exercise his functions, and prescribe, under certain limitations, the rules and precepts for his guidance and control. But both were common servants of the church, and the service of the priest was not a service for the bishop, nor was the bishop, in respect to the employment, a principal. . . . Men are constantly going into positions under appointment by superior agents, and where no liability for compensation rests on the employing agent, and the means of payment, if they come at all, are to come from another source. Cases of illustration are infinite. They abound in business operations, and marked instances may be seen in the great missionary enterprises which are carried on. No one supposes the existence of a legal liability on the part of the appointing agency." In First Soc. of M. E. Church v. Clark, 41 Mich. 730, 737, it was declared that, "where there is no incorporation, those who deal with the church must trust for the performance of civil obligations to the honor and good faith of the members." See also Hoffman, Ecc. Law, 141, 145; Andrews, Church Law, 4, 57; Humph. Church Law, 2, 62. Without prolonging the discussion, we announce as our conclusion that the complaint does not set forth a cause of action, and that for this reason the third defense pleaded in the answer is sufficient, for, when the complaint is defective, the answer is not demurrable. Baxter v. McDonnell, 154 N. Y. 482, 486.

It is therefore our duty to reverse the judgments of the courts below, and to overrule the demurrer to the third defense set up in the answer, with costs, and, under the circumstances, to answer the question certified, as to the insufficiency of said defense, in the negative.

Haight, J., concurring:

I think that the question submitted to us, namely, whether the third defense interposed by the defendant is good in law upon its face to constitute a defense, should be directly decided. It is true that, where there is a defect in the plaintiff's complaint, he is not in a position to assail the sufficiency of his opponent's answer. But the defendant may waive defects in the complaint by omitting to call attention to them, or in not having questions with reference thereto certified to this court to be answered. Code Civ. Proc. § 190, subd. 2. The plaintiff does not count upon any express agreement or contract, but upon a claim founded wholly upon church laws or customs. The defense is that the plaintiff himself, prior to the commencement of this action, brought suit against the defendant for the same cause in the metropolitan court of the diocese, that being an ecclesiastical court possessing jurisdiction as such over the parties and the subject-matter of the controversy; that the cause was duly heard in that court and decided. The precise question is whether such a defense to such a cause of action or claim is good in law. Judge Bradley, in the court below, conceded that the plaintiff was bound by the determination of that tribunal so far as related to the matter of discipline and ecclesiastical rules, laws, and customs of church government; and, when rights of property are dependent upon the questions of doctrine, discipline, or church government, the civil court will treat the determination made in the highest tribunal within the church as controlling. Watson v. Jones, 18 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666; Connitt v. Reformed Prot. Dutch Church, 54 N. Y. 551.

But he was of the opinion that that tribunal did not have jurisdiction to determine other civil and temporal rights. We need not question this rule. As we have seen, the plaintiff has alleged no express contract. He claims under some custom or law of the church that he should be paid a salary, as a priest, of $1,000 40 L. R. A.

per year. by the bishop. Here the plaintiff asks the civil courts to examine and pass upon questions growing out of his relations to the church and the bishop, as one of the priests of the diocese. In such a case, when it appears that the whole controversy has once been submitted by the parties to the ecclesiastical tribunal which the church itself has organized for that purpose, the civil courts are justified in refusing to proceed any further. The decision of the church judicatory may and should then be treated as a bar to the action and a good defense in law. When an individual joins an incorporated club or legally organized body with power to make laws and rules for its own government and for the regulation of the conduct of its members, the member becomes bound by those laws and rules, and a decision by the body or a duly constituted committee, proceeding according to judicial forms, touching his rights or relations as a member, is binding upon the courts. A priest or minister of any church, by assuming that relation, necessarily subjects his conduct in that capacity to the laws and customs of the ecclesiastical body from which he derives his office and in whose name he exercises his functions; and when he submits questions concerning his rights, duties, and obligations as such priest or minister to the proper church judicatory, and they have been heard and decided according to the prescribed forms, such decision is binding upon him and will be respected by the civil courts. The decisions of the courts in this country are substantially in accordance with this view. Habler v. Produce Exchange, 149 N. Y. 414; People, Johnson, v. New York Produce Exchange, 149 N. Y. 401; O'Hara v. Stack, 90 Pa. 477; Stack v. O'Hara, 98 Pa. 213; Tuigg v. Sheehan, 101 Pa. 363, 47 Am. Rep. 727; Kerr's Appeal, 89 Pa. 97; Rose v. Vertin, 46 Mich. 457, 41 Am. Rep. 174; Chase v. Cheney, 58 Ill. 509, 11 Am. Rep. 95; People, Meads, v. McDonough, 8 App. Div. 591.

He can always insist, of course, that his civil or property rights as an individual or citizen shall be determined according to the law of the land; but his relations, rights, and obligations arising from his position as a member of some religious body may be determined according to the laws and procedure enacted by that body for such purpose. The question should be answered in the negative, and the judgment reversed, and the demurrer overruled, with costs.

Parker, Ch. J., and O'Brien, and Bartlett, J.J., concur with both opinions. Martin, J., concurs with Vann, J., Gray, J., absent.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

OKLAHOMA AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL COLLEGE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Charles F. WILLIS et al.

(Okla.)

The Agricultural and Mechanical College, which is strictly a public or quasi corporation, created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the territory of Oklahoma, cannot, in the absence of express statutory authority therefor, be sued, and no such authority exists in this territory; hence said institution cannot be sued.

(February 12, 1898.)

ERROR to the District Court for Payne County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover the contract price of labor and materials furnished by plaintiffs to defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. A. Galbraith, Attorney General, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. King & Hutto for defendants in error.

Keaton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Several assignments of error are urged by counsel, but, under our view of this case, it is not only unnecessary, but would be improper, for us to pass upon any of the assignments argued. The judgment complained of, omitting certain formal parts, is as follows: "It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that the plaintiffs, Charles F. Willis and W. R. Bradford, have and recover of the defendant, the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, the sum of six hundred ten and $\frac{10}{100}$ dollars, and that the same bear interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum from this date, and for the further sum of ——— dollars as the cost of this suit; and thereon let execution issue after thirty days from this date,—to all of which the defendant excepts."

It is strenuously insisted that, as there is no statute of this territory expressly authorizing the issuance of executions against the property of public corporations, no execution can run against such property; and we think there is much force in this contention, although the authorities thereon are very much divided. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 576. But, although the position has not been urged, or even referred to, by counsel for plaintiff in error, I am convinced that we must go further, and hold that no action can be maintained against the defendant, for the reason that there is no statute authorizing it to sue or be sued. That defendant is a public corporation under the laws of the territory of Oklahoma there can be no doubt. Section 143, Okla. Stat. 1893, provides: "The institution shall be known as the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, and shall be an institution corporate under the laws of Oklahoma; and the government and management thereof is hereby vested in a board of regents, to be known as the 'Agricultural and Mechanical College Board of Regents.'" In addition to the foregoing express provision, said college is to be supported entirely from public funds, and is under the direct and almost immediate control of the territorial legislature. See §§ 151, 159, 485-887, 889, Id.

The question of whether or not defendant can be sued, being a jurisdictional one, must be first determined, although not specifically called to our attention; and, as we hold that no suit can be maintained against said defendant, any opinions which we might express upon the points argued by counsel would be mere dicta; hence we confine this opinion to the one proposition necessary for a decision of the cause. In the celebrated case of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, Chief Justice Marshall, delivering the opinion of the majority of the court, uses the following language: "That education is an object of national concern, and a proper subject of legislation, all admit. That there may be an institution, founded by government, and placed entirely under its immediate control, the officers of which would be public officers, amenable exclusively to government, none will deny." And in the same case Justice Story, in a very able concurring opinion says: "Public corporations are generally esteemed such as exist for public political purposes only, such as towns, cities, parishes, and counties, and in many respects they are so, although they involve some private interests; but, strictly speaking, public corporations are such only as are founded by the government for public purposes, where the whole interests belong also to the government." 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629. It will be readily observed that defendant is strictly a public or quasi corporation. The members of its managing board (board of regents) are public officers, appointed by the governor and legislative council of the territory; their terms of office and compensation for services performed being definitely fixed by statute. Stat. 1893, §§ 148, 150. In fact, as before stated, it is strictly and entirely a territorial institution, having been created by legislative enactment for public purposes only, being managed and controlled exclusively by and under legislative authority, and deriving its whole support from public funds.

As to the distinctions between public and private corporations, and between the different classes of public corporations, it is said by an eminent text-writer that "all corporations intended as agencies in the administration of civil government are public, as distinguished from private, corporations. Thus, an incorporated school district or county, as well as city, is a public corporation; but the school district or county, properly speaking, is not, while the city is, a municipal corporation. All

*Headnote by KEATON, J.

NOTE.—As to the nature of incorporated institutions belonging to the state, see note to State, Little, v. Board of Regents (Kan.) 20 L. R. A. 378; 40 L. R. A.

also Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. (Minn.) 20 L. R. A. 708; Sterling v. Regents of University (Mich.) 84 L. R. A. 150.

municipal corporations are public bodies, created for civil or political purposes; but all civil, political, or public corporations are not, in the proper use of language, municipal corporations. The phrase 'municipal corporations,' in the contemplation of this treatise, has reference to incorporated villages, towns, and cities, with power of local administration, as distinguished from other public corporations, such as counties and quasi corporations." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 22. See also Id. §§ 23-26; Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109; Finch v. Toledo Bd. of Edu., 30 Ohio St. 37, 27 Am. Rep. 414; Manuel v. Cumberland County Comrs. 98 N. C. 9; Doddall v. Olmsted County, 30 Minn. 96, 44 Am. Rep. 185; Eustman v. Clackamas Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 24. In Finch v. Toledo Bd. of Edu. 30 Ohio St. 37, 27 Am. Rep. 414, it is said: "City and village school districts constitute a part of the state policy in promoting and fostering common schools, and have become state agencies in the school system of education contemplated in the Constitution. . . . Owing to the very limited number of corporate powers conferred on them, boards of education rank low in the grade of corporate existence, and hence are properly denominated 'quasi corporations.' This designation distinguishes this grade of corporations from municipal corporations, such as cities and towns, acting under charters or incorporating statutes, which are vested with more extended powers and a larger measure of corporate life. This superior grade, from the nature of their organization, benefits received, and power to raise needed funds, are held responsible by the common law, for private personal injuries caused by their own negligence, or that of their servants, while the inferior grade of public quasi corporations are liable for damages resulting from their negligence, only where made so by express legislation. This grade includes the defendant. It possesses but limited powers and a small corporate life,—a corporation in some sense political, but in no sense a municipal, corporation."

As already seen, the various sections of the acts creating and locating this institution, and authorizing the issuance of bonds and the levying of taxes for the erection and support thereof, provide how, by whom, and for what purposes all the funds appropriated for its use shall be disposed of. While § 147, Stat. 1893, authorizes it to take title to real estate, make contracts, locate and erect buildings, "and do all things necessary to make the college effective as an educational institution," yet it does not follow, from the granting of these powers, that the corporation can be sued. In the absence of statutory authority therefore, it is the rule of the common law, adhered to by most, if not all, of the American states, that no suit can be brought—much less, execution issue—against a corporation which is strictly public, generally called a "quasi municipal corporation," such as a county, school district, or road district. "In this case a sovereign is one of the contracting parties; for the government of the county of Contra Costa is a portion of the state government, and, as against a sovereign, there are no remedies except such as the sovereign, in the exercise of that good faith by which all governments are presumed to be actuated, may accord. The state government, neither in its general nor its local capacity, can be sued by her creditors, or made amenable to judicial process, except by her own consent. Her creditors must rely solely upon her good faith, as to the time, mode, and measure of payment. . . . At the time the contract was made between Gilman and the state, as represented in the local government of Contra Costa county, no remedies, in a judicial sense, existed either against the state or county. . . . The subsequent passage of the act by which persons holding claims against counties were allowed to sue them, when such claims were rejected by the county government, did not at all improve the condition of Gilman or his assignee in this respect, nor add to the obligation of the state or county to pay his claim. A judgment, under that act, against a county, only had the effect of converting a disputed into an audited claim. . . . Beyond the entry of judgment the judiciary were not authorized to proceed, and hence in respect to payment, Gilman and his assignee had no higher claim after he obtained his judgment than before, and, as before, was still dependent upon the good faith of the state. His remedy—if remedy it may be called—still lay in the voluntary exercise of the taxing power by the state. In other words, the state, by reason of her sovereignty, still held control of the question of payment as to all its incidents of time, mode, and measure." Sharp v. Contra Costa County, 34 Cal. 284; Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 8 Cal. 53, 48 Am. Dec. 290; Emerie v. Gilman, 10 Cal. 404, 70 Am. Dec. 742; Hunsaker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 288, 63 Am. Dec. 130. "Counties being merely parts of the state government, they partake of the state's immunity from liability. The state is not liable, except by its own consent; and so the county is exempt from liability, unless the state has consented. Counties are not liable to implied common-law liabilities as municipal corporations are." 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 359; Claiborne County v. Brooks, 111 U. S. 400, 28 L. ed. 470. "As has been already stated, the county is a creation of the legislature and a part of the sovereign government, and as such it cannot be sued except by the consent of the state. Therefore persons dealing with a county, for whose liabilities the legislature has provided no means of enforcement, must rely wholly upon its good faith, or they must seek a remedy by application to the legislature." 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 369, and cases cited in notes 4-6. In Rusack v. Davenport, 6 Iowa, 443, doubt was expressed whether in this state, and under our statutes, a road district could sue or be sued as a corporation. . . . We have no law declaring that each district shall constitute or be a body corporate, capable of suing and being sued. Nor is there any statute giving them the power to sue, or making them liable to a civil action. It is provided that each road district shall be responsible for all damages sustained by any person in consequence of defects in the roads and bridges in said districts. . . . Beyond this, there is nothing to indicate that they are to be treated as corporations; nor is there any provision as to how they are to be made responsible for the damages sustained in consequence of defects in roads and bridges. Under such circumstances, we are of the opinion that a road district cannot become a party in a court of justice in this state, as a corporation, quasi or otherwise." White v. Road Dist. No. 1, 9 Iowa, 202.

It seemingly needs no argument to show that the public educational institutions of a state are as much a part of its sovereignty as are its counties. If defendant can be sued, so can all the other territorial educational institutions. The established rule of law, as well as the civil political policy of almost every state in the Union, forbid such suits, and we have no disposition to vary this rule, which is so well founded both in reason and authority, so as to except therefrom the young, though thriving, educational institutions of this territory. To hold that these institutions can be sued, and the property held by them for the most important of all public purposes seized under execution, attachment, and other such process, would be to greatly impede their progress and usefulness, while it has ever been the policy of our people, through their legislative assemblies, to foster and encourage them in every proper way. The obligations of the defendant in the case at bar are the obligations of the territory (§ 185, hereinbefore cited); and to the territory its creditors must look for payment, where there is no fund appropriated for the payment of their claims. If a fund exists for the payment of any just claim against defendant, and the board of regents refuse to audit same, I have no doubt but that the creditor can maintain an action in mandamus to compel the board to pass upon and properly audit such claim. Probably this board could be so compelled to audit such a demand, even though no fund existed out of which it could be paid; but, in this event, if his claim should be allowed, the claimant would have to look to the legislative power of the territory for payment. People, McCauley, v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11.

A similar question to the one under consideration was decided in Drake v. Oskaloosa Normal School, 11 Iowa, 54, wherein the plaintiff sued the board of trustees of the normal school at Oskaloosa, in their corporate capacity, "for work and labor done, and materials furnished in and about the erection of a house for the use of said school;" and the trial court sustained a demurrer to plaintiff's petition, which ruling was affirmed on appeal,—both courts holding that the action could not be maintained against the defendant as a corporation. In passing upon the question presented in that case, the supreme court says, in part, the following: "To hold that, under such circumstances, plaintiff could maintain this action against defendant named, would be in effect to disregard the general laws of the state, upon the subject of corporations, whether for pecuniary benefit or otherwise. There is no provision of law anywhere that either expressly or by implication recognizes the defendant sued in this case as a body capable of suing or being sued. . . . If it is asked, Has the plaintiff no remedy? we answer that we only determine that he has none against the defendant as named in this record. It may be that the persons contracting with him may be liable to him as individuals, or that he must look for compensation or aid to the lawmaking power of the state, or the liberality of the friends of education, and especially those disposed to encourage the school named. None of these questions do we undertake to determine."

In the statutes of some of the states is found a provision, under the general head of "Corporations," authorizing all public corporations to sue and be sued, unless expressly prohibited by the laws creating them and providing for their management and control. The statutes of Oklahoma contain no such general provision, but, on the contrary, it is provided that "public corporations are formed or organized for the government of a portion of the territory. Such corporations are regulated by local statute." Stat. 1898, § 925. For the reasons stated, the judgment of the District Court is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions that same be dismissed.

All the Justices concur, except Dale, Ch. J., who presided at the trial of the case below, and takes no part in this decision.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Stewart Spearman MACK, by Guardian ad Litem, Resp't.,
v.

SOUTH BOUND RAILROAD COMPANY,
Appt.

Barnett Salley MACK, Resp't.,
v.

SAME, Appt.

(.....S. C.....)

1. Evidence as to the failure to give statutory signals at road crossings is admissible in an action for injuries not received at a crossing, where reckless negligence in running a train is alleged.

NOTE.—As to freight as the basis of a cause of action, see note to Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 666; also Sloane v. South-40 L. R. A.

2. Irrelevant testimony will not require a reversal, if it was harmless.

3. Recovery for injuries occasioned by fright, which was caused by the negligence of a railroad company, can be had, although no physical injury was sustained except that caused by the fright.

4. A charge that the duty of a railroad company is greater to a minor than to an adult when on the track is not erroneous as a statement that mere minority exempts from the obligation to look and listen for a train.

ern California R. Co. (Cal.) 82 L. R. A. 198; Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. (N. Y.) 84 L. R. A. 781; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. (Mass.) 88 L. R. A. 512.

5. Punitive damages may be given for injury by a railroad train caused by gross negligence, recklessness, or wanton disregard or malice.

6. The killing of a mule by a train raises a presumption of negligence on the part of the railroad company.

(April 19, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from judgments of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Lexington County in favor of plaintiffs in actions brought to recover damages for personal injuries and for the killing of a mule which were alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. J. C. Hutson and William H. Lyles, for appellant:

It was error for his honor to allow the introduction of testimony as to failure to give the statutory signals at the Augusta and other road crossings.

Neely v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 83 S. C. 186; Barber v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 84 S. C. 444; Kinard v. Columbia, N. & L. R. Co. 89 S. C. 514.

A person using a railroad track as a foot-path for his own convenience, elsewhere than at a lawful crossing, and injured by a train while so doing, cannot recover damages of a railroad company, unless it be guilty of wanton or gross negligence.

Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 84 W. Va. 514, 11 L. R. A. 385.

Where a boy thirteen years old, and "apparently capable of appreciating the peril of his situation," is walking on the track in front of a locomotive, and there is an opportunity for him to avert the danger by stepping off, the engineer is justified in assuming that he will step off.

Meredith v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 108 N. C. 616; Sheehan v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 46 U. S. App. 498, 76 Fed. Rep. 201, 22 C. C. A. 121; Anderson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 87 Wis. 195; Wabash R. Co. v. Jones, 163 Ill. 167; 1 Thomp. Neg. p. 448; Cooley, Torts, p. 660.

Properly speaking, there is no positive duty owing from a railroad company to a trespasser on its track; it is not a part of its duty in exercising ordinary care in the operation of its road to provide against the possibility that trespassers may be on its track, and the extent of its duty is to refrain from wilful or deliberate injury. Except at crossings it has the right to an exclusive use of its track and premises, and is entitled to assume that they are clear; it is not bound to anticipate that persons will be on them or to make provision for the safety of such persons.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 935, 936; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Sympkins, 54 Tex. 615, 38 Am. Rep. 637; Little Schuylkill Nav. R. & Coal Co. v. Norton, 24 Pa. 465, 84 Am. Dec. 675; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummell, 44 Pa. 875, 84 Am. Dec. 460; Kelly v. Michigan C. R. Co. 65 Mich. 186; State, Ricketts, v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 69 Md. 494; McMullen v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 182 Pa. 107; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Vaughan, 93 Ala. 209; Atlanta & O. Air Line R. Co. v. Gravitt, 40 L. R. A.

93 Ga. 869, 26 L. R. A. 553; Burg v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 90 Iowa. 106; Toomey v. Southern P. R. Co. 86 Cal. 374, 10 L. R. A. 189; Candelaria v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 6 N. M. 266; Glass v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 94 Ala. 581; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Brown (Tex.) 18 S. W. 670; Brown v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 97 Ky. 228; Thomas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 98 Iowa, 248; Sullivan v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 86 S. W. 1020.

The engineer has a right to presume that one is in possession of all his senses, and that he will look out for his own safety.

1 Harris, Damages by Corporations, § 303; Darwin v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 28 S. C. 531, 55 Am. Rep. 32; Carter v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 19 S. C. 20, 45 Am. Rep. 754. See editorial comments of 45 Cent. L. J. 125, August 18, 1897, on case of Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (Tex.) 88 L. R. A. 578.

It was error to hold the defendant liable for damages for the consequences of fright caused by the running of the train in proximity to young Mack, when there was no actual collision between the train and him, and no physical injury derived therefrom, or from his efforts to escape the collision.

Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 107, 34 L. R. A. 781; Kalen v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. cited in 45 Cent. L. J. 423; Canning v. Williamstown, 1 Cush. 451; Salina v. Trooper, 27 Kan. 544; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McGinnis, 48 Kan. 169; Morse v. Duncan, 14 Fed. Rep. 396; Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227, 36 Am. Rep. 308; Johnson v. Wells, F. & Co. 6 Nev. 224, 8 Am. Rep. 245; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Stables, 63 Ill. 814; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Brunker, 128 Ind. 542; Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L. R. A. 666; Hale v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 34 S. C. 292; Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 134, 16 L. R. A. 203; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Wood, 13 U. S. App. 817, 6 C. C. A. 432, 21 L. R. A. 706, 57 Fed. Rep. 471.

The question whether a child, even under the age of fourteen, is so mature as to be guilty of contributory negligence under the circumstances, is ordinarily a question for the jury.

Bridger v. Asheville & S. R. Co. 25 S. C. 24, 27 S. C. 456; Shirk v. Wabash R. Co. 14 Ind. App. 126; Central R. Co. v. Phillips, 91 Ga. 526.

There was error in the charge in indicating to the jury that it was their duty to give punitive damages in case of gross negligence.

Robinson v. Superior Rapid-Transit R. Co. 94 Wis. 354, 34 L. R. A. 205.

Messrs. Abney & Thomas, for respondent:

It is the duty of an engineer running a locomotive to exercise ordinary care and prudence in keeping a lookout upon the track to avoid injuring anyone who may be upon the track. This is also true as to animals.

If the engineer was not required to keep any lookout at all for stock trespassing upon the track, the mere fact of the killing of the stock could not raise a presumption of negligence. In this state there is such presumption after the fact of killing is made out, and this even when the animal is a trespasser.

Jones v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 20 S. C. 249; Simpkins v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 20 S. C.

259; Long v. Southern R. Co. 50 S. C. 49; Darwin v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 28 S. C. 581, 55 Am. Rep. 32; Carter v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 19 S. C. 20, 45 Am. Rep. 754; Hale v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 34 S. C. 292; 2 Wood, Railroads, Minor's ed. 1894, § 820.

If the conduct of the engineer was reckless or wanton, the injured party can recover. Upon that question the jury were entitled to consider the case.

Samuels v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 85 S. C. 493.

If the fright causes nervous convulsions and illness, the negligence is the primary cause of the injury, and the injury is one for which action may be brought.

Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 184, 16 L. R. A. 203, 81 Am. L. Rev. 589, 29 Am. L. Rev. 209; Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. 111 Cal. 668, 32 L. R. A. 198; Sedgwick, Damages, § 47, p. 67, 8th ed. § 861; Bell v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 26 C. L. 428; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Whitman, 79 Ala. 328; Stutz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 78 Wis. 147; Kendall v. Albia, 78 Iowa, 241.

Gary, A. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The above entitled actions were commenced on the 15th of August, 1895, and by consent were tried together before his honor, Judge Buchanan, and a jury, at the September, 1897, term of the court for Lexington county. The fifth paragraph of the first cause of action in the first of the above-entitled actions is as follows: "(5) That on the afternoon of the said mentioned day, between six and seven o'clock, the plaintiff Stewart Spearman Mack, as was his wont and customary duty, was sent by his father to drive the cows from the pasture, which was on the south side of said railroad, at or near the 7-mile post. That while engaged in driving said cattle from said pasture to the house of said Barnett Salley Mack, which was on the north side of said railroad track (it being necessary to cross the track at a private crossing which had been in use for years, and which use was well known to the defendant), the plaintiff, who was riding a mule, being unable to control said mule, on account of his tender age and lack of strength, was carried by said mule, which had become unruly and unmanageable, in and upon the track of defendant, at or near the said 7-mile post; and, in endeavoring to get said mule off said track, the plaintiff alighted, and was pulling the said mule, by the bridle and a plow line attached thereto, away from and across said track; and, while so engaged, his attention being absorbed in his efforts to control the mule and prevent him from going further down the track and getting away from him (being in open and plain view of an approaching train from the south for half a mile or more), a locomotive, with a train of cars attached, belonging to the defendant, its agent, lessee, or lessees, without any signal or warning whatsoever, running at a rapid and reckless rate of speed towards Columbia, came upon the plaintiff, who was not aware of its approach, on account of his being so engaged in endeavoring to get the mule off said track, and struck the mule, and instantly killed the same. The plaintiff, in order to save his own life, threw himself down between and along the cross-ties just outside of the rail, bruising and injuring his person, and just barely escaped being struck by the locomotive and cars of said defendant, its servants and agents, which said locomotive and cars ran immediately over and above the plaintiff at a rate of speed of more than 60 miles an hour; and being of such tender age, inexperienced, and ignorant of the operation of railroads and the running of locomotive cars thereon, and owing to the great and imminent danger in which he was, and the reckless movement of said train over him, was terribly frightened, his nervous system was shocked, his mind was affected and partially destroyed, his reason unbalanced, and he for a long time was made ill and sick, and suffered great mental anguish and physical pain, arising from the terrible shock to his nervous system and the fright which he received; and by reason thereof he was incapacitated from performing or attending to his ordinary duties, and his capacity for work greatly diminished, and he will for a long time, and probably will for the balance of his life, be affected in mind and body, and it will, to great extent, affect his means of making a livelihood and of advancing his happiness in life. That prior to said accident and injury he was perfectly healthy and sound, both physically and mentally, and had every reason to think and believe that he would so continue; but the injury to his mind and body by reason of such fright and nervous shock has greatly diminished his capacity for performing his duties, and will hereafter diminish and affect his capacity and means of acquiring property, and means of advancing his happiness in life, which he had a right to expect that he would be fully able to do, and acquire all those means of happiness which he, as a perfectly healthy and sound person, could have acquired, and he will hereafter pass through life subject to the effects which said fright and nervous shock have produced." The specifications of negligence are alleged in paragraph 6 thereof as follows, to wit: "(6) That the South Bound Railroad Company, its servants, agents, lessee, or lessees, were negligent in this: That although the plaintiff and the mule he was endeavoring to pull away from the track could be seen for at least one half a mile, and were in plain and open view of the engineer driving the locomotive (the track at said point being perfectly straight), and although the said train could have been easily stopped before it reached the point on said track where the plaintiff and mule were, the engineer in charge of said locomotive made no effort whatsoever to stop or diminish the rate of speed of the train, nor did he give any signal, either by the sounding of the steam whistle of the locomotive, or by ringing of the bell thereon, nor did he take or exercise any prudence or foresight, or do anything whatsoever to prevent the running of the said train upon the plaintiff and said mule, but that the said engineer and persons in charge of said locomotive and train, although they saw, or could easily have seen by the exercise of the slightest outlook or observation, upon the track in front of said advancing locomotive and train, the plaintiff and the mule, and did see, or could have easily seen by the slightest observation or outlook from the train, that he was a child of tender years, and endeavoring to get his mule across the track, and although the said engineer or persons in charge of said locomotive saw, or could have easily seen by the exercise of any prudence or outlook whatsoever, that the plaintiff was not aware of the approach of the train, yet the said engineer, or persons in charge of said locomotive and train, carelessly, negligently, without any prudence or foresight or observation or outlook, which he should have kept upon the track before him, ran the said locomotive and train at a reckless rate of speed over said plaintiff, and against said mule, and so injured and frightened the plaintiff as above stated, and instantly killed the mule, and that by reason of the said negligent act and want of care on the part of the defendant, its servants, agents, lessee, or lessees, the plaintiff was damaged, in his person, mind, and health, $2,500." The allegations of the second cause of action set forth in said complaint are substantially the same as those contained in the first cause of action, except the acts of negligence on the part of the defendant are alleged to have been wilful, malicious, wanton, and reckless, by reason of which the plaintiff claimed exemplary damages. The second complaint was brought by Barnett Salley Mack, the father of Stewart Spearman Mack, in which the allegations are substantially the same as those set forth in the first cause of action in the first complaint. In the first cause of action he claimed damages for the killing of his mule, which he valued at $175. The second cause of action alleged in said complaint was for the injuries alleged to have been sustained by his son; and the plaintiff asked damages for the loss of services of his son, and expenditures for medicines, medical attention, and care of his son, in the sum of $1,200. The defendant answered both complaints, and, in effect, denied generally the allegations of the complaint, and set up the defense of contributory negligence, both on the part of the father and the son. At the close of the plaintiff's testimony the defendant made a motion for a nonsuit, which was refused. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of Stewart Spearman Mack for $650, and a verdict for Barnett Salley Mack for $335. The defendant appealed, upon exceptions, the first of which is as follows:

"(1) Because, against the objection of the defendant, his honor, the presiding judge, allowed the witnesses produced for the plaintiff to testify as to the failure of the train which caused the accident to give the statutory signals upon approaching the Augusta Road crossing, and other road crossings." Some of this testimony was admitted without objection, and it is questionable whether the objection was properly interposed to the other part of said testimony. Furthermore, it does not appear that the presiding judge ruled upon the admissibility of said testimony. But said testimony tended to show an utter disregard of the requirements of law as to the manner of running the train, and was responsive to the allegation of reckless negligence. This exception is therefore overruled.

40 L. R. A.

The second exception is as follows: "(2) Because his honor, the presiding judge, allowed the witness John Weston to testify, against the objection of the defendant, in answer to the question, 'Who travels that last road,—what kind of people?' When it had been admitted that the accident had not occurred at the crossing, and the crossing had nothing to do with it." The testimony was irrelevant, but harmless. This exception is overruled.

The third exception is as follows: "(3) Because his honor, the presiding judge, against the objection of the defendant, allowed other witnesses to testify as to the character of the crossings on the Augusta road and the Plantation road crossing." Waiving the objection to this exception that it is too general, still it cannot be sustained, as the testimony, although irrelevant, was harmless.

The fourth exception is as follows: "(4) Because, against the objection of the defendant, his honor, the presiding judge, allowed a witness, Barnett Salley Mack, to testify that the railroad hands worked the Plantation road crossing." Even if there was error, it was harmless, and this exception is overruled.

The fifth exception is as follows: "(5) Because his honor, the presiding judge, refused the motion for a nonsuit upon the grounds stated in the case for appeal." Waiving the objection to this exception, that it is not sufficiently specific, it cannot be sustained. The grounds upon which the defendant made the motion for a nonsuit are as follows: "First. That the action could not be maintained as an appeal under the statute regulating the giving of signals at crossings, because it was proved that it had not occurred at any crossing or traveled place. Second. That the action could not be maintained as a common law action for negligently injuring the plaintiff Stewart Spearman Mack, or negligently killing the mule, because the evidence did not tend to establish any negligence on the part of the railroad company, through its servants, in the running of the train which caused the injury." The first ground cannot be sustained, for the reason that the plaintiff distinctly stated upon the trial of the case that the action was not brought under the statute. The second ground cannot be sustained, as the allegations of the complaint, and the testimony adduced to support them, showed that this was not the case of an ordinary trespasser. There was testimony tending to prove every material allegation of the complaint, and this exception is overruled.

The sixth and seventh exceptions, which will be considered together, are as follows: "(6) Because his honor, the presiding judge, refused, upon request of the defendant, to charge as follows, to wit: 'It being admitted that there was no actual collision between the plaintiff Stewart Spearman Mack and the defendant's train, and no physical injury resulting from such a collision at any public crossing, traveled place, or any other place, the defendant's servants were not bound to have stopped the train because it ran in proximity to the plaintiff, and the defendant is not responsible for the consequences of fright occasioned thereby.' (7) Because his honor charged the jury as follows, to wit: 'But if the defendant, by their servants, were guilty of a lack of ordinary care, and had run upon the plaintiff, thus making itself liable for negligence, and, while guilty of such lack of ordinary care, ran so immediately upon the plaintiff that he had to jump, being impressed with the overbearing necessity to jump, and such necessity not having been brought upon himself, and he had to jump beyond and off of the track; and, if he were injured by such lack of ordinary care,—then that would be a natural and proximate injury, such as the law gives an action for, and they would be responsible for the consequences of such natural fright, if such fright was so caused;’ thereby erring, in indicating that a mere ‘lack of ordinary care’ on the part of the defendant would make the defendant liable for the consequences of natural fright caused by running in proximity to the plaintiff, and that irrespective of question of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.” In disposing of this request, his honor said: ‘I cannot charge this request, as framed, because the court cannot say that no physical injury has resulted to the plaintiff here, and the use of the word ‘proximity,’ associated with the language here in the request to charge, would be open to a construction that the court could not charge. But I charge you this: They were not obliged to stop because of the nearness to the track,—by reason of the plaintiff being near to the track,—nor would they be liable for such injury, provided the plaintiff exercised due and proper care, according to his age and circumstances; but if the defendants, by their servants, were guilty of a lack of ordinary care, and had run upon the plaintiff, thus making themselves liable for negligence, and, while guilty of such lack of ordinary care, ran so immediately upon the plaintiff that he had to jump, being impressed with the overbearing necessity to jump, and such necessity not having been brought upon himself, and he had to jump beyond and off of the track, and if he were injured by such lack of ordinary care, then that would be a natural and proximate injury, such as the statute gives an action for, and they would be responsible for the consequences of such natural fright, if such fright was so caused. Now, I have made that definite, for the purpose of showing you the meaning of the word ‘proximity.’ A railroad does not have to stop, in these days of fast trains, when a person is close to their track, unless they see that he is going upon the track, or unless they stop, exercising the care of an ordinary person, some injury would result. But, while they don’t owe that duty, suppose a man were approaching in such a condition, and at such an angle to the railroad, and the fireman or the servants were to see him in time to stop, and they were to see that there was something the matter with this man,—judging from his actions that he could not have heard the train,—or to impress them with the fact that he was deaf, and, if they did not stop the train, he would continue, and it would result in a collision with him upon the track of the railroad. Then I say that if they were so impressed, and were to go on, and thereby make that act an act of wilfulness, although he may be guilty of carelessness and negligence in going across the track, yet that would not excuse the railroad, if they could have avoided it by exercising ordinary care,—because he is in the wrong, and they could have avoided it. They should not go upon and kill a person, or run over property, when it could be avoided, no matter whether the man is in the wrong. I mean, in the sense that such injury would be wilful. I therefore charge that, with this modification, and so far as consistent with the matter requested here.”

40 L. R. A.

For the first time the question is presented to this court whether a railroad company is liable for injuries sustained in consequence of fright caused by its negligence. The authorities are very conflicting, and those which decide that the railroad is not liable for such injuries are not in harmony as to the reason for such rule. In the case of Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 107, 34 L. R. A. 781, and cases therein cited, it is held that the railroad company is not liable, on the ground that damages for such injuries are too remote, while in the case of Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L. R. A. 512, the court says: “This case presents a question which has not heretofore been determined in this commonwealth, and in respect to which the decisions elsewhere have not been uniform. It is this: whether, in an action to recover damages for an injury sustained through the negligence of another, there can be a recovery for a bodily injury caused by mere fright and mental disturbance. The jury were instructed that a person cannot recover for mere fright, fear, or mental distress, occasioned by the negligence of another, which does not result in bodily injury; but that, when the fright or fear of nervous shock produces a bodily injury, there may be a recovery for that bodily injury, and for all the pain, mental or otherwise, which may arise out of that bodily injury. . . . The exemption from liability for mere fright, terror, alarm, or anxiety does not rest on the assumption that these do not constitute an actual injury. They do in fact deprive one of enjoyment and of comfort, cause real suffering, and, to a greater or less extent, disqualify one for the time being from doing the duties of life. If these results flow from a wrongful or negligent act, a recovery therefor cannot be denied on the ground that the injury is fanciful, and not real. Nor can it be maintained that these results may not be the direct and immediate consequence of the negligence. Danger excites alarm. Few people are wholly insensible to the emotions caused by imminent danger, though some are less affected than others. It must also be admitted that a timid or sensitive person may suffer, not only in mind, but also in body, from such a cause. Great emotion may, and sometimes does, produce physical effects. The action of the heart, the circulation of the blood, the temperature of the body, as well as the nerves and appetite, may all be affected. A physical injury may be directly traceable to fright, and so may be caused by it. We cannot say, therefore, that such consequences may not flow proximately from unintentional negligence; and, if compensation in damages may be recovered for a physical injury so caused, it is hard, on principle, to say why there should not also be a recovery for the mere mental suffering, when not accompanied by any perceptible physical effects. It would seem, therefore, that the real reason for refusing damages sustained from mere fright must be something different; and it probably rests on the ground that in practice it is impossible satisfactorily to administer any other rule. . . . The logical vindication of this rule is, that it is unreasonable to hold persons who are merely negligent bound to anticipate and guard against fright, and the consequences of fright; and that this would open a wide door for unjust claims, which could not successfully be met. These views are supported by the following decisions: Victorian R. Comrs. v. Coultas, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 222; Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 107, 84 L. R. A. 781; Erving v. Pittsburgh, C. O. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L. R. A. 666; Hasile v. Texas & P. R. Co. 23 U. S. App. 80, 60 Fed. Rep. 557, 9 C. C. A. 134, 23 L. R. A. 774. In the following cases a different view was taken: Bell v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 26 C. L. 428; Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 184, 16 L. R. A. 203; Fitzpatrick v. Great Western R. Co. 12 U. C. Q. B. 645. See also Beven, Neg. pp. 77 et seq. It is hardly necessary to add that this decision does not reach those classes of actions where an intention to cause mental distress or to hurt the feelings is shown, or is reasonably to be inferred, as, for example, in cases of seduction, slander, malicious prosecution, or arrest, and some others. Nor do we include cases of acts done with gross carelessness or recklessness, showing utter indifference to such consequences, when they must have been in the actor's mind. Lombard v. Lennox, 155 Mass. 70; Fillebrown v. Hoar, 124 Mass. 580; Mengher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 281, 96 Am. Dec. 759.

We are much impressed with the reasoning of the court in the case of Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. 111 Cal. 668, 82 L. R. A. 193, in which the following language is used: "The real question presented by the objections and exception of the plaintiff is, whether the subsequent nervous disturbance of the plaintiff was a suffering of the body or of the mind. The interdependence of the mind and body is in many respects so close that it is impossible to distinguish their respective influence upon each other. It must be conceded that a nervous shock or paroxysm, or a disturbance of the nervous system, is distinct from mental anguish, and falls within the physiological, rather than the psychological, branch of the human organism. It is a matter of general knowledge that an attack of sudden fright, or an exposure to imminent peril, has produced in individuals a complete change in their nervous system, and rendered one who was physically strong and vigorous weak and timid. Such a result must be regarded as an injury to the body, rather than to the mind, even though the mind be at the same time injuriously affected. Whatever may be the influence by which the nervous system is affected, its action under that influence is entirely distinct from the mental process which is set in motion by the brain. The nerves and nerve centers of the body are a part of the physical system, and are not only susceptible of lesion from external causes, but are also liable to be weakened and destroyed from causes primarily acting upon the mind. If these nerves, or the entire nervous system, are thus affected, there is a physical injury thereby produced; and, if the primal cause of this injury is tortious, it is immaterial whether it is direct, as by a blow, or indirect, through some action upon the mind. . . . The mental condition which superinduced the bodily harm in the foregoing cases was fright, but the character of the mental excitation by which the injury to the body is produced is immaterial. If it can be established that the bodily harm is the direct result of the condition, without any intervening cause, it must be held that the act which caused the condition set in motion the agencies by which the injury was produced, and is the proximate cause of such injury."

In the case of Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 184, 16 L. R. A. 203, the court says: "Of course, negligence without injury gives no right of action. On the argument there was much discussion of the question whether fright and mental distress alone constitute such injury that the law will allow a recovery for it. The question is not involved in the case. So it may be conceded that any effect of a wrongful act or neglect on the mind alone will not furnish ground of action. Here is a physical injury, as serious, certainly, as would be the breaking of an arm or leg. Does the complaint show that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of that injury? If so, the action will, of course, lie. What is, in law, a proximate cause, is well expressed in the definition, often quoted with approval, given in Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256, as follows: 'The primary cause may be the proximate cause of a disaster, though it operate through successive instruments, as an article at the end of a chain may be moved by force applied to the other end, that force being the proximate cause of the movement; or as in the oft-cited case of the squib thrown in the market place. Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892. The question always is, Was there an unbroken connection between the wrongful act and the injury,—a continuous operation? Did the facts constitute a continuous succession of events, so linked together as to make a natural whole, or was there some new and independent cause intervening between the wrong and the injury? There may be a succession of intermediate causes, each produced by the one preceding, and producing the one following it. It must appear that the injury was the natural consequence of the wrongful act or omission. The new, independent, intervening cause must be one not produced by the wrongful act or omission, but independent of it, and adequate to bring about the injurious result. Whether the natural connection of events was maintained, or was broken by such new, independent cause, is generally a question for the jury. In this case the only cause that can be suggested as intervening between the negligence and the injury is plaintiff's condition of mind, to wit, her fright. Could that be a natural, adequate cause of the nervous convulsions? The mind and body operate reciprocally on each other. Physical injury or illness sometimes causes mental disease. A mental shock or disturbance sometimes causes injury or illness of body, especially of the nervous system.

Now, if the fright was the natural consequence of—was brought about, caused by—the circumstances of peril and alarm in which defendant's negligence placed plaintiff, and the fright caused the nervous shock and convulsions, and consequent illness, the negligence was the proximate cause of those injuries. That a mental condition or operation on the part of the one injured comes between the negligence and the injury does not necessarily break the required sequence of intermediate causes."

Mr. Sedgwick, in his work on Damages, 8th ed. vol. 2, p. 642, in commenting on the opinion of Palles, C. B., in the case of Bell v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 26 C. L. 424, says: "The learned chief baron then referred to the case of Victorian R. Comrs. v. Coultas, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 222, in which the privy council held that mere mental terror was not a consequence which would ordinarily flow from the negligence proved in that case. This case, however, was not approved; but the court followed an earlier, unreported Irish case (Byrne v. Great Southern & W. R. Co. in the court of appeal), where compensation for injury resulting from nervous shock was allowed in a much stronger case than the one at bar. The learned chief baron continued (page 442): 'In conclusion, I am of opinion that, as the relation between fright and injury to the nerve and brain structures of the body is a matter which depends entirely upon scientific and medical testimony, it is impossible for any court to lay down, as a matter of law, that if negligence cause fright, and such fright, in its turn, so affects such structures as to cause injury to health, such injury cannot be a consequence which, in the ordinary course of things, would flow from the negligence, unless such injury accompany such negligence in point of time.' The principle adopted in this case would seem to be the true one. The negligence of the company being admitted, any injury directly resulting should be compensated." See also Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 98 Iowa, 752, 28 L. R. A. 72.

These views are in harmony with the principles laid down in the case of Harrison v. Berkley, 1 Strobh. L. 525, 47 Am. Dec. 578, which was an action for damages against a shopkeeper for unlawfully selling whisky to a slave, by means whereof he became intoxicated and died. In that case the court said: "It is therefore required that the consequences to be answered for should be natural, as well as proximate. [Ward v. Weeks] 7 Bing. 211; [Kelly v. Parlington] 5 Barn. & Ad. 645. By this I understand, not that they should be such as, upon a calculation of chances, would be found likely to occur, nor such as extreme prudence might anticipate, but only that they should be such as have actually ensued one from another, without the concurrence of any such extraordinary conjuncture of circumstances or the intervention of any such extraordinary result, as that the usual course of nature should seem to have been departed from. In requiring concurring consequences, that they should be proximate and natural to constitute legal damage, it seems that in proportion as one quality is strong may the other be dispensed with; that which is immediate cannot be considered unnatural; that which is reasonably to be expected will be regarded, although it may be considerably removed. Bennett v. Lockwood, 20 Wend. 228, 32 Am. Dec. 582.

The defendant, however, has further insisted that, if the drinking and intoxication were the proximate and natural consequences of his act the exposure and death were not; but that the death resulted mainly from the exposure, and not from the intoxication only. It may well be said (speaking in the language of every-day life, which attempts no philosophical analysis) that the exposure was the immediate effect of the intoxication, and that the two produced the death. Thus, without any unconnected influence to be perceived, the death has come from the intoxication, which the defendant's act occasioned. The defendant cannot complain that an agent which his own act naturally brought into operation has occurred to produce the result."

We are satisfied that the reasoning is in favor of the liability of a railroad company in such cases, and that, as a general proposition, it is liable for such injuries where there is a lack of ordinary care. These exceptions are overruled.

The eighth and ninth exceptions will be considered together, and are as follows: "(8) Because his honor, the presiding judge, refused, upon request of the defendant, to charge as follows, to wit: 'It being admitted that the plaintiff Stewart Spearman Mack suffered no injury at any traveled place or public crossing referred to in the statute, any failure on the part of the defendant's servants to ring a bell or blow a whistle at any such traveled place or public crossing was not evidence of such negligence on the part of the defendant in this case as will entitle the plaintiff to a recovery.' (9) Because his honor, the presiding judge, in connection with his refusal of such request, charged as follows, to wit: 'It is not charged that it was at a public highway or crossing, and that, therefore, the mere omission to ring the bell or blow the whistle would not be conclusive presumption of negligence,—this being a common-law action, should be taken as a circumstance only. I so charge that request, with that qualification: That the injury is not charged to have been committed at a crossing, whereby the application of this principle and rule of evidence, making it conclusive presumption of negligence from the omission to ring the bell or blow the whistle, will apply,' thereby erring, in indicating that the failure to give the statutory signals at the Augusta Road crossing and other crossings was a circumstance from which the jury might infer negligence." A request to charge must be construed with reference to the issue made by the pleadings, and the testimony adduced upon the trial of the case. If the presiding judge had charged the request in the form in which it was presented, he would have invaded the province of the jury. The testimony, as we have said, was competent for the purpose of showing an utter disregard of the requirements of law as to the blowing of the whistle, and was responsive to the allegation of recklessness on the part of the defendant. Even if the defendant was not required by the statute to blow the whistle, in approaching the crossing, before it reached the plaintiff, still it was a matter for the consideration of the jury whether there was negligence in blowing the whistle at that time, not as a requirement of the statute, but as a fact showing a want of due care on the part of the defendant under the circumstances of the case. Czech v. Great Northern R. Co. (Minn.) 38 L. R. A. 302. These exceptions are overruled.

The tenth exception is as follows: "(10) Because his honor, the presiding judge, refused the request of the defendant to charge as follows, to wit: 'If the jury believe that the plaintiff, while looking and listening, could hear the train, and that any ordinary, prudent person would, under like circumstances, have done so, then he was negligent; and if, then, under those circumstances, he went on the track, in view of an approaching train, the plaintiff cannot recover,'—but modified the same by adding: 'I charge you that, with this modification: The "person" there refers to an adult; and due care is owing to the circumstances of the person. His duty would be greater to a minor;' thereby erring in indicating to the jury that the mere minority of the plaintiff Stewart Spearman Mack, although a boy of fourteen or fifteen years of age, would exempt him from the obligation to look and listen for an approaching train." The intention of the presiding judge in modifying the request was to make it responsive to the allegations of the complaint. The charge of the presiding judge is not susceptible of the construction set forth in the exception. The minority of the plaintiff was a fact to be considered by the jury in determining the question of negligence, but his honor did not charge the jury that the mere minority of the plaintiff would exempt him from the obligation to look and listen for an approaching train. This exception is overruled.

The eleventh exception is as follows: "(11) Because his honor, the presiding judge, refused, upon request of the defendant, to charge as follows, to wit: 'If the jury find that the defendant's servants had every reason to suppose that the plaintiff, or any prudent person, would not go upon the track, there was no negligence in running trains at a fast speed, and the plaintiff cannot recover,'—but modified the same by adding: 'I charge you that, with the modification of the preceding charge; charge both together;' thereby erring, in indicating that the mere minority of the plaintiff Stewart Spearman Mack would make it negligence on the part of the servants of the company to have run the train rapidly, even though they had every reason to suppose that the plaintiff would not go upon the track." This exception is disposed of by what was said in considering the tenth exception.

The twelfth exception is as follows: "(12) Because his honor, the presiding judge, refused, upon request of the defendant, to charge the jury that 'the defendant was not bound to slacken speed of train, where no reasonable ground existed for the supposition that the plaintiff would go on or near the track,' but modified the same by saying, 'I charge you that, with the limitation of nearness to the track that I have indicated heretofore.'" 40 L. R. A.

Waiving the objection to this exception, that it fails to point out any specific error of law, still the modification of the request by the presiding judge was not erroneous.

The thirteenth exception is as follows: "(13) Because his honor, the presiding judge, refused, upon the request of the defendant, to charge, 'that, even if the jury should believe that no signals were given at or near any crossing, yet the defendant would not be liable, if it were reasonable to suppose that no ordinarily prudent person would attempt to go near or upon a track when the train was plainly in sight and advancing, and when the defendant's servants had every reason to suppose that the plaintiff was aware of the fact,' but modified the same by adding: 'Well, as an abstract proposition that is so. "Prudent person of ordinary intelligence" applies to an adult,—applies to a person who can take care of himself, who is supposed to have average intelligence;' thereby erring, by indicating that the mere minority of the plaintiff Stewart Spearman Mack would make the failure to give the signals, at or near the crossing, negligence towards the plaintiff, although the train was plainly in sight and advancing, and the servants of the defendant had every reason to suppose that the plaintiff was aware of the fact." This exception does not contain all the remarks of his honor in charging the request. They are as follows: "Well, as an abstract proposition, that is so. 'Prudent person of ordinary intelligence' applies to an adult,—applies to a person who can take care of himself, who is supposed to have average intelligence. In addition to that, as I have indicated before in my charge on one of these requests, signals were required at a traveled place,—that conclusiveness of presumption from the omission to ring the bell or blow the whistle applied to a public highway, street, or some crossing like that; but that does not deprive the plaintiff of his right at all; nor does it relieve them of their duty that the law lays upon them,—if necessary, to make signals for the purpose of avoiding an accident, in exercising ordinary care and prudence." This exception is disposed of by what was said in considering the other exceptions, and is overruled.

The fourteenth exception is as follows: "(14) Because his honor, the presiding judge, refused, upon request of the defendant, to charge the jury 'that the jury cannot render any verdict for punitive damages unless the evidence is clear that the defendant's servants were guilty of the most reckless, gross, and malicious negligence,' but modified the same by adding: 'Well, I cannot charge that, as stated there, because the plaintiff must recover by the preponderance of the evidence. I suppose what counsel meant to say was, "Guilty of recklessness, wanton, wilful, malicious, or acts of gross negligence." That is the general rule. Punitive or smart money is given where the action has been prompted by recklessness, by wantonness, by wilfulness, by malice, or bapened through negligence;' thereby erring in indicating that the jury might give punitive damages or smart money upon injury suffered through ordinary negligence." When the charge is considered in its entirety, and when all of his honor's language in refusing to charge the request is taken into consideration, it is evident that the presiding judge did not intend to charge that the defendant was liable for exemplary damages in case there was only ordinary negligence. This exception is overruled.

The fifteenth exception is as follows: "(15) Because his honor, the presiding judge, in summing up charged the jury as follows, to wit: 'This is not an action for a collision at a street or highway, or public traveled place. Therefore the omission of the signals (as I have already charged you) required by the statute for such crossings does not throw light upon the subject, and show a presence or want of ordinary care with reference to either or all the causes of action;' thereby erring, in indicating to the jury that, the failure to blow the statutory signals at the Augusta road crossing and other public crossings were circumstances that might be considered as proving negligence on the part of the defendant." This exception is disposed of by what was said in considering the other exceptions, and is overruled.

The sixteenth exception is as follows: "(16) Because, his honor, the presiding judge, charged the jury as follows, to wit: 'While the mere finding of cattle, horses, or mules killed upon the railroad raises presumption of negligence, making it a rule of negligence, has not been modified by the adoption of the stock law, yet it is an element to be taken into consideration in considering the question of negligence;' thereby indicating to the jury that the mere finding of the body of the mule near the railroad track was a circumstance that they might take into consideration in determining the question of negligence, although the plaintiff's witnesses had given full testimony as to all the circumstances attending the killing." The killing of the mule by the defendant raised the presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant, and this presumption continued until it was rebutted by the testimony. The fact that the witnesses were examined by plaintiff in regard to the killing of the mule did not destroy the presumption arising from the mere fact of killing, nor prevent the application of that rule. If the facts showed that there was no negligence, then, of course, the presumption would be ineffectual. This exception is overruled.

The seventeenth exception is as follows: "(17) Because his honor, the presiding judge, further charged the jury: 'I say the finding of the animal upon the track raises a presumption of negligence. It is only a presumption. It may be rebutted. But that is a presumption the law raised. And if you come to the conclusion that the mule was killed through the lack of care upon the part of the railroad, and the presumption is confirmed,—the presumption is not rebutted,—then the value would be the value of the mule; thereby indicating that the mere finding of the body of the mule near the railroad track was a circumstance to be taken into consideration by the jury in determining the question of negligence.' The killing of the mule was not disputed, and this was sufficient to sustain the presumption of negligence. So that, even admitting that there was error, it was harmless. This exception is overruled.

The eighteenth exception is as follows: "(18) Because his honor, the presiding judge, charged the jury as follows, to wit: 'The damages to the son may be ordinary compensatory damages, or if there be gross negligence, gross carelessness, or recklessness, or wanton disregard or malice, then go one step further: You may give him, not only such damages as will compensate him, but give him smart money,—punitive damages,—to punish defendant;' thereby indicating that it was the duty of the jury in such case to give smart money,—punitive damages,—to punish defendant." His honor stated the circumstances under which the jury had the right to give smart money, and there was no error in his charge. This exception is overruled.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the Circuit Court be affirmed.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Iowa
v.
Victor REPP, Appt.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. The mere finding of bees in a tree on the land of another person gives the finder no right to the bees or to the tree.

NOTE.—Property rights in bees.

- I. Generally.
- II. Trespass and trover.
- III. Larceny.
- IV. Tithes.

I. Generally.

It seems that bees belong to the first party reducing them to his possession, and, while followed from the hive of their owner and located by him are held to be his property unless he abandons them.

In Cooper's Justinian, Inst. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 14, it was said that "bees also are wild by nature; therefore L. R. A.

2. A trespasser who finds bees on the land of another, and hives them, but is not the owner of the hive in which he puts them or the land on which he leaves them, has no interest in them which is the subject of larceny.

(January 18, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Monroe County con-fore, although they swarm upon your tree, they are not reputed, until they are hived by you, to be more your property than the birds which have nests there; so, if any other person inclose them in a hive, he becomes their proprietor. Their honey-combs also, if any, become the property of him who takes them; but clearly, if you observe any person entering into your ground, the object untouched, you may justly hinder him. A swarm which hath flown from your hive is still reputed to continue yours as long as it is in sight; and may easily be pursued; but in any other case it will become the property of the occupant."

victing him of larceny of a swarm of bees.
Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. B. Perry, for appellant:

The court should have permitted the defendant to show that he did not take the gum and bees stealthily, but openly.

8 Greenl. Ev. 7th ed. § 157.

If one takes the goods of another and carries them upon his own land, the owner may enter to retake them, because the wrong of the other excuses the entry.

Cooley, Torts, p. 50.

As Mosely stole the gum from the defendant, he could not, by giving it to Stevens, invest him with any right to it, even if the latter were innocent of the wrongful act of Mosely.

Cooley, Torts, pp. 51, 52; Iole Royal Min. Co. v. Hertin, 87 Mich. 332, 26 Am. Rep. 520.

Bees have a local habitation, more often in

So, Wood's Civil Law, bk. 2, chap. 3, p. 103, says: "Under the consideration of wild creatures we may place bees, which are also wild by nature; therefore if they settle upon your trees, they do not belong to you before you have covered them with an hive, no more than birds who have built their nests there, or the young ones in the nests before they are taken. It is likewise lawful for any to take the honeycombs from thence, tho', as before you may prohibit them from coming upon your ground. But if they are once hived, the honeycombs belong to the possessor; and if the swarm flies from your hives, they still belong to you as long as they are in sight and under any probability of recovery, or if they continue their custom of flying abroad and returning."

Domat's Civil Law, vol. 1, bk. 2, pt. 1, subd. 7, § 2133, says: "As we may possess living creatures which it is not possible to have always in our power and custody, so we retain the possession of them whilst we shut them up, whilst we have them under the care of a keeper, or if, being made tame, they return home without a keeper, as bees to their hives, and pigeons to their dove-houses. But the creatures which escape out of our custody, and do not come back, are no longer in our possession till we recover them again."

Puffendorf's Law of Nature, 4, chap. 6, § 5, says:

"Yet bees are no doubt wild by nature since their custom of returning to their hive doth not proceed from their familiarity with mankind, but from their own secret instinct; they being in all other respects utterly unteachable. It is nevertheless one of Plato's laws, whoever shall pursue the swarms which belong to others, and by striking on the brass shall draw them with the delightful sound to fix near himself, let him make restitution for the damage. Where he seems to presuppose that the owner of the bees did not follow them when they left his hives, Pliny will have the bees to be neither wild nor tame; others divide them into both those kinds. But that, so long as they return to our hives they are properly our own, and cannot be hurt without our loss and damage, is very laboriously proved in that declamation of Quintillian, entitled 'The Poor Man's Bees.'"

"Articles which the proprietor of a farm has placed thereon, for the service and management of such a farm, are immovable by destination.

Thus immovables by destination, having been placed by the proprietor for the use and management of his farm, are . . . bee hives." Code Napoleon, § 524.

Bees also are feræ naturæ, but when hived and reclaimed a man may have a qualified property in them by the law of nature as well as by civil law. Bracton's Law, 2, chap. 1, § 8.

In Bell's Law of Scotland, p. 336, it was said that "when wild animals confined and appropriated have regained their natural liberty, they are again free to be acquired by occupancy. But distinction is made, and a different rule prevails, in respect to such of those animals as have animus revertendi—as pigeons, hawks in pursuit of prey, bees hiving while pursued by the owner. 2 Stair, Law of Scotland, 1, § 33; 2 Erskine, Law of Scotland, 1, § 10."

40 L. R. A.

Replevin lies for a swarm of bees. Fitz, N. B. 68.

And a swarm of bees going from the hive could be reclaimed if they could be followed and were known. Merrills v. Goodwin, 1 Root, 209.

A man's finding bees in a tree upon another man's land gave him no right either to the tree or the bees. Merrills v. Goodwin, 1 Root, 209.

In Goff v. Kilts, 15 Wend. 550, it was said that bees are feræ naturæ, and when hived or reclaimed a person may have a qualified property in them by the law of nature as well as the civil law, and hiving or inclosing them gives property in them.

In Goff v. Kilts, 15 Wend. 550, it was said that an unreclaimed swarm of bees belong to the occupant who first hives them.

In a suit against the owner of bees for injuries caused by the bees to horses passing on the highway, it was said that if courts are to take judicial notice of the nature of things so familiar to man as bees, which I suppose they would be justified in doing, "then I would observe that however it might have been anciently, in modern days the bee has become almost as completely domesticated as the ox or the cow." Earl v. Van Alstine, 8 Barb. 630.

II. Trespass and trover.

The party discovering wild bees and first appropriating them to his possession acquires title, but he cannot maintain trespass or trover against a party taking the same unless he has first reduced them to his possession; and it seems that no one is entitled to enter upon the land of another without permission and cut a bee tree to capture wild bees or their honey. Where two parties have obtained permission from the owner to cut a bee tree, the one first taking possession will have a better title to the bees and honey; but a license to one party to cut a tree may be revoked by the owner of the land and the same license given to another party.

So, where a swarm of bees left the hive of the plaintiff and went into a tree on the land of A. B., and the plaintiff followed the bees and marked the tree in which they entered, he could maintain an action of trespass against a third party who cut the tree down and killed the bees and took the honey away, although it was said that he would not have had the right to enter upon another person's land in order to recover them. Goff v. Kilts, 15 Wend. 550.

In that case the case of Ferguson v. Miller, 1 Cow. 243, was distinguished, as that case was between two persons each claiming as the first finder; also the case of Gillet v. Mason, 7 Johns. 16, as that case presented a question between the finder and the person interested in the soil.

So, where a party discovered a bee tree on the land of a third party and obtained consent to cut the tree, and while doing so was discovered by another party who had obtained a license to look for the bees and if found to cut the tree, and the second party prevented the first from completing the removal of the bees and honey and appropriated the same to his own use, the first party could maintain an action of trespass and case, having possession and a superior right over the party who took the a tree than elsewhere, and while there they may be said to be within control, because the tree may at any time be felled. But the right to cut it is in the owner of the soil, and therefore such property as the wild bees are susceptible of is in him also.

Cooley, Torts, p. 485.

honey. In this case it appears that the owner of the land supposed the finder of the tree was entitled to take the bees and honey, and made no attempt to revoke the license. Adams v. Burton, 43 Vt. 36.

And where two persons claimed to be first discoverers of wild bees in a bee tree, and each obtained license from the owner to cut the tree, the bees belonged to the licensee first taking possession. It was said that the license was without consideration and liable to be revoked at pleasure. Ferguson v. Miller, 1 Cow. 243, 18 Am. Dec. 519.

Where a party placed an empty bee box in a tree on the land of another without obtaining his consent; and subsequently bees entered the same, and a third party appropriated the bees and honey, the party who first placed the box there could not maintain an action of trover for the value of the bees and honey, as he was a trespasser and the bees were not his property. It was held that bees are feræ naturæ and the only ownership in them until reclaimed and hived is ratione soli, and this qualified ownership cannot be changed or terminated by the act of a mere trespasser. Rexroth v. Coon, 15 R. I. 35.

So, where a man discovered bees in a tree on the land of another, and marked the tree with the initial of his name, such finder was not vested with any exclusive right of property, and could not maintain trespass against a person for cutting down the tree and carrying away the bees. Gillet v. Mason, 7 Johns. 18.

A party who found a swarm of bees in a tree on another party's land, and marked the tree, and notified the landowner, could not maintain trover against him for taking the honey, as the finder of the bees acquired no property in the tree, or could not cut the tree. Fisher v. Stewart, Smith (N. H.) 60.

And a man finding bees in a tree standing upon another man's land acquired no right either to the tree or the bees, and could not maintain trespass against a third party taking them. Merrills v. Goodwin, 1 Root, 209.

III. Larceny.

In STATE V. REPP it was held that a trespasser who finds bees on the land of another and hives them, but is not the owner of the hive in which he puts them or the land on which he leaves them, has no interest in them which is the subject of larceny. This is in accord with the authorities. Larceny may be committed by stealing bees when they have been reduced to possession. But it is not larceny to take wild bees or cut down a bee tree and take the honey.

In case for these words, Thou has stole my bees (innuendo a stock of bees) and Thou art a thief, after a verdict for the plaintiff it was moved for arrest of judgment that felony cannot be committed of bees because they are feræ naturæ. Sed, per curiam. The subsequent words, viz., Thou art a thief, show that the stealing was of such bees of which felony may be committed, and so actionable. Tibbs v. Smith, T. Raym. 38, 3 Salk. 325.

A motion of arrest of judgment was refused where an indictment charged larceny of three bee hives of the value of $5, three swarms of bees of the value of $3, and 40 pounds of honey of the value of $3, of the goods and chattels of C., as in this case the three swarms of bees were described to be of the goods and chattels of one C., which is 40 L. R. A.

A man's finding bees in a tree standing upon another man's land gives him no right either to the tree or the bees.

1 Waterman, Trespass, 1875, p. 358.

Messrs. Milton Remley, Attorney General, and Jesse A. Miller, for the State:

Bees are feræ naturæ, and though confined to a in effect an averment that when stolen they were his property and in his possession, and therefore were clearly a subject of which larceny could be committed, and as to the 40 pounds of honey that was the subject of larceny whether made by wild bees or bees that had been reclaimed, where it was described as "of the goods and chattels" of C., and a conviction for stealing any one of the three named articles would sustain a judgment of petit larceny. Harvey v. Com. 23 Gratt. 941.

And an indictment charging larceny of one bee hive, 100 pounds of honey and 10 pounds of wax, and a swarm of bees of the value of $5, of the personal goods of A. B., was sustained, as it alleged the bees to be the goods of A. B. and in his possession when stolen, and bees when in the possession of any person are the subject of larceny. State v. Murphy, 8 Blackf. 408.

In Hannam v. Mockett, 2 Barn. & C. 944, it was said that "bees are property and the subject of larceny."

In Com. v. Hazelwood, 84 Ky. 661, it was said that bees may be the subject of larceny.

But in an action of slander for charging the plaintiff with being a thief, it was held that the plaintiff was not guilty of a felony by taking a swarm of bees and their honey from the tree of another man which the owner of the tree had reduced to possession by confining them while in the top of the tree, as some bees while they remain in the tree are not the subject of a felony. Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. 546.

And it was not slander to charge a person with having stolen a bee tree, as the term "bee tree" related to the wild, and not to the reclaimed, insect, the insect feræ naturæ and not yet reduced to property, and the term "tree" was applicable to standing timber, and neither of these articles were subjects of larceny. Cock v. Weatherby, 5 Smedes & M. 333.

So, it was not slander to charge that "he has stolen my bee tree," as the charge referred to the larcenous taking of the tree, and not of the bees or honey. Idol v. Jones, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 162.

IV. Tithes.

It seems that bees were not titheable, but that tithes could be collected on honey and wax.

"And upon a surmise made that he was sued for tithes of bees, that in consideration he paid honey and wax, and was at the charge for hives and maintenance of them in winter, he should be discharged of the tithes of the bees themselves. And upon these surmises a prohibition was granted." Anonymous, Cro. Car. 404.

It was held that there was no tithe due of a swarm of bees because they were wild by nature. Rolle, Abr. 651, pl. 5.

But the honey of bees is titheable. Barfoot v. Norton, Cro. Car. 559, W. Jones, 447.

Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, vol. 8, p. 516, § 15, says: "Bees are reckoned amongst the things that are feræ naturæ, and by consequence tithe free; and it hath been adjudged that they shall not be paid in kind by the tenth swarm. Gibs, 677. But of the wax and honey of bees tithes shall be paid in kind de jure. 1 Rolle, Abr. 635; Anonymous, Cro. Car. 404. And that is, by the tenth measure of honey, and the tenth weight of wax. God. 389, Deg. p. 2, C. 7. And there is a consultation provided in the register for the tithe of honey and of the wax of bees."

I. T.

tree by the owner of the tree, while they remain in the tree and are not secured in a hive they are not the subject of larceny.

Cock v. Weatherby, 5 Smedes & M. 338; Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. 546.

But though bees are fera natura, they become property by being reclaimed and hived, and they are then subject of larceny, for, while they are not fit for food, their honey is.

State v. Murphy, 8 Blackf. 498; Harvey v. Com. 28 Gratt. 941.

And as between the discoverer of wild bees and one who afterward finds them, the first finder, if he has proceeded to take possession of the bees, has paramount right and title to them.

Adams v. Burton, 48 Vt. 36.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In July, 1895, Stevens found a bee tree on the land of Cody, and, without the latter's permission, chopped it down, and put the bees in a gum obtained from Mosely. These were left near the fallen tree on Cody's land. The gum was cut from a tree on defendant's land, without his knowledge or consent; and finding it with the bees, where left by Stevens, he removed them, at dusk of day, to the orchard of his mother, and inclosed them in a telescope gum, about 33 inches square, nailed to that procured from Mosely. This was unknown to the mother whose residence was about 1 mile from the bee tree, while that of the defendant was 8 miles further away. It does not appear that the defendant knew who hived the bees, or that Stevens was aware that Mosely was not the owner of the gum. When Stevens discovered the bees, after several days' search, the defendant refused to do more than return them, and after some parley this prosecution was begun.

Wild game is under the control of the state, and only becomes the subject of private ownership when reclaimed by the art and industry of man. A somewhat different rule applies to bees, though fera natura. These have a local habitation. Blackstone states: "It hath also been said that with us the only ownership in bees is ratione soli; and the charter of the forest, which allows every freeman to be entitled to the honey found within his own woods, affords great countenance to this doctrine that a qualified property may be had in bees, in consideration of the property of the soil whereon they are found." The same rule is laid down in Cooley, Torts, p. 485, where it is said that bees "have a local habitation, more often in a tree than elsewhere, and while there they may be said to be within control, because the tree may at any time be felled. But the right to cut it is in the owner of the soil, and therefore, such property as the wild bees are susceptible of is in him, also." And it has been so adjudged in Ferguson v. Miller, 1 Cow. 248, 18 Am. Dec. 519, and Rezroth v. Coon, 15 R. I. 85. By the law of nature, the person who hived the swarm would be entitled to it; but, under the regulation of property rights since the institution of civil society, the forest, as well as the cultivated field, belongs to the owner thereof, and he who invades it is a trespasser. Goff v. Kilts, 15 Wend. 550. See Adams v. Burton, 48 Vt. 36. The mere finding of bees on the land of Cody gave Stevens no right to them, or to the tree. Merrile v. Goodwin, 1 Root, 209; Gillet v. Mason, 7 Johns. 16. In cutting down the tree and taking the bees, he was a wrongdoer. Had he acted with the license of Cody, he might have acquired ownership, but he could obtain no title by his wrongful acts as a mere trespasser. Rezroth v. Coon, 15 R. I. 85. In that case the plaintiff had placed a box in the crotch of the tree belonging to Green, without permission, and later the defendant, without the consent of either, took the box from the tree, emptied it of bees and honey, and then replaced it. In holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, the court said: "The plaintiff was a trespasser upon the land of Green. . . . He had no right to place the box or hive in the tree, and by placing it there he acquired no title to the bees which subsequently occupied it, or to the honey which they produced." No better title could be acquired by removing the bees from the tree top to a box on the land, than by luring them to a box placed in a tree top. Title to a thing fera natura cannot be created by the act of one who at the moment is a trespasser, and Stevens obtained no interest in the bees by the mere wrongful transfer from the tree to the gum. He neither owned the land on which he left them, nor the gum in which they were hived. Having neither title nor possession, he had no interest therein, the subject of larceny. As the information alleged ownership in Stevens, and the case was tried on that theory, we need make no inquiry as to any taking from Cody. But see Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. 546.

Reversed.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Wyoming

v.

Otto GRAMM et al.

(.....Wyo.....)

1. Liability for money lost by failure of the bank in which it was deposited with due care by the state treasurer is not imposed by his bond conditioned to account for all money coming into his hands by virtue of his office, and to perform all the duties of his office when his statutory duty is to receive and keep all moneys of the state not required to be received and kept by some other person.

NOTE.—For the conflicting authorities as to the liability on an official bond for loss of money by theft or bank failure, see Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. Valley R. Co. (Colo.) 22 L. R. A. 449, and note; 40 L. R. A.

2. The rule which makes a public officer an insurer of the safety of the pub-

also State, Overton County, v. Copeland (Tenn.) 31 L. R. A. 844; Fairchild v. Hedges (Wash.) 31 L. R. A. 851; Bush v. Johnson County (Neb.) 32 L. R. A. 223; Healdsburg v. Mulligan (Cal.) 33 L. R. A. 461.

lie funds under his control is not based upon the mere fact that he is a public officer intrusted with public funds, but is based upon the principle that by his bond, considered alone or in connection with the statutes defining his duties, he has contracted to become an insurer, and the rule is limited to cases involving such contracts.

3. A trustee's depositing money in a private bank is not negligence as matter of law.

4. Estoppel against the state from pursuing a treasurer's bond is not effected by its proceeding against the insolvency assignee of one with whom the treasurer had deposited the money, and accepting a dividend from him.

(Corn, J., dissents.)

(March 10, 1898.)

RESERVATION by the District Court for Laramie County for the opinion of the Supreme Court of questions arising in an action brought to enforce liability upon the bond of defendant Gramm as state treasurer for moneys which had been deposited by him in a bank and lost through its insolvency. Answers returned favorable to defendants.

Statement by Potter, Ch. J.:

This case was submitted to the district court upon the motions of plaintiff and defendants, respectively, for judgment upon the pleadings. The suit is brought in the name of and by the state upon the bond given by Otto Gramm, as state treasurer, on the 4th day of July, 1893, with Henry G. Balch, Daniel C. Bacon, William C. Wilson, Jr., Francis E. Warren, and Thomas A. Kent as sureties.

The material allegations of the petition are substantially as follows: That said Otto Gramm was elected to the office of state treasurer, on the 11th day of September, 1890, for a term ending on the 7th day of January, 1895. That he entered upon the discharge of the duties of such office on the 7th day of November, 1890, and continuously acted as such officer until January 7, 1895, at which time he was succeeded by Henry G. Hay. He had given a bond upon first assuming the duties of the office, but, owing to the death of two of his sureties, he gave the bond in suit, upon the requirement of the secretary of state. The bond was duly approved. That during his term of office said Gramm had received the sum of $44,147.31, which it was his duty to pay over to his successor, but he had failed to make such payment. Judgment is claimed for said amount, with interest.

All of the defendants, except William C. Wilson, Jr., who, it is presumed, was not served with process, appeared and filed an answer, admitting the election of said Gramm to the office aforesaid, his entering upon and continuance in the discharge of the duties thereof, the execution and approval of the bond, but denying that on January 7, 1895, or at any time thereafter, said Gramm had in his possession the sum of money mentioned in the petition, or any other sum of money, belonging to plaintiff, unless the money thereafter shown to have been deposited in bank be held to have been at that time in his possession.

The answer also specifically denies the making of any default in payment to the successor of said Gramm, unless the facts thereafter set forth constitute such default, and denies the truth of the charge that he did not truly and justly account for all moneys that came into his hands as such treasurer, and alleges that he did honestly, truly, and justly account for all moneys that came into his hands as such officer at any time after the giving of the bond sued on. The answer further denies that there was any duty of his office which said Gramm did not faithfully, truly, and justly perform. The answer then continues with the following, which we quote: "And these defendants aver that on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1893, and for many years prior thereto, one Thomas A. Kent was engaged in the general banking business, in the city of Cheyenne, in the county of Laramie, and state of Wyoming, and was of excellent repute and financial standing as a banker in said city of Cheyenne, and throughout the state of Wyoming; that at divers times prior to the said 20th day of July, A. D. 1893, the said Otto Gramm, as treasurer of the state of Wyoming, did deposit with and intrust and deliver to the said Thomas A. Kent, doing business as T. A. Kent, banker, as aforesaid, divers sums of money, in the aggregate many thousands of dollars, which said sums of money were of the public funds of the said state of Wyoming, and were in the possession of said Otto Gramm as state treasurer, as aforesaid, and were, as aforesaid, deposited in the said bank conducted by the said Thomas A. Kent, banker; and that at the respective times when each and all of said sums of money were as aforesaid deposited with said Thomas A. Kent, banker, the said public funds and moneys were known by the said banker to be public moneys of the state of Wyoming, and were by him received and held subject to the check and order of the said Otto Gramm as state treasurer of the state of Wyoming, all of the said deposits being made in the name of Otto Gramm, state treasurer, and being kept entirely separate and distinct from any private funds of the said Otto Gramm, and being so as aforesaid deposited to the sole use and benefit of the said state of Wyoming. And defendants aver that on the said 20th day of July, A. D. 1893, solely by reason of a great, sudden, unusual, unprecedented, and entirely unlooked-for business panic in the community in which the said Thomas A. Kent was doing business as a banker, the said Thomas A. Kent suddenly became insolvent, and executed a deed of assignment under the laws of the state of Wyoming, wherein and whereby he assigned to one Joel Ware Foster, for the benefit of the creditors of the said Thomas A. Kent, all of his property, including any and all moneys so as aforesaid in his hands belonging to the state of Wyoming, and deposited with him by the said Otto Gramm as state treasurer of the state of Wyoming; that the amount of such state funds in his hands at the time of the assignment was fifty-six thousand, four hundred fifty-four dollars and seventy cents ($56,454.70). And defendants further aver that for a period of at least eighteen years prior to the assignment of the said Thomas A. Kent it was the common and uninterrupted custom in the territory of Wyoming and in the state of Wyoming for the treasurer of the said territory and state to deposit the public funds belonging to the said territory and to the said state in banks, subject to check of the treasurer thereof, which said custom has all times been generally known to the citizens of the state of Wyoming and of the territory of Wyoming, and to the officers thereof; that the said custom was a reasonable one, and was necessary for the safe-keeping of the funds belonging to the state of Wyoming and belonging to the said territory of Wyoming; that there was no other way whereby the funds belonging to the state or to the territory could be as safely and securely kept as by depositing the same in the manner aforesaid,—all of which was at all times well known to the said territory of Wyoming and to the officers thereof, and to the said state of Wyoming and to the officers and inhabitants thereof, who, with such full knowledge at all times, failed and refused to provide any safe or secure place for keeping the said funds, and at all times acquiesced in the actions of the said treasurers and of the said defendant Otto Gramm, in depositing said funds in bank, according to the custom aforesaid. And defendants aver that the insolvency of the said Thomas A. Kent, banker, was wholly unknown to the said Otto Gramm, or to these defendants, or to the community in which he carried on his business, until the execution of the said assignment, and that the said insolvency was wholly unanticipated until he made his assignment as aforesaid; that in truth and in fact the said Kent, banker, would not have become insolvent but for the sudden, great, and unusual panic which occurred at that time in the community where he carried on his business as a banker; that the property and assets of the said Thomas A. Kent, at the time of the said assignment, were such as to have much more than paid all of his debts and liabilities at the values which said property possessed immediately prior to said assignment, which values said property and assets had maintained for many years prior to said assignment. And defendants aver that the said Otto Gramm was not in any degree negligent, nor in any degree unfaithful to his trust as treasurer of the state of Wyoming, nor in any degree at fault in depositing or retaining said moneys, or any of them, in the said bank, and that the moneys so deposited in said bank are the moneys which the plaintiff seeks to recover in this action. And defendants aver that the said Gramm was not in any degree at fault, or in any degree negligent, or in any degree lacking in skill, or in any degree unfaithful in the care, custody, or safe keeping of said moneys, or any of them; that no negligence of the said defendant Otto Gramm in any degree—that no unfaithfulness of the said defendant Otto Gramm in any degree—caused or in any way contributed to the loss of said funds, or any of them.” It is further alleged that in January, 1894, the state brought its action for said moneys against the assignee for the benefit of creditors of said Thomas A. Kent, and that the state, by authority of the legislature, elected to and did receive dividends from said assigned estate amounting to $12,807.89.

The plaintiff filed a reply, admitting the 40 L. R. A.

lack of negligence or fault on the part of the officer, the reply in that respect being as follows: “Comes now the above-named plaintiff, the state of Wyoming, and for its reply to the answer of the defendants in said cause admits that on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1893, and for many years prior thereto, one Thomas A. Kent was engaged in the general banking business in the city of Cheyenne, in the county of Laramie, and state of Wyoming, and was of excellent repute and financial standing as a banker in said city of Cheyenne, and throughout the state of Wyoming; that at divers times, prior to the said 20th day of July, A. D. 1893, the said Otto Gramm, as treasurer of the state of Wyoming, did deposit with the said Thomas A. Kent, banker, many thousands of dollars of the public funds of the said state of Wyoming, which said public funds were known by the said Thomas A. Kent, banker, to be public moneys of the state of Wyoming, and which were by him received and held subject to the check and order of the said Otto Gramm as state treasurer of the state of Wyoming, and were kept entirely separate and distinct from the private funds of the said Otto Gramm. And plaintiff further admits that on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1893, by reason of a business panic in the community in which the said Thomas A. Kent was doing business as a banker, the said Thomas A. Kent suddenly became insolvent, and executed a deed of assignment under the laws of the state of Wyoming to one Joel Ware Foster of all of his property, including all moneys in his hands belonging to the said state of Wyoming, said money amounting to the sum of fifty-six thousand, four hundred fifty-four dollars and seventy cents ($56,454.70). And plaintiff further admits that for a period of at least eighteen years prior to the assignment of the said Thomas A. Kent, it was the common and uninterrupted custom in the territory of Wyoming, and in the state of Wyoming, for the treasurers of the said territory and state to deposit the public funds belonging to said territory and state in banks, subject to check of the treasurer thereof, which said custom has at all times been generally known to the citizens of the state of Wyoming and of the territory of Wyoming, and to the officers thereof, and the said state of Wyoming and its officers and inhabitants had failed to provide any other place for keeping said funds. And plaintiff further admits that the insolvency of the said Thomas A. Kent was wholly unknown to the said Otto Gramm, or to either of said defendants, or to the community in which he carried on his business, until the execution of the said assignment, and that the said insolvency was wholly unanticipated until he made his assignment as aforesaid, and that the property and assets of the said Thomas A. Kent, at the time of the said assignment, were such as to have much more than paid all of his debts and liabilities at the values which said property possessed immediately prior to said assignment, which values said property and assets had maintained for many years prior to said assignment. Plaintiff further admits that the said Otto Gramm was not in any degree negligent, nor in any degree unfaithful to his trust as treasurer of the state of Wyoming, nor in any degree at fault in depositing or retaining said moneys, or any of them, in the said bank, and that no negligence or unfaithfulness on the part of the said defendant, Otto Gramm, in any degree caused or contributed to the loss of the said funds by the failure of said bank." The allegations of the answer concerning the pursuit of the money in the hands of Kent's assignee, and the receipt of dividends by authority of a legislative resolution, are also admitted. It appears by such reply that the amount of money in the hands of the officer which had been deposited in said bank, and was there at the time of the assignment, was $56,454.70, and that the sum sued for is the balance, after deducting the amount recovered from the assignee by the suit against him, and by way of dividends.

Upon the submission of the motions for judgment upon the pleadings, the district court reserved the following questions, held to be difficult and important, to this court for its decision thereon: (1) Under the bond set out with the petition are the defendants liable for losses of state funds by the state treasurer, Otto Gramm, which occurred without any negligence or unfaithfulness in any degree on the part of said state treasurer in any way relating to his trust as treasurer? (2) Under the bond sued on, if the facts are that for eighteen years prior to the loss hereinafter set forth it had been the uninterrupted custom, known to the officers and inhabitants of Wyoming, for the defendant, Otto Gramm, as state treasurer, and his predecessors in office, to deposit the funds of Wyoming in bank, as was done in this instance, and if with this knowledge the officers and inhabitants of Wyoming had failed to provide any other place for keeping said funds; and if, without any negligence or unfaithfulness to his trust in any degree on the part of said Otto Gramm as state treasurer, he deposited $56,454.70 of the funds of the state in T. A. Kent's bank, as the state funds payable upon the check and order of himself as state treasurer, and kept entirely separate from the private funds of said Otto Gramm; and if said Otto Gramm, as state treasurer, was not in any degree at fault in depositing or retaining moneys in said bank; and if said banker was of excellent character and repute as a banker at the city where he did business as a banker, and was entirely safe and solvent until the day of his assignment; and if suddenly, and solely by reason of a sudden, great, and unprecedented, and unexpected financial panic in the community where he did business, the said banker became suddenly insolvent, and assigned his property, including the funds of the state in his hands; and if said Otto Gramm, as state treasurer in accounting with his successor for the funds in his hands, made full report of the deposits made by him as aforesaid, and turned over to his said successor the vouchers therefor; and if the state of Wyoming, upon said vouchers, and under express authority of a resolution of the legislative assembly of the state of Wyoming, filed its claim with the assignee of said banker, claiming as its own the said moneys ($56,454.70) so deposited with the said banker by said Otto Gramm as state treasurer, and thereafter received from said assignee, as dividends upon said claim, the sum of $12,807.34, 40 L. R. A.

—would the defendants, under and by reason of these facts, be liable upon the bond sued on? (3) Under the bond sued on, did the defendants become insurers of the funds of the state of Wyoming, placed in the hands of Otto Gramm, as state treasurer, and liable, in all events, for any loss that might occur of any such funds? (4) Under the pleadings should judgment go, and, if so, should it be for the plaintiff or for the defendants?

Mr. Benjamin F. Fowler, Attorney General, for the State.

Messrs. Van Orsdel & Burdick and John W. Lacey, for defendants:

The provision for accounting is satisfied by an honest and truthful account, either producing the funds or furnishing lawful excuse for their nonproduction.

Many of the cases turn upon the language of the statute or bond, where language is used far more exact and much more indicative of insurance than anything that can be found in the case at bar.

New Providence v. McEachron, 83 N. J. L. 339; Hancock v. Hazard, 12 Cush. 112; State, Wyandot County, v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 67 Am. Dec. 368; United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 784; Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. St. 872; Jefferson County Comrs. v. Lineberger, 3 Mont. 231, 35 Am. Rep. 462; Rock v. Stinger, 36 Ind. 346; Colerain v. Bell, 9 Met. 499; State v. Walseen, 17 Colo. 117, 15 L. R. A. 456.

In this state it is the law that the money received by the treasurer is not the property of the treasurer, but the property of the state.

State v. Foster (Wyo.) 20 L. R. A. 226.

The words "faithfully discharge the duties," etc., stipulate for the fidelity and honesty of the treasurer, and either by themselves, or in connection with the words "well and correctly behave therein," also stipulate for his competence and diligence. To constitute a breach of the bond the officer must have acted either dishonestly or without competent skill and knowledge, or without due diligence. The breach alleged in this case does not fall under any of these heads.

Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Cowles, 69 N. C. 59; Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. 46, 7 L. ed. 47; American Bank v. Adams, 12 Pick. 308; Union Bank v. Clossary, 10 Johns. 271; Commercial Bank v. Ten Eyck, 48 N. Y. 305; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 120 Ill. 603.

Receivers and their sureties are not insurers of the funds in their hands as receivers, but only liable in case of failure to exercise fidelity or prudence or diligence.

Barton v. Ridgeway, 92 Va. 163; Hamm v. J. Stone & Sons Live-Stock Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 427; Powers v. Loughridge, 38 N. J. Eq. 396.

The liability on executors' and administrators' bonds is not that of insurers. Unless there has been a lack of fidelity, diligence, or skill there is no liability for loss of the property.

Moore v. Eure, 101 N. C. 11; Lehman v. Robertson, 84 Ala. 489; State, Townshend, v. Mengher, 44 Mo. 356, 100 Am. Dec. 298; Foster v. Davis, 46 Mo. 268; Newton v. Bushong, 22 Gratt. 628; Re Maxwell, 21 N. Y. S. R. 189; Re Kohler, 15 Wash. 613.

If guardians and trustees "are to be held responsible for all negligence, and are not allowed the exercise of a reasonable discretion and prudent care in the management of their trusts, it will deter prudent men from assuming the office, which in itself is sufficiently onerous and already undertaken by such men with reluctance."

Fahnestock's Appeal, 104 Pa. 46.

The guardian and his sureties are liable only in case of lack of fidelity, diligence, or skill.

Law's Estate, 144 Pa. 499, 14 L. R. A. 103;

Wilmer's Appeal, 87 Pa. 120; Neff's Appeal, 57 Pa. 91; Beuch v. Moser, 4 Kan. App. 66; O'Connor v. Decker, 95 Wis. 202.

The common-law rule is admitted to have been different from the rule laid down in United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 784.

United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89; Walker v. British Guarantee Assn. 18 Q. B. 277.

All the language of the statute relating to the subject-matter is predicated upon the idea that the moneys which come into the official custody of the county treasurer are not his own private funds, but the county's, and they remain so until legally paid out.

Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284; Mechanics' Bank v. Hallouell, 52 Me. 545; Thompson v. White, 45 Me. 445; Colerain v. Bell, 9 Met. 499; Hancock v. Hazard, 12 Cush. 112; Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Denio, 238; Looney v. Hughes, 26 N. Y. 514; Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 132, 20 Am. Rep. 637.

The responsibility of the county treasurer, in the absence of any statute enlarging it, is measured by the common-law rules applicable to bailees for hire other than common carriers and innholders.

United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89; 1 Perry, Tr. § 441, and notes; 3 Redf. Wills, 394; State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 59; Walker v. British Guarantee Assn. 18 Q. B. 277; Planters' & M. Bank v. Hill, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 201; Peck v. James, 3 Head, 75; State, Overton County, v. Copland, 96 Tenn. 296, 51 L. R. A. 844; The Governor v. McEuen, 5 Humph. 265; York County v. Watson, 15 S. C. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 675; Healdsburg v. Mulligan, 113 Cal. 205, 33 L. R. A. 461; Livingston v. Woods (Mont.) 49 Pac. 487; Jefferson County Comrs. v. Lineberger, 3 Mont. 231, 35 Am. Rep. 462; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 801.

A cestui que trust may either follow the trust estate or the trustee, but may not do both.

A cestui que trust cannot have judgment against his trustee for the trust moneys which have come into his hands, and at the same time have lands purchased with such moneys judged to be the trust property.

Barker v. Barker, 14 Wis. 142; Fears v. Lynch, 28 Ga. 249; Merket v. Smith, 33 Kan. 66; Fowler v. Bovey Sav. Bank, 113 N. Y. 450, 4 L. R. A. 145; Priestly v. Fearnie, 3 Hurlst. & C. 977; Scarf v. Jardine, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 845; Rawson v. Turner, 4 Johns. 469; Sanger v. Wood, 3 Johns. Ch. 416; Morris v. Rexford, 18 N. Y. 552; Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 827, 78 Am. Dec. 192; Bank of Beloit v. Beall, 34 N. Y. 473; Rodermund v. 40 L. R. A.

Clark, 46 N. Y. 854; Bowen v. Mandeville, 95 N. Y. 237; Cheeseman v. Sturges, 9 Bosw. 246; Mattlage v. Poole, 5 Hun. 556; Riley v. Albany Sav. Bank, 36 Hun. 513, 103 N. Y. 669; Curtis v. Williamson, L. R. 10 Q. B. 57; Clough v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 7 Exch. 26; Raymond v. Proprietors of Crown & E. Mills, 2 Met. 319; Sears v. Carrier, 4 Allen, 839; Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Moller v. Tuska, 87 N. Y. 166.

Potter, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts admitted by the pleadings and stated in the reserved questions raise the general question whether the state treasurer, under our statutes relating to that officer and the bond given by him, is liable for public funds in his possession which have been lost by reason of the failure of a bank in which he had deposited them for safe keeping, he being without any fault, blame, or negligence. The reputable character of the bank in the community and among business men, and its excellent reputation for solvency and safety as a place of deposit, is admitted, as well as that the treasurer was not negligent or careless in depositing or leaving the public funds in such bank. While thus acquitting the late officer of all blame, it is urged on the part of the state, by the attorney general, that the treasurer and his sureties, under the statutes and the bond, are insurers of the safety of the public money coming into the custody of the officer, and that, notwithstanding that he has been honest, faithful, and capable in the discharge of his duties, and the moneys have been lost in the absence of any kind of fault on his part, they must respond for all such moneys. The contrary rule is contended for on behalf of defendants. The matter has been fully and ably presented to the court on both sides, both in briefs and upon argument. The decisions of the courts in this country upon this question present an irreconcilable conflict. It is one of first impression in this court. We have examined all the authorities with much care, and have arrived at a conclusion only after mature reflection. We realize the importance of the question, so far as the present case is concerned. It is a matter, however, which, for the future, can and ought to be clearly settled by legislation. In the process of determining the principle which must govern a decision upon the question before us, and the application of the various conflicting authorities to it, it will be useful, in the first place, to set down certain well established rules upon which all the courts are in accord. The point of divergence will thus be the more observable and the better understood.

I. In general, all trustees who have the custody of money, such as executors and administrators, guardians and receivers, and the like, are held not to be liable for the loss of funds occurring without their fault or negligence, and this is so regardless of the form or character of the bond which they may have given, or the statutes or orders of court prescribing their duties. Such trustees are held merely to diligence and prudence in the care of the funds. The rule is stated as follows in 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1269: "The rule in all cases of this sort is that, where a trustee acts by other hands, either from necessity or conformity to the common usage of mankind, he is not made answerable for losses." He is to keep the money as a prudent man would keep his own. Norwood v. Harness, 98 Ind. 134, 140, 49 Am. Rep. 739. In this case, on page 144, the court says: "His business is to keep the money safely, and banks are commonly used as safe places of deposit by prudent men." Notwithstanding that his duty "is to keep the money safely," the trustee, an administrator, was held not liable for money lost by the failure of a bank in which it had been deposited without negligence. Twitty v. House, 7 S. C. N. S. 153; Jacobus v. Jacobus, 37 N. J. Eq. 17; Coz v. Rooms, 38 N. J. Eq. 239; Deberry v. Toey, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 370; McCabe v. Fowler, 84 N. Y. 314; State, Townshend, v. Meagher, 44 Mo. 359, 100 Am. Dec. 298. In the case last cited the suit was brought upon the bond of an administrator, which was conditioned that he should pay over and account for the money or property that should come to his hands belonging to the estate as required by law. It was said that "it is well-established equity law that under certain circumstances executors and administrators are absolved from responsibility, notwithstanding the bond, and notwithstanding the failure to produce the property or pay over its value in money, . . . no negligence being imputable to the administrator or executor. 2 Wms. Exrs. 142, and cases there cited. The obligation of the bond, therefore, in such cases is not absolute." In determining what was "required by law," referring to that phrase in the bond, the court did not resort to any exception found either in the bond or statute, but went to the common law, and as a result of an investigation on that line determined "that executors and administrators, according to the decided cases and views of eminent law writers, stand in the position of trustees of the persons who are interested in the estates upon which they administer, and that they are subject to liability only for want of due care and skill, and that the measure of care and skill required of them is the same as that demanded of bailees for hire, namely, that which prudent men exercise in the direction of their affairs." The cases upon this particular branch of the subject abound in expressions to the effect that such a person, having trust money in his possession, would be negligent if he did not deposit the same in a bank, as that is the place where the most prudent men deposit for safe-keeping their own money, and in some instances such trustees have been held liable for the loss of money on the ground that they were negligent in failing to deposit it in bank. See also Powers v. Loughridge, 38 N. J. Eq. 396; Moore v. Eure, 101 N. C. 11; Lehman v. Robertson, 34 Ala. 489; Foster v. Davis, 46 Mo. 263; Re Kohler, 15 Wash. 618; Law's Estate, 144 Pa. 499, 14 L. R. A. 103; Fahnestock's Appeal, 104 Pa. 46; Jones v. Lewis, 2 Ves. Jr. 240; Knight v. Lord Plymouth, 3 Atk. 480.

2. It is also well settled that there is nothing at common law which distinguishes public treasurers or depositaries from any other financial managers or trustees.

3. The absence of any such distinction is recognized in another well-settled doctrine, 40 L. R. A.

that public officers, having in their official custody money belonging to others than the public are not responsible for its loss occurring without negligence on their part. That rule has been adopted in this country in cases where the officer and his sureties have been sought to be charged in suits upon the official bond. Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. Valley R. Co., 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 449; People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477. In the case of Wilson v. People, 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 449, action was brought upon the official bond of a clerk of the district court, to recover certain moneys which had been deposited with that officer in condemnation proceedings. The money had been deposited by the clerk, to his credit as clerk, in a bank which subsequently failed. The bond was conditioned that the officer shall "faithfully perform all the duties of said office as prescribed by law, that he will punctually pay over to the person legally authorized to receive the same all moneys that may come into his hands by virtue of said office," etc. The court was unanimous in absolving the officer and his sureties from liability, no negligence being imputable to him. The opinion in the case does not attempt to draw any distinction between cases of public and private funds, but in a subsequent case in the same court, which will be hereinafter cited, such a distinction was made, although over the dissent of the writer of the opinion in the Wilson Case, Mr. Justice Goddard. It will be observed that the condition of the bond above quoted was about as strong, if not entirely so, as in any of the cases holding the officer as to public funds to a strict accountability. In the case of People, Nash, v. Faulkner the court of appeals of New York refused to hold the obligation of the bond of a surrogate as absolute, and as rendering himself and sureties liable as insurers of money belonging to others than the public in his official custody, and lost without his fault by the failure of a bank in which it had been deposited. The material conditions of the surrogate's bond were as follows: "Well and truly and faithfully, in all things, perform his duties as county judge of Livingston county, and shall well and truly and faithfully perform his duties as surrogate of said county of Livingston, and shall well and faithfully apply and pay over all moneys and effects that may come into his hands as such county judge in the execution of his office, and shall well and faithfully apply and pay over all moneys and effects that may come into his hands as such surrogate in the execution of his office without fraud, deceit, or delay." With this much, which may be considered as settled law, upon which the decisions are apparently not in conflict, we come to the precise question of the liability of public officers for public funds; and here we are confronted with divergent views, and it is difficult even to reconcile all the authorities which reach the conclusion that such an officer, as to such funds, is an insurer, and bound to respond in any event, with the possible exception of loss occasioned by the act of God or the public enemy. In the consideration of this case we have endeavored to extract the principle from the decisions favoring that strict and absolute rule, and note the effect of the application thereof to our own statutes, and the bond, which is the basis of the present controversy. If, when so applied, such authorities, if followed by us, would render the treasurer and his sureties insurers of the public funds, a further investigation may become necessary to determine whether or not they or the opposing decisions announce the rule more agreeable to our conditions.

The first case involving this question in this country arose in New York.—Albany County Supers. v. Dorr, 25 Wend. 440, decided in 1841,—wherein it was held that a county treasurer was not responsible for public money stolen from his office where there is no imputation of negligence or other default on his part. This case, however, has ceased to be an authority, for the reason that in People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477, the court of appeals announced that, owing to his having often been criticised, and in view of another case next to be adverted to, the question should be considered an open one in that state, although it was denied that it had been at all overruled, and for the further reason that in a more recent case the contrary doctrine has been adopted in that state. Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Denio, 283, arising in the same state, was a case involving the responsibility of a tax collector for moneys collected by him, and stolen from his possession, without any fault, want of care, or omission of duty on his part. He was held responsible, but solely upon the ground that, under the statutes, that officer was a debtor for all the money collected, which, of course, meant that, upon the collection of any tax money, the legal title thereto was in him, and it was not the money of the public, but the officer became eo instante a debtor for the amount, and the statute had provided the only method by which such obligation could be discharged. In passing, it may be said that the courts have not usually accepted that view, and this court announced a different view in the case of State v. Foster (Wyo.) 29 L. R. A. 226. The cases which are based upon a holding that the officer is a debtor for the public funds in his possession must be eliminated from this case as precedents.

The leading case upholding the doctrine that the treasurer occupies the position of an insurer, and on the strength of which the most, if not all, of the cases have adopted that rule of decision, is United States v. Prescott, 8 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734, which was decided at the December term, 1844. Not all the courts, however, nor the same court in later decisions, which have followed that case, and cited it approvingly, have kept to the fundamental principle underlying it. It was an action brought upon the official bond of Prescott, given for his faithful performance of the duties of receiver of public moneys at Chicago. The defense pleaded was that the sum not paid over had been feloniously stolen from his possession, notwithstanding that he had used ordinary care and diligence in keeping the same. A demurrer was filed to the plea, and thereon the opinion of the judges were opposed, and the case was certified to the supreme court upon the question whether "the felonious taking and carrying away the public moneys in the custody of a receiver of public moneys, without any fault or negligence on his part, discharged him and his sureties." On the part of defendants it was contended before that court that the officer was a depositary for hire, and that, unless his liability was enlarged by the special contract to keep safely, he is only subject to the liabilities imposed by law upon such a depositary, and that the special contract did not enlarge his liability. In response, apparently, to that point, the learned justice delivering the opinion said: "This is not a case of bailment, and, consequently the law of bailment does not apply to it. The liability of the defendant, Prescott, arises out of his official bond, and principles which are founded upon public policy." Without quoting in full the condition of the bond, it will answer all purposes by calling attention to the fact that it required the officer to well, truly, and faithfully keep safely, without loaning or using, all the public moneys coming into his possession, and, when orders for their transfer or payment had been received, that he should faithfully and promptly make the same as directed. After quoting the bond, the opinion proceeds as follows: "The condition of the bond has been broken, as the defendant, Prescott, failed to pay over the money received by him when required to do so; and the question is whether he shall be exonerated from the condition of his bond on the ground that the money had been stolen from him. The objection to this defense is, that it is not within the condition of the bond, and this would seem to be conclusive." And again: "Public policy requires that every depositary of the public money should be held to a strict accountability. Not only that he should exercise the highest degree of vigilance, but that 'he should keep safely,' the moneys which come to his hands. Any relaxation of this condition would open a door to frauds which might be practised with impunity. A depositary would have nothing more to do than to lay his plans and arrange his proofs, so as to establish his loss without laches on his part. Let such a principle be applied to our postmasters, collectors of the customs, receivers of public moneys, and others who receive more or less of the public funds, and what losses might not be anticipated by the public." It was held that the defense was not good. It is evident from the most casual reading of the opinion just quoted from so largely, that, as concerned that action, all idea of a bailment was eliminated from the case. The matter of public policy was not brought in as an attachment to any common-law rules relating to bailment. It was not said or held, either expressly or by implication, that the common-law principles affecting the responsibility of bailees for hire, as applied to depositaries of public funds, needed to be modified and made more strict. The court distinctly started out upon the theory that no question of bailment was involved, and placed whatever liability there existed squarely and solely upon the bond. It having been determined by the learned court that the bond, out of which arose the only liability to respond, contained a positive agreement to keep all moneys received safely, and to pay them out or transfer them promptly whenever directed to do so, concluded that public policy forbade any relaxation by the courts of that condition; and, further than that, the only reason given for the existence of that public policy was the opportunity for fraud which would be offered were such defenses permitted, and the chance which an officer would have to manufacture a case of loss without fault. It must be remembered that this was the first case announcing that doctrine.

The next case in point of time, Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Denio, 233, has already been commented upon. Following that came Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. St. 372, decided at the July term, 1846, by the Pennsylvania supreme court, which involved the liability under his bond of a collector of tolls; the condition thereof being that "he shall account for and pay over all moneys he may receive for tolls." The defense was a larceny of the money received for tolls from a secret apartment in a locked desk in the collector's office. The trial court had instructed the jury that, if the collector had kept the public money as a prudent man would keep his own, and exercised that care and diligence which every person of common prudence takes of his own affairs, and if the money was actually stolen as sworn to, then the verdict should be for the defendant. The opinion of the court, delivered by Mr. Chief Justice Gibson, commences by citing the decision in the case of United States v. Prescott, and stating that the same is founded in sound policy and sound law, and the learned justice said: "The responsibility of a public receiver is determined, not by the law of bailment, which is called in to supply the place of a special agreement where there is none, but by the condition of his bond." And, concerning the matter of public policy: "The keepers of the public moneys, or their sponsors, are to be held strictly to the contract; for, if they were to be let off on shallow pretenses, delinquencies, which are fearfully frequent already, would be incessant."

In 1853, the case of Hancock v. Hazzard, 12 Cush. 112, was decided by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts. The action was on the bond of the treasurer and collector of the town of Hancock. The defense in this case was that the unpaid money had been stolen without fault of the collector. In a former case (Colerain v. Bell, 9 Met. 499) it had been said, with reference to such an officer, under the peculiar provisions of the statutes, that the money received by him as collector, in the collection of taxes, is his own money, and not that of the town. That case was referred to in the case reported in 12 Cush. 112, and the court said: "He is a debtor, an accountant, bound to account for and pay over the money he has collected. The loss of his money, therefore, by theft or otherwise, is no excuse for nonperformance. This is founded on the nature of his contract and considerations of public policy,"—citing United States v. Prescott. The court also said that the obligation is not regulated by the law of bailments. It is not difficult to understand that, if the officer is a debtor, no law of bailment is involved. It does, however, require something of an effort to understand what considerations of public policy and the case of United States

v. Prescott had to do with the case, if the officer was a debtor before he lost the money, unless, indeed, the Massachusetts court construed the decision in the Prescott Case as making out that the money in Prescott's hands was his own. At any rate, the case from Massachusetts is not in any sense a precedent for us, under our statutes.

On this side of the judicial controversy the next case arose in Ohio,—State, Wyandot County, v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 608, 67 Am. Dec. 863, decided in 1856. Harper had been county treasurer, and his bond contained the following condition: "Harper shall honestly and faithfully pay over, during his continuance in office, all moneys that shall come into his hands for state, county, and township, or for other purposes, according to law." His residence was broken open, and certain public moneys stolen therefrom, without his fault or negligence. Under the terms of the bond and the statute, it was held that the treasurer was an insurer "against the delinquencies of himself, and against the faults and wrongs of others, in regard to the trust placed in his hands." The case of Muzzy v. Shattuck, which was based upon the theory that the officer was a debtor, and the Prescott Case, and Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. St. 372, based upon a different consideration, were, strangely enough, cited in support of the court's conclusion, without comment. The court adds: "The distinction between this and a common case of bailment, is that the law of the latter is generally founded upon the absence of any positive engagements between the parties to the hiring, or, as it is called, the 'locatio conductio,' and therefore the question arises. What obligation may, with reference to public policy and general convenience, be implied by law, in the absence of such positive engagements? The express contract of the parties may, as in the case now under consideration it has done, vary or supersede those derived from the law of bailments."

A critical examination of some of the early cases cannot fail to impress one with the thought that they observed no distinction between moneys the legal title to which is by law vested in the officer, and those which are merely in official custody and care, but belong to the public; and the various decisions which respectively base their conclusions upon one condition of affairs or the other are cited indiscriminately, as bearing upon and forming a precedent upon the same proposition. This is particularly noticeable in the Indiana cases, when read together. We can readily understand a court which, as in the Prescott Case, has found a special contract which defines the obligation of the officer, and upon that ground enforces it, and refuses any equitable relaxation of the obligation for reasons of public policy; but it must be confessed it is embarrassing to determine the exact reason behind an opinion which approves and follows that doctrine, and at the same time find support for its conclusions in another case, which is founded upon the theory that the money is in the possession of the officer as a debtor. Both kinds of cases have, it is true, held the officer liable under his bond; but the reasons are far different, and in more recent times, when it has been necessary for the public to seek after its money in the hands of others, to whom the officer has intrusted it, the distinction between a debtor and a mere custodian or keeper has become very marked. I do not regard the Ohio case above referred to as imputing the character of debtor to the treasurer, but as holding that the special contract has fixed the extent of his responsibility. The case of Halbert v. State, Martin County Comrs., 22 Ind. 125, may not be based upon the-debtor theory, although the learned justice who wrote the opinion said, in Rock v. Stinger, 36 Ind. 346, that it followed that, the officer not being a mere bailee, the technical title to the money in his hands was in himself, and, in case of his death, it would go to his personal representative, rather than to his executor. And, indeed, in still another case, it was directly held that the title to the money was in the officer. It is, therefore, at least doubtful whether the conclusion of the Indiana court was not influenced to some extent by that theory. In Halbert v. State, Martin County Comrs., 22 Ind. 125, decided in 1864, the strict liability was enforced, as well as in the later case of Rock v. Stinger, 36 Ind. 346, and under statutes and bonds not as positive, in respect to an engagement to keep safely and pay over, as any of the other cases previously cited herein.

We have thus rather minutely discussed the foregoing decisions, for reasons which will become obvious, and from necessity, as it seemed to us, even at the expense of extending this opinion beyond ordinarily reasonable limits, to the end that we might arrive at some satisfactory and exact knowledge of the reasons upon which the doctrine of the majority of the cases upon the subject have been grounded. With the cases above adverted to as leading precedents, quite a number of the state courts have more recently announced the same doctrine. Many adopt the rule by mere reference to authority, and with no attempt at argument. See Fairchild v. Hedges, 14 Wash. 117, 31 L. R. A. 851; Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427; Hennepin County Comrs. v. Jones, 18 Minn. 199 (Gil. 182); Wilson v. Wichita County, 67 Tex. 647; Gartley v. People, Pueblo County (Colo.) 49 Pac. 272; Rose v. Douglass Twp. 52 Kan. 451; Nason v. Erie County Directors of Poor, 126 Pa. 445; State v. Nerin, 19 Nev. 162; Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, 37 Iowa, 550; Tillinghast v. Merrill, 151 N. Y. 135, 34 L. R. A. 678; Thompson v. Township Sixteen, 30 Ill. 99; State, Mississippi County, v. Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 322; State, The Township, v. Powell, 67 Mo. 396, 29 Am. Rep. 512; Baily v. Com. (Pa.) 9 Cent. Rep. 223; Bush v. Johnson County, 48 Neb. 1, 32 L. R. A. 223. The doctrine announced in such comprehensive terms by the Prescott Case has, however, been considerably modified in a later case in the same court. The Prescott Case was followed by that court in Boydens v. United States, 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 527; Bevans v. United States, 13 Wall. 56, 20 L. ed. 531; United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 13 L. ed. 643; United States v. Dashiell, 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319; United States v. Keebler, 9 Wall. 33, 19 L. ed. 574. The United States cases following the Prescott Case make one matter clear, viz., that the officer is a bailee, but under special obligations. It was 40 L. R. A.

said, in the opinion in Bevans v. United States, 13 Wall. 56, 20 L. ed. 531: "Bailee he was, undoubtedly, but by his bond he had insured the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money which came to his hands." And it is, further on in the opinion, stated that the officer had not only assumed the common law obligations of a bailee, but had given bond to keep safely the money in his hands.

The case which modified to some extent the rule stated in the Prescott and subsequent cases in the United States Supreme Court, above cited, is United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89. The direct result of this case was to exonerate a bonded government officer for the loss of public moneys, occurring by the act of the public enemy, and the bond, however stringent in its terms, was held not absolute, if performance of its conditions should be prevented by the act of God or the public enemy, without any neglect or fault on the officer's part. The real effect of this case has been much disputed. It has been thought by some to have practically overruled the former decisions, but one of the able judges—Mr. Justice Miller—dissented from the majority opinion because it did not flatly overrule the Prescott and subsequent cases. That distinguished jurist, in a dissenting opinion of much clearness and vigor, stated that he had not believed, and did not then believe, that there was any principle of public policy, recognized by the courts or imposed by law, which made a depository of the public money liable for it, when it had been lost or destroyed without any fault or negligence or fraud on his own part, and when he had faithfully discharged his duty in regard to its custody and safe-keeping. This opinion, although written by a dissenting judge, has been approved and followed by a respectable number of the state courts since then, and its utterances strongly approved by many other judges, who have found themselves obliged, for the like reasons as therein expressed, to dissent from the views of the majority of their court.

Whatever may be said of the majority opinion in the Thomas Case, it is entirely manifest, and open to no possible contradiction, that it was necessary, and so held, to modify the general expressions contained in the opinion in the Prescott Case. The learned justice who delivered the opinion in the Thomas Case, Mr. Justice Bradley, in discussing the duties and responsibilities of a public financial officer, said: "The general rule of official obligation, as imposed by law, is that the officer shall perform the duties of his office honestly, faithfully, and to the best of his ability. This is the substance of all official oaths. In ordinary cases, to expect more than this would deter upright and responsible men from taking office. This is substantially the rule by which the common law measures the responsibility of those whose official duties require them to have the custody of property public or private. If, in any case, a more stringent obligation is desirable, it must be prescribed by statute, or exacted by express stipulation." To this general rule, so clearly stated, we think no well-considered case has offered opposition. The learned justice then goes on to show that the basis of the common-law rule is founded on the doctrine of bailment; that the public officer, with property in his official possession, is a bailee: and that the rules growing out of that relation must govern, unless the legislature, at its pleasure, shall change the common-law rule of responsibility; and, proceeding, says: "Where, however, a statute merely prescribes the duties of the officer, as that he shall safely keep money or property received or collected, and shall pay it over when called upon to do so by the proper authority, it cannot, without more, be regarded as enlarging or in any way affecting the degree of his responsibility. The mere prescription of duties has nothing to do with the question as to what shall constitute the rule of responsibility in the discharge of those duties, or a legal excuse for the nonperformance of them, or a discharge from their obligation. The common law, which is common reason, prescribes that; and statutes, in subordination to their terms, are to be construed agreeably to the rules of the common law." After referring to the solicitude shown by Congress for the due and faithful discharge of duties by public officials, which is found indicated by statutes requiring officers to keep safely, without using or loaning, or depositing in banks, etc., all public moneys in their hands, and the exacting of a bond to a like effect, the opinion proceeds to state, in substance, that the officers are yet nothing but bailees, but that they are subject to special obligations, and the ordinary law of bailment cannot be invoked to determine the degree of their responsibility, but that is fixed by special contract. While I do not regard the case just discussed as deciding anything more than that, under the most stringent of statutes and bonds, the officer would be absolved from liability for losses caused by an overruling necessity, yet it does seem to me that the relation which an officer bears to the money in his hands, and the manner in which the extent of his responsibility is to be measured, is clearly stated; and I am of the opinion that no court at this day holds, or would hold as generally as the Prescott Case seems to do, to the effect that the officer would be liable at all events, and that no circumstances of any character whatever could exonerate him.

So far we have adverted only to those cases which adopt the rule of strict liability. As has been indicated, the courts of this country are by no means in accord upon this proposition. The courts of last resort in a few of the states have refused to accede to the idea that there exists any rational distinction between the measure of the responsibility of an officer with public funds, and one having private moneys in his control, or any bonded trustee upon whom is imposed the duty of keeping money belonging to others. The existence of a public policy forbidding any relaxation of the condition of a bond given by the public official, when there has been no sort of negligence or fraud on his part, is strenuously controverted by such courts, as well, especially in more recent cases, by a respectable number of dissenting judges. I shall not attempt more than a very brief citation and reference to the cases maintaining a view opposed to the Prescott Case and those following it. They are, Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31

Am. Rep. 284; State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 59; Peck v. James, 3 Head, 75; State, Overton County, v. Copeland (decided in 1895) 96 Tenn. 296, 31 L. R. A. 844; York County v. Watson, 15 S. C. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 675; Healdsburg v. Mulligan (decided in 1896) 113 Cal. 205, 33 L. R. A. 461; Livingston v. Woods (Mont.) 49 Pac. 437,—the latter case overruling a former decision in that state.

The Alabama case was one involving the loss of public moneys caused by their being stolen; but in a more recent case in that state (Alston v. State, 92 Ala. 124, 13 L. R. A. 659) a probate judge was held liable for a loss of money occasioned by the failure of a bank, but upon the sole ground that the officer had no authority to deposit the money in a bank, and his unlawful act constituted him a debtor for the money so deposited. The opinion in the case of Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284, is very able and logical. The authorities are fully commented upon, and the Prescott Case, among others, is reviewed, and the court says: "Notwithstanding the high character of the several courts whose decisions are above cited, we cannot yield our convictions as to the construction to be given to the bond in such case, or concur in relation to the new-born public policy, based upon supposed facility or temptation, which depositaries of public money are said to possess, for collusive robberies. 'For,' as was said by Redfield, J., in Bridges v. Perry, 14 Vt. 262, 'we cannot believe that they are founded upon any just warrant, either of sound judgment or constant experience.' . . . On the contrary, this is the first case in this state in which the 'shallow pretense' of robbery without fault on his part has been interposed by a treasurer in action upon his official bond. Ever since the decision of Potter v. Titcomb, 7 Me. 802, the people of this state have entertained a different view from that promulgated for the first time in United States v. Prescott as to the effect of an official bond stipulating for a 'faithful discharge' of official duties. In the case last cited, Mellen, Ch. J., . . . said: 'The design of all official bonds is to secure from losses those who are or may be interested in the faithful discharge of the duties mentioned in them. Such bonds are given to protect against damage occasioned by unfaithfulness, negligence, or dishonesty in such officers.'" And again: "Were the law otherwise in this state, and known to be such, faithfulness and honesty, even if they continued to be considered commendable personal qualities, would be held, if not mere abstractions, matters of secondary importance, at best, in candidates. Such qualifications, accompanied by the highest capability, would, in the absence of sufficient property in the principal to secure his sureties, fail to obtain them; for many a responsible person would gladly sign a bond as surety, guaranteeing the faithfulness, honesty, and capacity of his neighbor, which were so potent in effecting his election to the responsible public station of county treasurer, who would long hesitate to insure the public against possible loss happening in spite of such qualities; for to insure against such a loss is not only vouching for the integrity of the officer, but practically for that of the rest of mankind,—that they will not rob him." The fact should be mentioned that, after the earlier decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States on this subject, Congress passed a law authorizing the court of claims to hear and determine and afford relief in cases of all claims of a disbursing officer for relief where a loss had occurred without fault or negligence on his part; thus offsetting in a large degree, as to Federal officers, the harshness of the rule promulgated by the courts, and, it may be said, perhaps justly, as indicating congressional disbelief in the public policy discovered by the court. And in Indiana and Ohio the legislature in some instances enacted special laws to relieve public officials who claimed to have suffered loss in the absence of neglect. Mount v. State, Richey, 90 Ind. 29, 46 Am. Rep. 192; Scio Bd. of Edu. v. McLandsborough, 86 Ohio St. 227, 38 Am. Rep. 582. The other cases which agree with the Maine court contain opinions giving evidence of much research and ability, and in all cases fully exploiting there reasons for refusing adherence to the doctrine that the treasurer and his sureties upon the bond are insurers.

Should it become necessary for this court at any time to determine which line of decisions to follow, I am constrained to confess that at present it seems to me the weight of authority can hardly be said, upon this question, to be settled by the preponderance of the number of courts advocating or adopting either view, but that it is a sufficiently open subject to require one's judgment to be formed only upon that line of reasoning which shall commend itself as possessing the most wisdom and comporting with what is the most just, taking into careful consideration the enlightened public policy, and the individual rights of its citizens. Of the more recent cases upon the broad proposition, Montana, California, and Tennessee have followed in the footsteps of Maine; and Colorado, Washington, and Nebraska have adopted the theory of strict responsibility. With reference to the matter of public policy, the California court, in the case cited supra, uses the following language: "It is urged, in many of the cases which hold the officer to an absolute responsibility for all moneys coming to his hands, that if robbery or larceny were held to be a defense, it would endanger the security of public funds, and encourage simulated robberies and pretended larcenies. But we cannot assume that courts of justice are unable to protect the public in such cases; and, even if they could not do so in all cases, justice does not require that the public shall be protected by enforcing against its servant, the officer, and his sureties, a liability the law has not imposed upon them, and which they have not assumed."

In the opinion of the majority of the court, however, this case does not require our assent to or dissent from the cases enforcing the more liberal rule. We express no opinion upon the general proposition. In our judgment, the important question is whether, under the principle announced in the Prencott Case, and those others which intelligently follow it, there is any such liability upon the bond sued on in this action as is contended for. We are inclined to believe that a few of the courts, in attempting to apply the theory of absolute responsibility, have perverted the original doctrine, while apparently enforcing it. We should hesitate to fall into a similar error. For that reason we have discussed the cases lying at the foundation of the rule, that we might be able to intelligently state the principle upon which the decisions rest. That principle is that, although the officer is a bailee, he has entered into a contract, with sureties, positively engaging to do something. The bond may fully express that engagement, or it may be aided by the statutes which prescribe the duties agreed to be performed. Finding a positive and solemn agreement, subject to no exception stated in the bond or statutes, to distinguish between a bond in such case and bonds in other cases to which reference has been made, the courts resort to the matter of public policy, which they hold requires that the absolute agreement or condition shall not be relaxed by any consideration of care or faithfulness, honesty, or skill, which may have been displayed by the officer. That public policy is held to arise, and only to arise, out of the possibility of fraud and simulated defenses, which public depositaries and their sureties could and would interpose, if any defense of lack of negligence or fraud on the officer's part is to be permitted. As was stated in an earlier part of this opinion, public policy is not invoked to alter any law of bailment. It does not act upon the common-law obligations of a bailee, but is effectual only to keep the official strictly and absolutely to his bond and the conditions thereof. It is universally recognized and so stated in Boyden v. United States, 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 537, that, virtute officii, the officer is not an insurer, but he may make himself so when he enters into a solemn obligation by contract. Such an obligation has been found to exist in bonds, and under statutes supplemented by bond, which require the depositary of public funds to keep them safely, or to pay over to his successor, or to some other officer, all moneys which he shall have officially received, or to pay over all moneys belonging to his office, or language of similar, but as strong, import. In the case of a collector of taxes, whose duty it is to pay all money which he collects to some general depositary, and his bond requires that he shall pay over all the money which he shall collect or receive in his official capacity; in the case of a treasurer, who is required by statute or bond, or both, to keep safely all the money coming into his hands, or, if that provision is lacking, or it may be present, he is required to pay to his successor all moneys belonging to his office,—it is held that the condition of the bond in either event would be broken if the officer did not, in fact, pay over all moneys officially received by him, or did not keep the funds safely, or had failed to pay over all the money belonging to his office, as the case might be. The latter requirement is in the bond or statute in the Missouri, Colorado, and some other cases. It is obvious, therefore, that, primarily, our inquiry should be directed to the condition of the bond,—to the positive engagement which these parties have entered into. No court has held that, where the condition of the bond is that the officer will prudently and diligently keep the money, he is an insurer; but it has been held that such a condition does not make the officer an insurer. The fact alone that a bond is given is not sufficient. No well-considered case so holds, with the possible exception of the case of Tillinghast v. Merrill, 151 N. Y. 135, 34 L. R. A. 678. From a reading of the statutes concerned in that decision, together with the decision itself, it might appear that no attention was given to the bond, and that the statute did not impose upon the officer any positive and clear duty to do either of the things above mentioned; yet we observe, by reference to the statutes of that state, that the bond was required to be conditioned that the officer should keep safely all moneys coming into his hands. I cannot believe that the learned court overlooked the bond, and paid no attention to it, as it must have been before it. In that case it was conceded by the court, as it has been in very many of the cases, that the rule of absolute liability is a harsh one, and shocks one's idea of justice, and that it is capable of working much hardship upon the individual. But the court said, in substance, that right there public policy came in, and, as a general guard against fraud and simulated defenses, demanded that the court enforce the rule that depositaries of public funds and their sureties are insurers of the absolute safety to the moneys in the official care. That case, admittedly, was decided without any regard to former adjudicated cases outside of New York.

We come now to a consideration of the condition of the bond in suit, and what will constitute a breach thereof. Have the parties entered into a certain, positive engagement, from which, under the decisions maintaining the rule of strict responsibility, they cannot be exonerated for losses occurring without the fault or negligence of the principal in the bond? The condition of the bond in suit is as follows: "Now, therefore, if the above-bounded Otto Gramm shall and will truly and justly account for all the moneys coming into his hands by virtue of his said office as treasurer of the state of Wyoming, and shall faithfully and truly perform all the duties of his said office, then this obligation shall be void; otherwise, the same shall remain in full force and effect." The bond is required by § 1697, Rev. Stat., as follows: "The territorial [state] treasurer shall give bond to the territory [state] of Wyoming, in the penal sum of not less than $75,000 conditioned that he will truly and justly account for all moneys coming into his hands by virtue of his office." The additional provision, embodied in the bond, that the treasurer "shall faithfully and truly perform all the duties of his said office," is not made a statutory part of the condition; but, as the other condition must be construed, we do not think, with respect to the breach alleged in this action, the aforesaid supplemental condition adds anything to the obligation of the contract. The undoubted meaning of the condition to "truly and justly account for all moneys" is that he shall account therefor according to law; and, in respect to such an accounting for moneys, it operates the same as a condition to perform the duties which the law has imposed. What are the statutory duties in respect to the moneys coming into the treasurer's hands? They are embodied in the following provisions: "The treasurer shall: First—Receive and keep all moneys of the territory [state], not expressly required by law to be received and kept by some other person. Second—Pay all warrants duly and legally issued by the auditor so long as there are in his hands funds sufficient to pay such warrants: provided, that his payment for any purpose shall in no case exceed the amount appropriated for such purpose. Third—Keep a just, true, and comprehensive account of all money received and disbursed. Fourth—Keep a just and true account of each head of appropriation made by law, and the disbursements made under the same. Fifth—Render his accounts to the auditor for settlement quarterly, or oftener if required. Sixth—Report to each house of the legislative assembly within ten days after the commencement of each regular session, a detailed statement of the condition of the treasury, and its operations for the two preceding years." Rev. Stat. § 1696. The provision about rendering accounts to the auditor is, perhaps, modified by the law, subsequently enacted, providing for a state examiner whose duty it is to examine the books of all financial officers. "The territorial [state] treasurer shall in no case disburse or pay out the territorial [state] funds except on warrants drawn by the auditor." Id. § 1734. "Biennially, at the end of their respective terms of office, the treasurer and auditor shall, upon the day above named [March 31], deliver to their successors all official books, papers, records, and balances of funds which may be in their possession: provided, that if either or both of such successors be not appointed, confirmed, and qualified, the existing incumbent of the office shall retain such territorial property until such appointment, confirmation, and qualification of his successor shall have taken place." Id. § 1731. The section from which this last-quoted provision is taken was enacted while Wyoming was a territory, as, indeed, were all the laws above referred to, and when the treasurer and auditor were appointive officers, and served for a term of two years, which expired biennially on March 31. Under the Constitution and laws of the state, they are elective officers and hold for a term of four years, which expires on the first Monday of January, instead of March 31. Therefore, so much only, if any, of the provision of § 1731, with regard to delivery of books and funds to a successor, is in force which requires it to be done at the expiration of the official term.

The engagement of the defendants herein, in and by the bond, was that the treasurer should account according to law for all moneys coming into his hands. He was required to receive and keep all funds of the state not expressly required to be received and kept by some other person, to pay out or disburse no state funds except upon auditor's warrants, and, at the expiration of his term of office, to deliver all balances of funds in his possession to his successor. It is reasonably clear that the phrase, "balances of funds in his possession," refers, applies to, and means all such funds which should, under the law, be in his possession,—such balances of funds as, having regard to his duties and responsibilities, he ought to have in his possession; or, to put it, perhaps, more distinctly, all such funds which he has received, and has not lawfully paid out, or for which he is not entitled to any credit, legally or equitably, and for which he is bound in law to respond. Had there been a statute expressly exonerating the treasurer from all losses occurring without his fault, then, under § 1781, it is evident any funds so lost would not be legally regarded as in his possession, which he is thereby required to deliver to his successor. There is no such statute. Nevertheless, under all the decisions, as hereinbefore explained, he will be exonerated for such losses, or, rather, he will not be liable for them unless he and his sureties have positively contracted to become so. There is no express statutory requirement that the treasurer shall pay to his successor all the moneys belonging to his office, nor that he will pay to him, or any other person, all the money which he shall have received. We are therefore obliged to resort to that provision concerning his duty to receive and keep the moneys of the state to determine whether there has been an agreement to safely keep, or to securely preserve, the public funds. It is manifest that unless, by that provision, the statute has imposed upon the treasurer the absolute and unmistakable duty to keep safely the moneys, there is nothing elsewhere in the statute, or in the bond, which in any sense approaches an agreement to "safely keep" such money. The proposition that this case is within the principle of strict responsibility, and that the line of decisions adopting that rule should be accepted as precedents, or authority, assuming them to correctly announce the law, must stand or fall upon the construction of that provision of § 1696, which says that "the treasurer shall receive and keep all moneys of the state, not expressly required by law to be kept by some other person." It is observable that the statute does not expressly state that the treasurer shall keep "safely" the public funds. That word "safely," which has cut so important a figure in a majority of the cases, is absent from our statute. Does the requirement that he shall receive and keep mean, intrinsically, as used in the section, the same as "keep safely"? Is the latter word mere surplusage? In what sense did the legislature employ the word "keep," in respect to the public moneys? In answering these questions, it should not be forgotten that we are construing, not only a statute, but a contract, because only upon the contract can any liability in this action be maintained. Further than that, we are construing a contract which, it is contended, is absolute, so far as it goes, and not entitled to any equitable defense; a contract which, if found to agree to "safely keep" the public moneys, renders the contractors insurers; a contract which, it is insisted, must be strictly enforced, although by doing so a harsh rule is adopted, and a distinction is made between the officer and all other kinds of trustees.

The court has no sort of authority to make a contract between the state and these defendants. The contract, whatever it is, has already been made. The court has no right to impose upon the defendants any higher degree of responsibility than the legislature has done, and by their bond they have assumed. If, by the intrinsic purport of the statute, the duty is not imposed upon the treasurer to keep safely the public funds, without exception, it would exceed the judicial prerogative to force such duty upon him. The duty of the court is merely to construe and interpret the statutes, not to make them. The first specified duty of the treasurer is that he "shall receive and keep all moneys of the state not expressly required by law to be received and kept by some other person." In what sense is the duty to receive and keep thus prescribed? The last part of the provision, which qualifies the first as to that which the treasurer is to receive and keep, viz., that money of the state not expressly required by law to be received and kept by some other person, will not be understood by anyone to comprehend only such money as is required to be kept safely by some other person; but the idea clearly conveyed is that the exception refers to state funds which belong in the custody of other persons. This must indicate somewhat the sense of the entire sentence. It would be the sheerest folly to attempt to supply the word "safely," following and qualifying the word "kept." Ought the court, nevertheless, to interpret the entire provision as requiring the officer to keep safely the state moneys, so as to mean without exception and loss in any manner? The answer to that depends upon three considerations: (1) The sense in which the language respecting the prescribed duty is employed in the provision; (2) the susceptibility of the provision to any other reasonable construction; (3) the significance of the word "safely," if supplied or implied.

In regard to the matter first suggested: The provision under discussion is the only one respecting the general custody of state moneys. While stating a duty of the officer, it describes that which he shall receive and keep. Construing the entire sentence, and giving due effect to all its parts, and, in view of the significant absence of anything therein to indicate the method or manner in which the money shall be received or kept, it must be held to have reference only to the custody of the money, and that it has no greater force than if it had said that the treasurer shall receive and have the custody and care of all money of the state not expressly required to be received and cared for by another person. The conclusion that this is the correct interpretation of the statutory provision in question appears to me to be irresistible.

Take, however, the second matter suggested for consideration: Is the provision susceptible of any other reasonable construction than that it imposes upon the treasurer the clear duty to keep the money safely? What has already been said in some degree furnishes an answer to this inquiry. There is, however, a further answer. Several degrees of care to be bestowed upon property or money intrusted with a depositary are recognized in the law, only two of which we need notice: First. That degree which is the highest known to the common law, viz., the exercise of diligence, fidelity, faithfulness, and such care as a prudent man would take of his own property or money.

As to large amounts of public funds, we might assume and hold that the care ought to be such as a very prudent man would exercise,—a high degree of vigilance in addition to fidelity. Second. That the money shall be kept safely at all events and without loss, except, probably, that which may result from the act of God or the public enemy. The degree of care first above mentioned is that which is always implied, in the absence of a special contract, as to money or property in the hands of a trustee. The responsibility of absolute safe-keeping, free from loss, is never applied or enforced, except when found to be specially contracted for. Take our statute. It requires the officer to keep certain moneys, without further specification. Is it susceptible of the construction that diligence and prudence are only intended as a measure of responsibility? Is it reasonably susceptible of any other? We can imply the less strict measure of liability, because such implication does no violation to any rule of law or interpretation. It is the implication which would arise if the statute had said that the treasurer shall have the custody of the money, and nothing more. It adopts the measure of care and liability which would follow, in the absence of a special contract differing therefrom. To supply the word or imply the duty which, some of the cases hold, imports an absolute safe keeping without loss, and a liability which admits of no defense of loss without fault or negligence, we must supply or imply that which has no place in the law outside of an express or special agreement. In that event, it is necessary to say that the provision for keeping the money, standing alone, means more than it meant at common law, and imports the very highest degree of care and responsibility known to the law anywhere. We are unable to conceive of any possible authority for going to that length. In our judgment, the provision is not only reasonably susceptible of the more liberal interpretation, but it is not reasonably susceptible of any other.

The third point suggested for consideration is the significance of the word "safely," if it is to be supplied. The word not being found in the statute, and coming in only by way of implication from that which is expressed, the question arises, In what sense is it implied, if at all? At common law, the duty of a trustee with respect to money in his hands is more frequently than otherwise spoken of as to keep safely. Yet, when so used and spoken of, it has no stronger force or meaning than that the money shall be kept and cared for with diligence and prudently, by the exercise of that degree of vigilance which has already been adverted to,—less than the requirement for absolute safety. When we imply that word, or the duty represented thereby, as following or resulting from the express requirement of the statute, we must take it with its common-law significance and interpretation. We have no authority to interpolate it into the statute with any confined or strict meaning which it is held to possess when found in an express contract. Again, in the absence of a bond to perform the duty, the requirement to keep safely, although clearly expressed in the statute, would not impose the absolute responsibility upon the officer as an insurer. We are convinced that the provision of the statute under discussion actually means that the treasurer shall receive and keep the money according to law. There is no regulation of the manner in which, or the persons from whom, he shall receive the money in this particular provision. To determine those matters, we must resort to other portions of the statute or to implication. Neither is the manner or method in which the officer shall keep the money regulated by this particular provision of the statute. To determine that matter, also, we must find the regulation in other portions of the statute or resort to implication. Having undertaken the duty of keeping the money, he must perform that duty according to law. The statute, however, nowhere else regulates that matter, nor the measure of his liability. Clearly, therefore, we are required to furnish the manner and the measure of the liability by implication, upon well-known principles of law, inasmuch as the condition of the bond compels us to look elsewhere to determine its force and extent. From either of the considerations above discussed the conviction is forced upon us that the duty imposed upon the treasurer by statute and all reasonable implications therefrom was that he should have the custody of the money of the state, and should exercise a diligent and prudent care over the money, but in a high degree, and should also bring to the performance of such duty strict fidelity and faithfulness; and it therefore follows that by the bond neither the treasurer nor his sureties undertook any greater responsibility, for the reason that they contracted that the treasurer should justly and truly account for the public moneys, which accounting, we hold, means according to law.

We have said that the statute does not regulate or prescribe the manner in which the money shall be kept. The Constitution, indeed, contains some restrictions upon its use, and some commands upon the legislature concerning money received from certain sources. It is provided by that instrument that the making of profit, directly or indirectly, out of any public money, or using the same for any purpose not authorized by law, shall be deemed a felony, and be punished as provided by law. Const. art. 15, § 8. The legislature is required to pass laws "for the suitable keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the land-grant funds, and shall require of all officers charged with the same, or the safe-keeping thereof, to give ample bonds for all moneys and funds received by them." Id. art. 18, § 4. The legislature has not required a separate bond for the land funds, nor enacted any law concerning the keeping thereof. Permanent land funds are authorized to be invested by the treasurer in certain kinds of securities. Laws 1890-91, p. 389; Laws 1895, p. 125. It seems evident that all of these provisions fall short of prescribing the degree of care which shall be exercised by the officer. Statutes, in subordination to their terms, are to be construed agreeably to the rules of the common law. United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall., at page 845, 21 L. ed. 92; Bacon, Abr. title Statute, I (4). It seems to me quite clear that it is not only possible to give to the statute the common-law interpretation, but that, in connection with the context, that is the sense in which the legislature enacted it; that, if a more rigorous duty was designed to be imposed, other words would have been employed which would have plainly indicated it. In regard to a school district treasurer, the statute provides that he shall have the custody of all moneys belonging to the district. Rev. Stat. § 3959. It is therefore not an absurdity to suppose that the legislature may have used such words only as shall require, not absolute security to be afforded by a public treasurer, but the exercise of appropriate diligence and vigilance. If to "keep safely" implies more than to keep diligently, honestly, and faithfully, then, I ask, What right has the court to imply the higher and more onerous responsibility? The statute is certainly susceptible of the less harsh and burdensome construction. I have no doubt but that, in a sense, the treasurer is charged with the safe-keeping of the moneys intrusted to his care, in the sense that he is to guard the same, and exercise a high degree of vigilance to prevent its loss. Any trustee, administrator, receiver, guardian, or public officer, as to private moneys, is charged with the safe-keeping of the funds in his control. He has the responsibility of their care. But the fact that one is charged with the safe-keeping of money does not imply that he is an insurer of its safety, and such a rule has at no time been promulgated. It is only where the party has positively contracted to safely preserve that he is found to be an insurer.

I am aware that the learned judge delivering the opinion in the case of Thompson v. Township Sixteen, 30 Ill. 101, said that, the duty of the officer being to keep the money, it follows that he is to keep it safely. The court did not say that to keep meant to keep safely, but that the duty to keep safely followed the duty to keep. But I cannot regard the statement as anything but mere dictum, for the reason that, immediately preceding such remark, the opinion quotes the statute, which in express terms required the officer to "keep safely." This remark is adopted in the case of State v. Nevin, 19 Nev. 163, and applied to a statute of Nevada, which did not even expressly require the treasurer to keep the moneys, but did provide that he should receive all moneys "due and accruing to his county, and disburse the same on the proper orders," etc. The Nevada statute further provided that, at the expiration of his office, the treasurer should deliver to his successor all public moneys in his possession, and that at least once a year the money in his office should be exhibited to the county board. Unless the requirement as to the periodical exhibition of the money adds something to the other statutory provisions, and amounts to an unmistakable indication that the money is, by statute, required to be securely preserved, I should be inclined, with all due respect, to regard the Nevada case as going beyond the doctrine laid down by the leading cases announcing the theory of strict responsibility, and I should hesitate to follow it. I think that case, however, and most, if not all, of the cases enforcing the doctrine of strict liability, can be clearly distinguished from the case at bar, owing to the difference between the bond or statutes; and, eliminating the cases based upon a positive and clear condition in the bond or requirement of statute, and considering the authorities which deny the strict liability in any case, there is not, upon a statute and bond like that here, a great weight of authority nor preponderance of cases favoring the doctrine that the treasurer and his sureties are insurers of the safety of the public funds. The earlier cases have been referred to. A brief reference to some of the later ones will be useful.

In the New Jersey case (New Providence Twp. v. McEachron, 83 N. J. L. 339) the statute prescribing the duties of a township collector was, "Shall pay the moneys which he shall have received by virtue of any such assessment, to the county collector." The court said that "the condition of the bond, read, as it must be read, in connection with the provision of the statute above quoted, is of the purport that the collector will pay over the moneys received by him in his official character. The obligation to do this is unconditional, and there is no principle on which a qualification can be arbitrarily annexed to it." In the case at bar, if the condition of the bond is not an unconditional obligation to keep safely all moneys received, and deliver to a successor all moneys not paid out on lawful warrants, there is equally no principle upon which such an obligation can be annexed to it. In Minnesota, in the case of Hennepin County v. Jones, 18 Minn. 199 (Gil. 182), the statute expressly required the officer to "safely keep" all moneys coming into his hands. In the later case of Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427, no such express provision appears, but the court, following the previous decision, held the officer liable, on the ground that, according to the weight of authority, the principle of strict liability is enforced, not only where the direct terms of a statute impose the duty to pay over all moneys received, but where such duty is to be gathered from its general tenor, and the duty was found in the general tenor of the statute. The Nebraska court adopts similar language; its statement in Bush v. Johnson County, 48 Neb. 1, 82 L. R. A. 228, at page 10, 48 Neb., being "where the law, in positive terms, or from its general tenor, and without any limitation upon the obligation, requires that the officer pay over public funds which have been received by him and held as such." But in that case, the bond itself was conditioned for the payment over of all the moneys of the county which the officer received. It is evident, therefore, that the reference to the principle as affected by the "general tenor of the statute" was unnecessary. In the Texas case (Wilson v. Wichita County, 67 Tex. 647) the condition of the bond was that the treasurer would "safely keep" the school fund, etc. In the earlier Texas case of Boggs v. State, 46 Tex. 10, the bond is not given, but the language of the opinion indicates that it was conditioned for the payment over by a collector of all moneys received, less his commissions. The Kansas case does not quote the bond or statute, but the opinion states that the officer assumed the duty of safely keeping the public funds coming into his hands, and cites certain sections of the statutes. They required the officer to receive and take charge of all moneys belonging to the township, and pay out and account therefor upon orders drawn upon him by the township trustee. That much would not seem to go further than our own statute, but there was a penal statute, also cited, which subjected the officer to a fine if he should neglect or refuse, on demand, after the expiration of his office, to deliver to his successor all moneys or other property appertaining to such office. This provision clearly distinguishes the Kansas case from the one at bar, and puts it in the class with the Colorado and Missouri cases, where the statutes required all money belonging to the office to be paid over. The Iowa case was founded upon a bond conditioned for a faithful performance of the duties of the office, and the statute required the officer to "hold" the money. It may be doubtful whether there is any distinction between that case and the one at bar. If not, we are not prepared to yield our convictions upon the construction, which we believe the true one, to be placed upon a statute like our own. In Washington, the Constitution provides that the legislature shall provide for the strict accountability of county officers for all public moneys which may officially come into their possession. And in Fairchild v. Hedges, 14 Wash. 117, 31 L. R. A. 851, the bond required by statute which seems to have been construed in the light of the constitutional provision, was conditioned that "all moneys received by him [the officer] for the use of the county shall be paid as the commissioners shall from time to time direct," and "for the faithful discharge of his duties." In that case Mr. Chief Justice Hoyt dissented, saying that it was a strained construction of the statute and obligation which made the officer the guarantor of the safekeeping of the public moneys.

All of the cases adopting the strict doctrine do so upon the terms of the bond or statute, and, distinguishing them according to the principle or reasons behind the respective decisions, or the various terms or provisions of the statute, none of them, with the possible exception of the cases from Iowa and Washington, and the later Minnesota case, can be said to have found the strict contract in a bond and statute at all similar to that in the case at bar. The cases in which the general proposition has been determined, one way or the other, involve losses occurring in various ways. In some of them the money has been lost by larceny, robbery, or burglary, and in others through the insolvency of a bank in which it had been deposited. No distinction, upon principle, between the various causes of loss, in the absence of negligence, has been made in the adjudicated cases. If the bond, according to its own terms, does not require that the money be kept safely, or that all that has been received or all belonging to the office shall be paid over, without exception, the extent of its obligation may be controlled by the statute. But to authorize the application of the strict rule, the obligation must be certain, positive, and clear, and made express by the direct terms of the bond or statute, read in connection with it. If nothing appeared in the statute prescribing the officer's duties, the courts would imply that he was to keep the money safely, and to pay or deliver to his successor all the balance of money in his hands. As so implied, however, the engagement or duty would not be absolute, and a defense of loss without fault would be permissible. To say, as was said in Illinois, in Thompson v. Township Sixteen, 80 Ill. 101, that the duty of the officer being to keep the money, it follows that he is to keep it safely, is nothing more or less than implying the duty to keep safely. This may be allowable for certain purposes, but not for the purpose of making an express and absolute statute or contract. When we enter the field of implied duties, we must respect the law thereof. When the duty to keep safely is implied, and not expressed, its meaning and effect are determined as at common law; and at common law that requirement meant only to keep diligently and prudently.

We are unable to give our consent to reading into the statute the very words or language or provision omitted therefrom, which will render applicable, and the only thing which will render applicable, the harsh rule, which is not found elsewhere, respecting depositaries of money. No liability can be predicated upon the theory that the treasurer is a debtor for the money in his hands. Our statutes proceed upon a different idea altogether, and this court, in State v. Foster (Wyo.) 29 L. R. A. 226, held that the state and county treasurers are but custodians of the public funds committed into their hands. Neither can it be said that the deposit of the public funds in a bank is an unlawful act, and constitutes the treasurer a debtor. The admitted facts show that for many years the custom has been for custodians of the public funds to deposit them in banks for safekeeping, and that no other safe place has been provided. The legislature has known of this custom, as well as the people generally, and it would be going very far at this late date to hold such an act unlawful. Further than that, the Constitution contains a provision recognizing banks, at least national and state banks, as proper places for deposit of public funds. It provides that all public money shall, whenever practicable, be deposited in a national bank, or bank incorporated under the laws of this state; provided that the said bank shall furnish security to be approved as provided by law, and shall also pay a reasonable rate of interest, which interest shall accrue to the fund from which it is derived. Const. art. 15, § 7. That section is inoperative, however, as the legislature has not provided by law for the approval of the security, nor enacted any law for carrying the provisions of the section into effect.

The fact that the funds in Treasurer Gramm's hands were deposited in a private bank cannot, in my judgment, affect our determination. None of the cases on either side of the question make any distinction between a deposit of public moneys in corporate and private banking institutions. In some of the cases, and in many of those involving the liability of other kinds of trustees, the money was in private banks. The relation of banker and depositor, and of the banker to the fund, is the same, whether the bank is private or corporate. One cannot fail to recognize the fact that, when the deposit is in a private bank, the moneys are placed in the possession of an individual, who has given no security to the state, and that it is in his power, if so disposed, by illy-advised transactions, to hazard the safety of the money. To a certain extent the same power exists as to a corporate bank, national or state. The extent of the business dealings may be limited. They may not be authorized to use the money of depositors in outside speculations or investments not strictly connected with the banking business. They may, however, actually do what they are not authorized to do. Moreover, they may, by bad loans, lose the money left with them on deposit just as completely as if it had been thrown into unwarranted business enterprises. On the other hand, while, as to a corporate bank, the responsibility behind the corporate assets is usually limited, all the property of a private banker is behind his institution. In the case at bar it is alleged and admitted that, at the time of the assignment of Mr. Kent, he had sufficient property to pay his debts, but that that result became impossible by reason of subsequent depreciation in values. After all, however, as between different kinds of banks, the question is one of diligence, faithfulness, and care. If it was negligence in the officer to deposit the public funds in a private bank, that question is eliminated from this case, because it is alleged and admitted that it was not negligence. It cannot be said to be negligence per se, or as a matter of law, for any trustee to place the funds in his control in a private bank. In no kind of case has such a doctrine been asserted. Whatever the facts are, we are not to determine them. They are before us, admitted by the pleadings and stated in the questions. Our duty is only to determine the law as applicable to them.

Although it is not necessary that we decide the question of estoppel presented in argument, were the defendants liable, we do not think the fact that the state brought suit to trace the funds into the hands of the assignee of the banker having them on deposit, nor the acceptance of dividends from the estate of said banker, would affect the question, or constitute an estoppel against the state from pursuing the treasurer upon his bond. The money belonged to the state, and no efforts of the state to recover it from other hands could possibly affect whatever the liability of the treasurer might be for the unrecovered balance. We understand, however, that it is not even contended by counsel that suit to trace and recover the funds operates as an estoppel; but it was urged that the acceptance of dividends from the assigned estate, upon a claim filed by the state, in pursuance of a resolution by the legislature, does have that effect. We do not think so. The assignor had in his hands money belonging to the estate, and he was accountable therefor, and is still accountable therefor; but any liability of the treasurer was not thereby released. These views are supported by Nason v. Erie County Directors of Poor, 126 Pa. 445; Rose v. Douglass Twp. 52 Kan. 451.

The defendants did not enter into a bond which contains a condition that the treasurer would keep safely the moneys of the state in his hands, so that he would be liable absolutely in case they were lost, without any fault or negligence on his part. The questions reserved for our decision are based upon the facts, admitted by the pleadings, that there was no fault, or want of care or diligence, on the part of the treasurer, and that he is not chargeable with any fraud or negligence, or unfaithfulness in any degree. We answer the first, second, and third questions in the negative. The fourth question, which pertains to what judgment should be rendered, is not necessary or proper, under our former decisions, to be answered.

Knight, J., concurs.

Corn, J., dissenting:

I do not concur in the conclusion reached by a majority of the court. In cases like the present, under slightly varying statutes, the courts of the United States, and the courts of perhaps twenty of the states, have held such officers and their sureties to a strict responsibility for the public funds; and, in my opinion, not only the greater number, but the great weight of authority sustains that view. A few of the state courts have held otherwise. The suit is upon the bond,—the contract between the state and the defendants. Any recovery must be upon this contract. It is an express contract in writing. So far as the sureties are concerned, it is evident that, prior to the execution of the bond, they had no responsibility in the premises whatever, and that their liability now is only what they have assumed by their contract. A few courts holding the minority view, as in Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284, have reached the conclusion that the responsibility of the defendants is governed by what is termed the "law of bailments," and that the treasurer is a bailee for hire, and is bound only to bring to the discharge of his trust "that prudence, caution, and attention which careful men usually exercise in the management of their own affairs, and he is not responsible for any loss occurring without any fault on his part." It is to be observed that the law of bailments here invoked, which fixes the liability of a bailee for hire, is simply the contract implied by law between the parties when they themselves have made no express contract fixing the degree of responsibility of the bailee. Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. St. 372. It has no application where the parties themselves have made their own contract; and, indeed, it is not applied alike in all cases of bailment for hire. Where there is no express contract, as in the case of common carriers and innkeepers, the contract implied by law is for more stringent liability, owing to the relations of the parties.

In this case the treasurer and his sureties have contracted, in the words of the bond, that he shall "faithfully and truly perform all the duties of his office." Those duties are prescribed by the statutes of this state. Section 1696 provides that "the treasurer shall: First,—receive and keep all moneys of the state, not expressly required by law to be received and kept by some other person; second,—pay all warrants duly and legally issued by the auditor so long as there are in his hands funds sufficient to pay such warrants." Section 1784 provides: "The state treasurer shall in no case disburse or pay out the state funds except on warrants drawn by the auditor." Section 1781 provides that at the end of their respective terms of office the treasurer and auditor shall "deliver to their successors all official books, papers, records, and balances of funds which may be in their possession." These are his duties with reference to the public funds, and he and his sureties have contracted that he shall faithfully and truly perform them. It is clear that the plaintiff must recover under this state of facts, unless it is held either that they do not show a contract for the safe-keeping of the money, or else that the loss of the funds by the failure of the bank in which they were deposited is an equitable excuse for the nonperformance of the contract. The duty prescribed by the statute is that he shall "receive and keep" the funds. But some stress is laid upon the circumstance that while some statutes, under which the treasurer has been held to a strict liability, provide that he shall "safely keep," the word "safely" is omitted from ours, and it is argued that the latter indicates the requirement of a smaller degree of responsibility. and I understand that this is the view adopted by my associates, and that upon this distinction they rest the decision of this case,—that is, that by the use of the words "to receive and keep," omitting any such additional words as "safely," "securely," or the like, the officer is simply made the custodian of the funds, and that his bond to faithfully perform the duties of his office is not an unconditional contract to safely keep the funds. Where the custody of other property than money is involved, there might, no doubt, be a distinction between keeping and keeping safely,—that is, keeping uninjured; and it is easy to perceive that such property might be kept and turned over, but in such condition as to show negligence in complying with the requirement to keep safely. But, in the case of money, if it is kept at all and is forthcoming when required, it is kept safely; and there is no issue in this case which makes such a distinction important or relevant. If the defendant had kept the money and turned it over, there could be no complaint that he had not safely kept it. In Illinois, in a suit upon the bond of a township treasurer, the defense was interposed that the money was stolen without the fault of the defendant. The condition of the bond was that the treasurer "shall faithfully discharge all the duties of said office according to the laws which are or may hereafter be in force, and shall deliver to his successor in office all moneys, books, papers, securities, and property in his hands as such township treasurer, then the obligation to be void," etc. By § 56 of the statute he was required, among other things, to charge himself with all moneys received. By § 62 he was required "to demand, receive, and safely keep, according to law, all moneys," etc. The bond in this case being conditioned only for the performance of his duties and the turning over of the moneys "in his hands," and the 62d section providing only for a safe-keeping "according to law," it was urged by counsel that the duties of township treasurer did not embrace keeping safely the moneys coming to his hands. The court says: The fact that the township treasurer is required to receive money, and enter it in his cash book, implies, without any other special regulation, that he is to keep it, and, being required to keep it, it follows that he is to keep it safely. This is one of the duties of his office he has undertaken to faithfully discharge. Another duty, no less imperative, is that he will deliver to his successor in office all moneys in his hands as such township treasurer, which he could not do if he suffered it to be lost out of his hands or it should be so lost by any accident. The undertaking is that the money shall be in his hands. These duties he has undertaken to perform unconditionally. Besides all this, he is required, by § 62, to receive and safely keep, according to law, all moneys, etc., belonging to the township.

We cannot discover a shade of difference between this and the case of United States v. Prescott, 8 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734, cited by the counsel for the defendant in error. As in that case, so here is an undertaking safely to keep the money by the very force of the language of the condition of the bond, independent of the provisions of the 62d section. Thompson v. Township Sixteen, 30 Ill. 99. In State v. Nevins, 19 Nev. 162, the condition of the bond was to "well and truly and faithfully perform and execute the duties of treasurer." The provision of the statutes was that the county treasurer "shall receive all moneys due and accruing to his county, and disburse the same on the proper orders issued and attested by the county auditor. . . . He shall so arrange and keep his books that the amount received and paid out . . . shall be exhibited in separate accounts," etc. "He shall at all times, keep his books and office subject to the inspection and examination of the board of county commissioners, and shall exhibit the money in his office to such board at least once a year," etc. "He shall annually make complete settlements, . . . and shall at the expiration of his term of office deliver to his successor all public moneys, books, and papers in his possession." The defendant insisted that his responsibility was simply that which the common law imposes upon a bailee for hire. The court say the duty to safely keep the money is made absolutely clear by the provisions of the statute referred to. In Tillinghast v. Merrill, 151 N. Y. 185, 34 L. R. A. 678, decided December 1, 1896, one of the latest cases upon this subject, the statute is quoted as follows: "It is the duty of every supervisor (1) to disburse the school moneys in his hands applicable to the payment of teachers' wages upon and only upon the written orders of the sole trustee, or a majority of the trustees, in favor of qualified teachers." By paragraph 8 of the same section a supervisor is required to pay to his successor all school moneys remaining in his hands. The court says: "In this statute it will be observed that there are no explicit declarations of the legislative intent, as in the case of town collectors, to create a supervisor the debtor of the county for public moneys in his hands, and the condition of the bond to safely keep, faithfully disburse, and justly account for the same does not add to the liability created by statute." Upon the decision of the same case in the supreme court of New York, Martin, J., dissented upon the specific ground that the condition of the bond to "safely keep," etc., imposed upon the officer no greater responsibility or liability than the statute. 77 Hun, 489. In Iowa, township treasurers are required by the statute to give bond "conditioned for the faithful performance of their duties." The same act makes it the duty of the treasurer to hold all moneys belonging to the district, and pay out the same upon the order of the president, countersigned by the secretary. The court says: "The condition of the bond upon which this action is brought substantially complies with the requirements of the statute; it is, in effect, identical with the condition prescribed in the law. It is made his duty to hold all moneys of the district, and to pay them out, but only upon vouchers signed by the proper officers. He is bound by the obligation of the bond, not to exercise due care and diligence in the discharge of this duty, but to perform it absolutely, without conditions or exceptions. He is to hold the money of the district. This is the provision of the law. His contract, expressed in the bond, binds him to the discharge of this duty. He will not be relieved from his contract by showing any degree of diligence or care which falls short of absolute compliance with the terms of his contract." Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, 87 Iowa, 553. The court did not recognize the nice distinction relied upon in the majority opinion in this case that to "hold safely" might be construed as a contract to hold without loss, while the obligation to "hold" is to be shaded down into a contract to use due care and diligence in holding. But it pointedly rejects such interpretation of the requirement to "hold" the money, although, as in our own statute, the word is entirely unqualified by "safely," "securely," or any word of like import. In Kansas the statute requires a township treasurer to give bond "conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties." The section prescribing his duties provides: "The township treasurer shall receive and take charge of all moneys belonging to the township, or which are, by law, required to be paid to him, and shall pay out and account for the same upon orders drawn upon him by the township trustee, and shall discharge such other duties as may be required of him by law." Under this statute the court says: "By accepting the office of township treasurer, McNabb assumed the duty of receiving and safely keeping the money of the township, and paying it out according to law. He or his sureties are bound to make good any deficiency which might occur in the funds which came under his charge, whether they were lost in the bank or otherwise." Rose v. Douglass Twp. 52 Kan. 452. Here there was no express requirement that the officer should "safely keep," or even, as in our statute, that he should "keep" the funds, but simply that he should "receive and take charge of them." But it is unnecessary to multiply authorities. While there are several cases wherein the statute or the bond sued on employed the expression "safely keep," or "keep safely," there 40 L. R. A.

is, as I believe, no reported case sustaining the distinction which seems to be relied upon by the majority of the court for the decision of this case. This view has been frequently insisted upon by counsel, but, so far as the cases have come to my knowledge, has in every instance been rejected by the courts.

The majority of the court having reached the conclusion that no contract has been shown binding the treasurer to keep safely or securely the moneys of the state, declined to express an opinion upon the question what measure of liability such contract imposes when proved. In my view, the bond and the statute clearly, and under all the authorities, constituting such a contract, there is no other question for this court to decide than the character of liability which it imposes.

It has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States, and by the highest courts of perhaps twenty other states, that where, in whatever form of words, the bond is conditioned for the payment over of the public moneys, or for the keeping or safe-keeping of them, or the statute prescribes such, in substance, to be the duty of the officer, and the bond is conditioned for the performance of the duties of the office, and no condition limiting that obligation is discoverable in the statute, the obligation thus imposed upon and assumed by the officer will be deemed absolute, and the plea that the money has been stolen or lost without his fault does not constitute a defense to an action for its recovery; that, the contract being absolute in its terms, there is no defense at law but a production of the funds; and that loss by accident or otherwise is not a defense in equity, but the allowance of such a defense would be dangerous to the public interests, and is forbidden by considerations of public policy. This is substantially the view adopted in United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734; United States v. Dashiell, 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319; United States v. Keebler, 9 Wall. 83, 19 L. ed. 574; Boyd v. United States, 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 527; Bevans v. United States, 13 Wall. 56, 20 L. ed. 531; New Providence v. McEachron, 38 N. J. L. 389; Hancock v. Hazard, 13 Cush. 112, 59 Am. Dec. 171; Thompson v. Township Sixteen, 30 Ill. 99; State v. Croft, 24 Ark. 550; State, Wyandot County, v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 67 Am. Dec. 363; Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. 872; Halbert v. State, Martin County Comrs. 22 Ind. 125; Gartley v. People, Pueblo County (Colo.) 49 Pac. 272; Ross v. Douglass Twp. 52 Kan. 452; Bush v. Johnson County, 48 Neb. 3, 32 L. R. A. 228; State v. Newin, 19 Nev. 163; State, Mississippi County, v. Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 322; Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, 87 Iowa, 550; Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427; Tillinghast v. Merrill, 151 N. Y. 185, 84 L. R. A. 678; Fairchild v. Hedgcs, 14 Wash. 117, 31 L. R. A. 851; Wilson v. Wichita County, 67 Tex. 647; Griffin v. Mississippi Levee Comrs. 71 Miss. 767; United States v. Watts, 1 N. M. 562; Omro Supers. v. Kaime, 39 Wis. 468.

There are many other cases announcing substantially the same principles. There are some of those above referred to which hold that the statute has made the officer the legal owner of the public funds committed to his keeping, and for that reason they are, by the majority of this court, discarded and set aside as of no authority under our laws, which do not vest the legal title to the public funds in the treasurer. I confess myself unable to understand why this feature should make those decisions of no authority in this case. If it is upon the theory that the officer is held to be a mere borrower of the public funds for his own use and benefit, and to be held to repayment as upon a promissory note like any other borrower of money, it is sufficient to say that no court has ever hinted at any such ownership in the officer. They have held simply that the technical legal title by the statute vested in the officer. If it is because of some legal or equitable principle that, while courts of chancery will relieve against the enforcement of unconscionable contracts to refund moneys which do not and never did belong to the defendant, they will not relieve against unconscionable contracts to pay out one's own money to make good the losses of another, it is sufficient to say that no such principle exists. In the case of ordinary trustees, the legal title is in the trustee. Almost without exception in the United States the legal title to the money and personal property of the decedent vests in the executor or administrator. But in these cases courts of equity will, and constantly do, relieve from liability arising out of bonds absolute in their terms. It is therefore clearly not for the reason that the statutes have vested in the officer the legal title to the public funds that these cases hold him to a strict liability. But the fact of such technical legal title has been emphasized in those cases to make it clear that, the officer not being a bailee, the law of bailments did not govern, and these cases have then been determined by reference to the express contract, as in United States v. Prescott and the other cases taking the same view. This is made perfectly evident by the opinion in Hancock v. Hazard, 12 Cush. 112. The complete opinion is as follows: "A collector of taxes by accepting the office, takes the risk of the safe-keeping of the money he has actually received. His obligation is not regulated by the law of bailments, and the cases cited to that effect are inapplicable. He is a debtor,—an accountant,—bound to account for and pay over the money he has collected. The loss of his money, therefore, by theft or otherwise, is no excuse for non-performance; this is founded on the nature of his contract and considerations of public policy. United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 784. It being a duty of the collector to account for and pay over to the treasurer, . . . and the excuse of loss by theft being unavailing, the sureties in the bond are liable equally with the principal." The tenor of all the cases holding the officer and his sureties to a strict liability is that the contract is absolute, neither the bond nor the statute providing any excuse for non-performance; that, at law, it can only be discharged by performance; that, therefore, any excuse for non-performance must be an equitable one; that the excuse of loss of the funds, unless by the act of God or the public enemy, will not be allowed in equity, because it would be dangerous to the public interests and contrary to public policy. None of the cases, as I understand them, attempt, upon ground of public money or otherwise, to impose any liability upon the officer and his sureties other than that voluntarily assumed by them by their contract. There seems to be, however, some confusion or misconception upon this point, in some, at least, of the few courts dissenting from the prevailing doctrine. In Healdsburg v. Mulligan, 118 Cal. 205, 33 L. R. A. 401, the court, in concluding its discussion of the question of the application of the principles of public policy, says: "Justice does not require that the public shall be protected by enforcing against its servant, the officer, and his sureties, a liability the law has not imposed upon them and which they have not assumed." This language would seem very clearly to impute to the majority of the courts of the country a doctrine which is certainly not stated in their decisions, and would probably be very vigorously repudiated by all of them. Six courts, as I understand, are quoted as sustaining the minority view: Maine, in Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284; Alabama, in State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 59; Tennessee, in Peck v. James, 3 Head, 75, and State, Overton County v. Copeland, 96 Tenn. 296, 31 L. R. A. 844; South Carolina, in York County v. Watson, 15 S. C. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 675; California, in Healdsburg v. Mulligan, 118 Cal. 205, 33 L. R. A. 461; and Montana, in Livingston v. Woods (Mont.) 49 Pac. 437. The Maine decision is the leading case, and, out of a court composed of seven judges, the chief justice and two of the justices dissented. There seems to be, in all of the decisions to which we have had access or been referred, but five in which the failure of a bank has been held to be a sufficient excuse for failure to pay over the moneys. Of these, in Peck v. James, 3 Head, 75, a school trustee had accepted bank notes of the Bank of East Tennessee, at that time supposed to be solvent, but which failed while its notes were in his hands. He tendered the specific bank notes to his successor in settlement. In Livingston v. Woods (Mont.) 49 Pac. 437, the suit was against a city treasurer, and both the law of the state and the ordinance of the city required the officer to deposit the money. In State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 581, 56 Am. Rep. 59, the defense of robbery was set up, and the court held that, while the responsibility of the officer under the statute fell short of an absolute liability, it was greater than that of an ordinary bailee for hire, the officer being held to the highest diligence; and the court says: "We purposely limit the decision to the case of irresistible force." The great mass of cases referred to, involving the liability of trustees of private property, executors, administrators, guardians, and the like, afford no parallel whatever and are valueless as authority. Such officers are in a great measure mere private agents. They must handle and manage the estates in their hands, often exercise their judgment and discretion, and incur the risk of loss of the trust property. If their bonds import contracts for absolute liability, courts of equity will nevertheless treat them as agents, and relieve from any greater liability. Probate courts and those of like jurisdiction are amply endowed with equity powers to afford proper relief. These matters are too well understood to require any extended comment. In regard to the principle of public policy underlying the decisions, there is in my mind no question whatever of the propriety and necessity of its enforcement. While Alabama is quoted as one of the states sustaining the limited liability there is the later case from that state of Alston v. State, 92 Ala. 126, 13 L. R. A. 659, which is strongly persuasive of the other view, and somewhat applicable to the conditions under our laws. A judge of probate was sued for public moneys, and pleaded that he had deposited them in a certain bank which had failed, and there were the usual stipulations of perfect solvency at the time of the deposit, etc. By the statute he was prohibited from knowingly converting or applying any of the money to his own use, or to the use of any other person, or permitting another to use any of it. Applying this statute, the court says: "The money of the state was thus turned over to the bank on general deposit, and became a part of its funds and subject to its use, as any other of its property. This use of the public money by the probate judge was without warrant of law. He had no right to convert it to his own use, or permit anyone else to use it. The deposit was of like effect as a loan of the money. It was an unauthorized use thereof. The probate judge by that act voluntarily relinquished his custody and control of this public fund so that he could not reclaim it. When the state demands it his answer is that he no longer has it, but has a claim for the amount thereof against an insolvent bank. In view of the statutory provisions above referred to, we think this answer is wholly insufficient as a defense." So, under our laws, the banker becomes the owner of the money, and at liberty to use it for investment, speculation, or otherwise. The officer is forbidden by the Constitution to use for his own benefit, or make any profit from the public moneys, and he must give a heavy bond for their safe keeping. But of what use or benefit to the people is a bond, if he may immediately turn over the public funds to some other person, who may and does and is expected to use them for his own purposes, and that, too, without any security whatever? The bond is a meaningless form, if it is not to secure to the state repayment of its losses under such circumstances.

(April 22, 1898.)

STATE of Wyoming, ex rel. Philip NOBLE,
v.
City of CHEYENNE.

(.....Wyo.....)

An ordinance may vest discretionary power in the council as to issuing licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors within certain limits, where there is charter authority to enact ordinances to tax and regulate that business, but such discretion must be reasonably exercised.

NOTE.—As to discretion in granting liquor licenses, see note to Sherlock v. Stuart (Mich.) 21 L. R. A. 580.
40 L. R. A.

QUESTIONS reserved by the District Court for Laramie County for the opinion of the Supreme Court which arose upon an application for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to grant to relator a license to sell intoxicating liquors. Answers returned favorable to defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walter R. Stoll, for relator:

The only power to prohibit and suppress with relation to any subject at all in any way connected with the matter of liquors is to the effect that the city is given power to restrain, prohibit, and suppress tippling shops. That a man may take out a retail license and not be guilty of keeping a tippling shop is too plain for argument.

A tippling house is a place where intoxicating drinks are sold in small quantities, to be drunk on the premises, and where men resort for drinking purposes.

2 Bouvier, Law Dict. p. 732; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 20; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 18; Emporia v. Volmer, 12 Kan. 633.

There is an absolute silence on the part of the legislature of this state with reference to the matter of discretion vested in any body with relation to the giving of licenses.

If the legislature has not made any rules, regulations, or laws on the subject the legislature has not exercised any rights under the police power; and consequently there can be no discretion on the subject vested in any man or set of men, simply because the legislature has not spoken upon the subject.

The police power of any government is a power which resides in the law-making power of the government, and not something which resides in any particular individual, set of men, or body.

Tiedeman, Pol. Power, § 1, p. 4. § 2, p. 5. § 3, p. 10. § 101, p. 277; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 746; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, chap. 2.

In the absence of a statute expressly or by implication giving to a particular body, board, or person a discretion in the matter of issuing or rejecting licenses, the applicant is entitled to his license if he brings himself within the conditions prescribed by the statute.

Miller v. Wade, 58 Ind. 91; Zanone v. Monrovia City, 11 Ill. App. 334; State v. Morgan County, Inferior Ct. Justices, 15 Ga. 408; McLeal v. Scott, 21 Or. 94; Ampere v. Kalamazoo, 39 Mich. 78; Potter v. Homer, 59 Mich. 8.

Where the applicant brings himself within the statutory requirements the license cannot be withheld, unless a clear discretion is granted by the statute to some board, court, or body to control the matter.

Jones v. Moore County Comrs. 106 N. C. 436; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620; Re Christensen, 43 Fed. Rep. 243; Martinez v. Robeson County Comrs. 107 N. C. 335; State v. Newcomb, 107 N. C. 900; Hills v. Comrs. v. Smith, 110 N. C. 417; People, O'Toole v. Brooklyn Excise Board, 42 N. Y. S. R. 2; Re Hoover, 80 Fed. Rep. 51; United States, Haver, v. Ronan, 83 Fed. Rep. 117; Pollard's Petition, 127 Pa. 507; Johnson's License, 156 Pa. 322; Prospect Brewing Co.'s Petition, 127 Pa.

528; Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 193, 21 L. R. A. 580.

The only authority for the power to license liquor sellers conferred in any sort of expressed terms is found only in the 3d paragraph of § 161 of the charter; and there the expression is "to levy and collect taxes on . . . dram shops, saloons, liquor sellers."

Mt. Carmel v. Wabash County, 50 Ill. 69; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 65, 108, 109; State, Benson, v. Hoboken, 83 N. J. L. 280; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 357-361, and cases cited in notes; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 532-534.

It has been the policy of our legislature, when it was desired to confer power to regulate or prohibit or forbid the licensing of liquor sellers, to expressly grant that power in the charter.

A municipal corporation can exercise only such powers as are granted to it in express words, or those which are necessarily and fairly implied as incident to the powers expressly granted, or those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 89, 90; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1039-1042.

Where the charter has given specified powers, the provisions relating to these powers must govern.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1187-1192; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 529-531; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 315, 394-407, and cases cited in notes; Charlton v. Barber, 54 Iowa, 360, 37 Am. Rep. 209; State v. Ferguson, 33 N. H. 424.

The only powers which are delegated to a municipality by the legislature are powers which enable the municipality to enact ordinances. There is no arbitrary power granted to a municipality, but only the power for the municipality to enact ordinances; and ordinances enacted must be within the power conferred, and until such ordinances are enacted the municipality has no power in the premises.

People v. Crotty, 93 Ill. 180; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 20, p. 307, and note 1, p. 321, § 308, note, p. 323, §§ 309, 315, 317, and notes; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 235, ¶ 2, pp. 236, 237, ¶ 3; Bull v. Quincy, 9 Ill. App. 137; East St. Louis v. Wehrung, 50 Ill. 28.

The powers conferred upon a municipality, and the trusts, involved under the grant contained in its charter, do not permit the municipality to delegate its authority to others.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 96; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1042, 1043; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 237; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 155, 228; Kinnmundy v. Mahan, 72 Ill. 462; Darling v. St. Paul, 19 Minn. 389; East St. Louis v. Wehrung, 50 Ill. 28; State v. Garibaldi, 44 La. Ann. 809.

In the absence of a provision in the charter giving a city the power to designate the portions of the city within which liquors may be sold, and further, giving to the city the power to determine the number of licenses that shall be issued within such district, the city has no authority to give a license to one in a particular district, and to refuse it to another in the same district, other things being equal.

Ex parte Levy, 48 Ark. 42, 51 Am. Rep. 550; 40 L. R. A.

Tugman v. Chicago, 78 Ill. 405; Hudson v. Thorne, 7 Paige, 261.

Under the licensing system it does not matter what steps may have been taken towards the procurement of the license, or what date the license bears, the license contemplated by law to be issued is a license which can take effect and be in force only from and after the date of its delivery.

State v. Hughes, 24 Mo. 147; State v. Pate, 67 Mo. 488; Wiles v. State, 33 Ind. 206; Vannoy v. State, 64 Ind. 447; State v. Wilcox, 66 Ind. 557; Keiser v. State, 78 Ind. 480; State v. Brady, 14 R. I. 508; Bolduc v. Randall, 107 Mass. 121; Com. v. Welch, 144 Mass. 356; United States v. Angell, 11 Fed. Rep. 84.

An ordinance passed by a city must comply with certain requirements: (1) They must be reasonable and lawful. (2) They must not be oppressive. (3) They must not contravene common right. (4) They must be impartial, fair, and general. (5) They must be consistent with public legislative policy.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 319, 320, 322, 325, 329; Moore v. St. Paul, 48 Minn. 331.

A by-law to be good must be reasonable, and whether reasonable or not is a question of law for the court.

State v. Jersey City, 37 N. J. L. 348.

Mr. Edgar W. Mann, for respondent:

The relator must show a clear right to the writ of mandamus before the same will be granted by the court.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 94; State, Lord, v. Washington County Supers. 2 Pinney, 552; People, Besse, v. Crotty, 93 Ill. 180; People, Hempstead, v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 55 Ill. 95, 8 Am. Rep. 631.

Mandamus is issued or withheld in the discretion of the court, and the court, in issuing it, will be governed by what seems to be necessary and proper to be done in the premises for the purpose of justice.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 97; Swift v. People, Powers, 63 Ill. App. 453; 2 Beach, Pub. Corp. §§ 1548, 1574, 1578, 1579, 1589; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 864, note 2.

The city of Cheyenne, under its charter, has discretion in the matter of issuing licenses for the sale of liquors, and if it chooses to do so it can refuse to issue such a license to any person who makes application therefor if in the judgment of the city council of said city it is not for the best interests of the city that such license should be issued.

Ailstock v. Page, 77 Va. 386; Ex parte Yeager, 11 Gratt. 655; Hein v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 358; Atty. Gen., Gillaspie, v. Guilford County Justices, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 815; Muller v. Buncombe County Comrs. 89 N. C. 171; Nepp v. Com. 2 Duv. 546; Ex parte Whittington, 34 Ark. 894; Ex parte Levy, 48 Ark. 42, 51 Am. Rep. 550; State, Reynolds, v. Tippecanoe County Comrs. 45 Ind. 501; State, Kyger, v. Holt County Ct. Justices, 39 Mo. 521; Perry v. Salt Lake City, 7 Utah, 143, 11 L. R. A. 446; Perkins v. Ledbetter, 68 Miss. 327; Swift v. People, Powers, 63 Ill. App. 453; Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 193, 21 L. R. A. 580; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 649-651.

While the city of Cheyenne is permitted by its charter to issue licenses to retail liquor dealers, it is not compelled to do so.

State, Kelley, v. Bonnell, 119 Ind. 494; Hillsboro Comrs. v. Smith, 110 N. C. 417; People, Wood, v. Randolph Excise Comrs. 75 Hun. 224; People, Decker, v. Waters, 4 Misc. 1; People, Jones, v. Bennett, 4 Misc. 10; People, Davis, v. Truman, 4 Misc. 247; People, Watkins, v. Warsaw Excise Comrs. 4 Misc. 547.

Courts will not interfere by mandamus with the action of a board charged with the duty of issuing licenses for the sale of liquor when such board has discretion in the matter.

Wyo. Rev. Stat. § 3074; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 108-111, ¶¶ 1, 2, p. 170; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 649; State v. Crites, 48 Ohio St. 480; State, Ossenkop, v. Cass County Comrs. 12 Neb. 54; State, Silver, v. Kendall, 15 Neb. 202; Stanley v. Monnet, 34 Kan. 708; Eve v. Simon, 78 Ga. 120.

The time for which the relator applied for a license for the sale of liquors has long since expired, and hence he is not entitled to have a writ of mandamus issued commanding the respondent to issue to him a license now.

State, Vereen, v. Marion County Comrs. 27 Fla. 488; People, Hempstead, v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 55 Ill. 95, 8 Am. Rep. 681; 2 Beach, Pub. Corp. § 1601; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, § 10, p. 104; Aff v. Hopkins, 57 Ill. App. 529.

The city council has the right to pass ordinances of the character mentioned, not only under the general welfare clause or clauses contained in the city charter, but also under the clause contained in subdivision 3 of chapter 161 of the city charter which provides that the city council may regulate certain occupations by ordinance.

Portland v. Schmidt, 18 Or. 17; Piqua v. Zimmerlin, 35 Ohio St. 507; State v. Freeman, 38 N. H. 426; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 617; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 234.

Potter, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 5th day of October, 1897, the relator applied to the city council of the city of Cheyenne for a license permitting him to open and conduct a retail liquor establishment for the selling of spirituous, vinous, fermented, and intoxicating liquors, in a building known as "606 and 608 West Eighteenth Street," in said city. In his application it was stated that the relator had his United States license for 1897, and also his county license running from May, 1897, to May, 1898. At the same time he submitted a bond in the amount prescribed by the city ordinances. The council, at a regular session of that body, refused to grant the application, the records of the council showing, in brief, that the application was referred to the police committee, who reported adversely thereon; that the report was adopted by the council, and the license fee which accompanied the application was ordered returned to the applicant. The relator thereupon obtained an alternative writ of mandamus from the district court. After the disposition of some preliminary matters of pleading, an answer and reply were filed, and the whole case submitted upon an agreed statement of facts, embodying therein the matters above stated with other facts upon which it was agreed the cause might be determined. The district court, upon its own motion, thereupon reserved certain questions arising therein, deemed to be important and difficult, for the decision of this court.

The chief point of contention is the right of respondent to refuse to grant the license. The questions are fifteen in number, and present some matters which we do not conceive it necessary to decide in this cause. The answer alleged: That the place at which the relator desired to open and conduct a saloon under the license applied for had been for a long time known as the "Chicago Saloon;" and it had become a notorious resort for lewd, disreputable, and vicious people; was conducted in a disorderly manner, and so that constant surveillance on the part of the police force was required in that part of the city where the saloon was conducted, in order either to prevent the commission of crimes or violations of the city ordinances, or to arrest parties guilty of committing crimes or such violations; and, in consequence thereof, the locality in which said saloon was conducted acquired a reputation of such an evil character that it was deemed best by the council that no saloon should be maintained or kept in that particular locality. That, in pursuance of that determination, the ordinance of February 16, 1897, which will be adverted to in connection with other ordinances of the city, was adopted. These particular facts, although not denied by the reply, are not brought into the agreed statement of facts. Instead thereof, the entire proceedings of the council relating to the matter are made a part of the statement, together with the ordinances. From them it appears that on November 24, 1896, at a meeting of the council, "the mayor called the attention of the council to the recent developments in connection with a certain saloon in the western portion of the city, known as "Chicago Saloon." The mayor was of the opinion that such resort was one of a menacing nature to the city, and might sooner or later create trouble of a serious and expensive nature to the city. He further stated that, in his opinion, no license should be granted to such places; and, if it was in his power, he would refuse to issue same, but the matter was in the power of the council, and he therefore could do nothing, but suggested that the council take some action. At that meeting the council adopted a resolution that no license should be issued to any person for the sale of intoxicating liquors at any place in the city north of the center line of Seventeenth street, or west of the center line of Thomas street. On February 2, 1897, one Mollberg, who had theretofore conducted the saloon referred to, applied for a continuation of his license. The matter was held over until February 16, 1897, when, at his request he was allowed to withdraw his application. An ordinance was, on that date, adopted, regulating the subject, for the particular locality in question, in connection with other ordinances already existing. At that meeting, also, a license was ordered issued to one applicant for 620 West Eighteenth street; and on March 2, 1897, a license was ordered issued to another for 338 Bent street; and licenses were refused to two others, respectively, one of them desiring a license for the place specified in relator's application, and the other for a place directly opposite and in close proximity thereto. The two licenses granted were for places located within the limits mentioned in the aforesaid resolution, and in the ordinance of February 16. The places for which the said licenses were refused were also within said limits.

The ordinances of the city governing the subject of liquor licenses, with the exception of the one of February, 1897, were originally adopted prior to the taking effect of the present city charter, and when the municipal affairs were controlled by a board of trustees, one of whom was chosen as president. Such ordinances were continued in force by the new charter of 1877, until repealed or amended. Rev. Stat. p. 115, Cheyenne City Charter, § 174. Under the present charter, the corporate powers are exercised by a mayor and council, consisting of nine members, and the new corporation became the legal successor of the city which existed under the former charter. § 174, supra. The municipal ordinances conceded to affect the matter of liquor licenses are as follows: "The president or board of trustees are hereby authorized to grant licenses for the sale of spirituous, vinous, fermented, and intoxicating liquors, to any person who shall apply therefor, upon such person executing to the city of Cheyenne a bond, with at least two sureties to be approved by the president, in the penal sum of three hundred dollars, conditioned that the party so licensed shall faithfully observe and keep all ordinances heretofore passed or to be passed during the period of such license. On compliance with the foregoing requirements, a license shall be issued to the applicant, which shall authorize the person or persons therein named to sell, barter, give away and deliver wines and liquors, whether vinous, ardent, or fermented, in quantities less than one gallon in the place designated in the application; provided, that no license shall be granted or issued for a less sum than one hundred dollars a year, or twenty-five dollars for each quarter of a year, and all licenses shall be issued quarterly, payable in advance." City Ordinances, chap. 31, art. 6, § 1. Section 4 of the same article prohibits the sale of any liquors in the city without a license, except by druggists for medicinal, mechanical, or sacramental purposes, and penalties are imposed for a violation thereof. The above are found in a general ordinance concerning licenses adopted in 1870, which covers in separate chapters a number of occupations. The first chapter thereof regulates the issuance of licenses generally; and, in substance, it is provided thereby that all licenses which may be issued under any ordinance of the city shall be subject to the ordinances and regulations in force at the time of the issuance thereof; that all licenses shall be issued and signed by the clerk, under the city seal, pursuant to the order of the president or board of trustees upon the payment to the marshal of the sum assessed therefor, together with the appropriate fees; that no license shall be assignable or transferable without permission of the president or board of trustees; and that, in all cases where it is not otherwise expressly provided, the president or board of trustees shall have power to hear applications for, and to order the issuing of, licenses, upon the terms specified by the city ordinances. Provision is also made for cancelation or revocation of a license for cause. In 1877, but prior to the existence of the present charter, another ordinance was adopted, entitled "An Ordinance Concerning Licenses and Good Order." Section 1 of that ordinance requires that all licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors shall contain a stipulation against a violation of any of the city ordinances relating to the sale of liquors, and for a cancelation in case of such violation after hearing, and that, if so canceled, no other license shall issue to the same person or his agent for six months thereafter unless ordered by the board. Section 2 (as amended in 1891) increases the amount to be paid for liquor licenses to $80 per quarter; and § 3 requires a bond in the sum of $500, with certain stated conditions. Section 6, as amended in 1885, authorizes a cancelation of license for certain stated causes. Sections 2 and 6, as amended, were adopted during the life of the present charter. On February 16, 1897, the following ordinance was duly passed and approved: "That hereafter no license for the sale of spirituous, vinous, fermented, or intoxicating liquors of any kind shall be issued by any officer of the city of Cheyenne without special permission of the council for the sale of such liquors within that portion of the city of Cheyenne, bounded on the south by Seventeenth street, and on the east by Thomas street." The place named by relator in his application is located in the portion of the city covered by that ordinance. Persons engaged in selling liquors are also required by general law to obtain a county license therefor. Rev. Stat. title 26. If the business is licensed to be carried on in an incorporated town, city, or village, the license money is collected by the collecting officer of the municipality, although the license is issued by the county officers. Rev. Stat. § 1438, as amended by Laws 1888, chap. 44. And such license money is expressly authorized to be collected for the city in addition to the licenses issued by the city. Ibid. It is made a penal offense to sell liquors without a license. Rev. Stat. § 1442, as amended by Laws 1890-91, chap. 23; Rev. Stat. § 1455.

On behalf of the relator it is contended that, in the absence of a statute which either expressly or by implication gives to the licensing authorities a discretion in the matter of issuing licenses, an applicant who complies with all the prescribed conditions is entitled to his license; that no discretion is vested in the city council; and that the powers with which the council is clothed must be exercised by ordinance. It is then argued that the relator has complied with the law and ordinances in his application, and is entitled, as a matter of law, to the license applied for. Counsel says that the corporate authorities have adopted ordinances, and now refuse to comply with them. His contention in this respect seems to be based upon that provision of the ordinance of 1870, hereinbefore quoted, which says, "On compliance with the foregoing requirements, a license shall be issued to the applicant," and upon a construction of the ordinance of February, 1897, as neither adding to nor modifying the former ordinances. The position is taken that it was at all times the duty of the council to order the issuance of each license, but that the ordinances on the subject must comprise a general rule applicable alike to the cases of all applicants. If the original ordinance should be held to have had the effect contended for, and as having made the issuing of a license imperative upon the council when an applicant had complied with its conditions, then we are not able to assent to the construction which counsel for relator places upon the ordinance of 1897. Its effect and clear meaning is, that as to all places within the specified locality, in addition to the applicant's compliance with the other municipal requirements, he must obtain the special permission of the city council. Unless such permission has been obtained, the applicant has failed to bring himself within the conditions prescribed by the ordinances. Whether the ordinance is one which may lawfully be adopted and executed depends upon the power conferred upon the city by the charter, and a consideration of the legality of such a discretion if it proceeds from legislative authority. The charter invests the city, in its corporate capacity, with authority and power to enact ordinances, to "levy and collect taxes on . . . dramshops, saloons, liquor sellers, . . . and regulate the same by ordinance." Rev. Stat. § 161. Several other occupations and kinds of business are specifically mentioned in the subdivision of the section quoted from. It is conceded, and indeed insisted, on behalf of relator that the power to tax as given by that particular section includes authority to license. The authority "to regulate the same by ordinance" counsel dismisses from consideration, apparently on the ground that it must be held to refer only to the occupation or business last named, viz., "shows, theaters, and all kinds of exhibitions for pay." This court did not take that view of it in the case of Cheyenne v. O'Connell (Wyo.) 46 Pac. 1088; and we do not now conceive such view to be the correct one. The clear intent and meaning of the provision is that, as to all the occupations and kinds of business mentioned in the subdivision, the city may enact ordinances, not only to tax, but to regulate. We agree that the power to license is included in the power to tax and regulate. Other provisions of the charter authorize the property employed in the several occupations to be taxed upon an assessed value for general revenue purposes, and the evident intent and force of this particular provision is to permit an occupation tax, or to require a license for the privilege of carrying on the same, and to otherwise regulate such occupations. The legislature has not attempted to regulate in any manner the matter of municipal licenses. The general law concerning county licenses does not affect the power which has been conferred upon various cities and towns to require a license for the sale of liquors within their respective limits. If a municipal license is provided for by any municipality in lawful pursuance of its charter powers, it is in addition to the county license. Where both are provided for, one must possess both to lawfully sell liquors within the corporate boundaries.

It is now well and conclusively settled that the legislature may not only regulate and restrain the sale of intoxicants, but may entirely prohibit the same. It possesses the fullest and amplest powers in that respect. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 628, 31 L. ed. 205; Ex parte Levy, 43 Ark. 43, 51 Am. Rep. 550; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 84, 87, 89. Authorities might be multiplied, but the principle is now too well established to require further reference to them. It is likewise settled law that such power may be delegated to municipal corporations, in the absence of constitutional restrictions, to be operative within their respective limits; and this is true notwithstanding that the subject has already been provided for by the general laws of the state. Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 217; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 308. The legislature may confer a lawful discretion upon boards and officers appointed to grant liquor licenses. This proposition is not denied, but it is urged that, unless such discretion is conferred, none exists. We need not dispute such contention. The question, however, may often arise whether the discretion in any case exists. It has been held to have been conferred in very many cases under varying forms of legislation, but a discussion of the cases at this time will hardly be useful. They may be found collated in Black on Intoxicating Liquors, in notes to §§ 170-172. The city of Cheyenne, by its ordinances, has retained or granted to the council a discretion, at least in respect to a certain locality. There can be no doubt but that, where a municipality has legislative authority for such purpose, it may restrict the localities within which intoxicating liquors may be sold, and that the character of persons to whom licenses for the sale thereof shall be issued may be prescribed. The city of Cheyenne, in its corporate capacity, has been given complete authority to enact ordinances to regulate the sale of liquors within its limits. The charter also authorizes the enactment of ordinances to prevent and remove nuisances (Rev. Stat. § 161, subd. 7); to prescribe limits within which "dangerous, obnoxious, or offensive business may be carried on" (subdiv. 18); to restrain, prohibit, and suppress tippling shops and other disorderly houses and all kinds of public indecencies (subdiv. 4), in addition to the power contained in what is generally known as the "general welfare clause." Although it is not necessary to resort to any other statutory authority than that contained in subdivision 8, the above provisions are referred to as exhibiting the very ample powers bestowed upon the municipality for the purpose of maintaining its internal peace and good order.

The entire argument on behalf of the relator is based upon the assumed absence of a discretion of any character in the municipal authorities. The assumption is erroneous. The legislature conferred upon the city the power to enact ordinances regulating the subject, to the same extent, possibly short of entire prohibition, as the legislature itself could have done by a direct and comprehensive statute. In pursuance of that power, the city has enacted ordinances which vest in the council a certain discretion as to a stated locality. The question, nevertheless, arises whether or not the regulations, so far as the nature of the discretion is concerned, are lawful, and whether such discretion has been lawfully exercised in the present instance. It is a fundamental principle that there is no inherent right in a citizen, or anyone, to sell intoxicating liquors by retail, and that there is not a vested right in any person to have a liquor license. Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620; Ex parte Levy, 43 Ark. 42, 51 Am. Rep. 550. "As it is a business attended with danger to the community, it may, as already said, be entirely prohibited, or be permitted under such conditions as will limit to the utmost its evils. The manner and extent of regulation rest in the discretion of the governing authority. That authority may vest in such officers as it may deem proper the power of passing upon applications for permission to carry it on, and to issue licenses for that purpose. It is a matter of legislative will only." Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620.

The precise question arising in the case at bar has engaged the attention of the courts in a number of adjudicated cases, and they unite in upholding a law or municipal ordinance such as we have in this case, and a reasonable exercise of the authority and discretion granted or retained thereby, as applied to the sale of intoxicating liquors, unless the regulation comes in conflict with some general law, or the discretion is exercised arbitrarily and without any consideration or reason in an individual case.

The city and county of San Francisco possessed the power, under the Constitution, to make "all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." An ordinance of that municipality provided that no liquor license should be issued unless the applicant should have obtained the consent of a majority of the board of police commissioners to carry on the business, or, in case of the refusal of such consent, then, upon the written recommendation of not less than twelve citizens of San Francisco owning real estate in the block or square in which the business is desired to be carried on. No material distinction between that and the Cheyenne ordinance is to be observed upon principle. Said ordinance came before the supreme court of California and the Supreme Court of the United States. Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 208; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620. The case of Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, relating to a laundry ordinance, was relied on in each case to defeat the liquor ordinance. The objection made was that the license depended upon the arbitrary will of the police board in the first instance, and of the twelve property owners in the second. The following was said in the opinion in Ex parte Christensen: "Whatever force this objection might have in reference to licenses to carry on the ordinary avocations of life, which are not supposed to have any injurious tendency, it has no force in the present case." And Mr. Justice Field, in Crowley v. Christensen, in his opinion sustaining the ordinance, and a refusal to grant a license, distinguished the case from Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, by saying: "It will thus be seen that that case was essentially different from the one now under consideration; the ordinance there held invalid vesting uncontrolled discretion in the board of supervisors with reference to a business harmless in itself, and useful to the community, and the discretion appearing to have been exercised for the express purpose of depriving the petitioner of a privilege that was extended to others. In the present case the business is not one that any person is permitted to carry on without a license, but one that may be entirely prohibited or subjected to such restrictions as the governing authority of the city may prescribe." The license was refused in the two cases just alluded to for the reason that larcenies had been committed in the place kept by the applicant.

An ordinance of the city of Grand Rapids, Michigan, required every applicant for a liquor license, in addition to other conditions, to obtain the consent of the common council. The charter authority was "to enact such ordinances, by-laws, and regulations as they deemed desirable . . . to restrain license and regulate saloons, and to regulate and prescribe the location thereof." This is not essentially different from a power to license and regulate; but, as has been seen, Cheyenne is empowered to prescribe limits within which an obnoxious or offensive business may be carried on. An application was refused on account of the objectionable locality; and the court declined to require by mandamus the city authorities to grant the license. Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 198, 21 L. R. A. 580. An objection made to the ordinance in that case was that the regulation should have been made by a general ordinance fixing districts within which saloons may be kept, and that the council did not possess the power to hear and determine each individual case. It was held that the ordinance was authorized, and that the other conditions, such as giving a bond, presenting a petition, and kindred matters, did not limit the discretion, but prescribed merely a method of procedure. The cases cited in the dissenting opinions in that case do not, in my judgment, sustain their view. Some of them arose in respect to legitimate and useful avocations, such as dairies, slaughter houses, and the like, and others, like Amperse v. Kalamazoo, 59 Mich. 78, to a case of the arbitrary refusal of a village or town board to approve a bond where the board had nothing else to do under state law concerning licenses but to approve the bond, the license not being issued by or under authority of the board.

The mayor of Chicago refused a liquor license for a place in the midst of a dwelling-house district, and the appellate court sustained him, holding "that a court should not, by mandamus, compel the public officials to issue a license for the keeping of a saloon in a residence neighborhood, where a saloon will be a nuisance." Swift v. People, Powers, 63 Ill. App. 453. That decision was rendered notwithstanding the case of Zanone v. Mound City, which will be referred to.

The council of Salt Lake City, Utah, had power "to license, regulate, and tax" the sale of intoxicating liquors. A municipal ordinance required a petition by an applicant for liquor license to be presented, in which the place of business and some other minor matters of fact were required to be stated, and also a bond. It was held that the council could, in its discretion, refuse a license, although the applicant had complied with the ordinance in respect to petition, bond, etc. Perry v. Salt Lake City, 7 Utah, 148, 11 L. R. A. 446.

The legality of a discretion which may be exercised in each individual case is also sustained in many other cases, but a citation of the following, the facts of which more closely approach those in the case at bar, will subserve all useful purposes: Trageer v. Gray, 73 Md. 250, 9 L. R. A. 780; Perkins v. Ledbetter, 68 Miss. 327; Maxton Comrs. v. Robeson County Comrs. 107 N. C. 385; Hillsboro Comrs. v. Smith, 110 N. C. 417; Com. v. Moran, 148 Mass. 453.

The case of Ex parte Levy, 48 Ark. 42, 51 Am. Rep. 550, is also in point. It was held in that case that a law which would limit the number of dramshops, authorizing the selection of such limited number in some manner, would not be void as creating a monopoly in the sense of the constitutional prohibition, but would be rather a police regulation for the public good, in view, however, of the constitutional inhibition of that state against the granting to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all citizens. The court held that the discretion of the county court over liquor licenses extended only to determine whether the applicant had complied with all the requirements of the law, and is of good moral character, and that, upon a refusal to grant a license, the grounds should be shown, so that it might be seen whether or not the court had exercised a sound legal discretion in the matter. In that case the application was under a general law of the state, and no question of regulation under municipal charters or ordinances was involved. It is a well-considered case, and not in conflict with our conclusions herein. The discretion to determine the moral fitness of the applicant to receive a license was recognized as a proper one, and that a discrimination between those worthy and unworthy of receiving the privilege was not unlawful. The question of location did not arise in the case.

There are cases which announce the general doctrine that, where privileges are granted by law, they should be open to the enjoyment of all, upon the same terms and conditions. So far as that principle, when given its broadest significance, is held to forbid a municipal corporation to make any discrimination between applicants for license to conduct or carry on a particular business, it has usually been applied in the case of such industries or avocations which are necessary to the well-being of the community and harmless in themselves, but, by reason of the character of the employment, require municipal regulation. A clear distinction, however, is generally recognized between such occupations and the business of selling intoxicating liquors, the latter being one which, in the exercise of the police power of the state, may be entirely prohibited. We do not therefore conceive it either necessary or desirable to attempt any review of the decisions relating to the former class of employments.

A case which has denied the power of a municipality to refuse a liquor license to one who has complied with the procedure and conditions prescribed by law is Ex parte Theisen, 30 Fla. 529. That case, however, is easily distinguishable from Crowley v. Christensen, and the others in harmony with it. The Florida court referred to those cases, and, as a feature which distinguished them from Ex parte Theisen, mentioned the fact that the statutes of the state contained specific regulations relating to the sale of liquors and the issuance of municipal licenses therefor, and the court said: "Our decision in the case at bar rests upon the conclusion that the grant to municipal corporations to regulate and restrain will not permit the enactment of an ordinance under which arbitrary discrimination may be made in respect to matters which are exclusively under statutory control and regulation. In the absence of an express declaration of intention to that effect, it must not be assumed that the legislature proposed by the grant of power to municipal corporations to regulate and restrain retail liquor dealing, to confer upon them the power to contravene and defeat state policy by ordinances inconsistent with the laws of the state on the subject."

The case of Zanone v. Mound City, 103 Ill. 552, is cited as authority against the validity of the refusal of the license to relator in the case at bar. In that case, however, the municipal authorities offered no sort of excuse, justification, or explanation of their action in refusing the license, but they rested upon what was contended to be their power of arbitrary discrimination. The ordinances did not provide for the previous consent of the board. All that the case decides is that the corporate authorities could not exercise an arbitrary discrimination, and could not refuse a license through mere caprice. It was not denied but that the city might limit the number of dramshop keepers to be licensed, or refuse licenses to "persons of such habits and character as render them unfit persons to be licensed," but the court says that the authorities had not decided that the applicant was an unfit man. It was said as to limiting the number of licenses that it should be done by ordinance, and in such a way as to avoid favoritism and monopoly. Three of the justices dissented in that case. The case of Swift v. People, Powers, 63 Ill. App. 453, was decided subsequently to that of Zanone v. Mound City; and the appellate court evidently did not consider the latter case as denying the principle that, for good reasons, the authorities of the city could refuse a license for a place which would be detrimental to the best interests of the municipality and its citizens. As good, if not stronger reasons, may exist for discrimination as to the place where liquor shall be permitted to be retailed in an incorporated town as for such a discrimination between individuals based upon personal fitness.

In the case at bar the council has not refused the license through mere caprice, nor have they attempted an exercise of mere arbitrary discrimination. Their answer to the alternative writ of mandamus disclosed at length the reasons for their action. Two other applicants had been refused who desired to carry on the same character of business in the same place or locality. They did not discriminate against the relator individually. He had selected a place which the council insists would, judging from the past, endanger the peace and good order of the community. While the pleadings and statement of facts are not very definite as to the comparative location described with reference to the other business locations in the city, enough, perhaps, appears to indicate that the prescribed limits and the place selected by the applicant are not contiguous to the business districts. We conclude, therefore, that, under the charter authority to enact ordinances to tax and regulate, the city possesses the power to license saloons and liquor sellers, to regulate the same by ordinance by prescribing the locality or localities in which such business shall be permitted, and to provide by ordinance that the consent of the council shall be obtained before the issuance of a license for the sale of intoxicating liquors within certain limits, and that the ordinance of February, 1897, has that effect, and that the same is valid. We have not much, if any, doubt but that the discretion should be reasonably and soundly exercised. It should not be enforced merely as a matter of caprice, but the action of the council should appear to be based on reasons. It does so appear in the case at bar.

These considerations must necessarily dispose of the controversy, and must result in a denial of the writ prayed for. It should perhaps be mentioned that the county license, which relator held, running from May, 1897, to May, 1898, did not permit him to sell within the city, but was issued for a place outside of the municipal limits. He had applied for, was willing and ready to acquire, but had not received, a license from the county authorities to operate within the city.

The following, in connection with what has been said, will sufficiently answer such of the reserved questions as are pertinent to the points we have considered, without returning specific answers to individual questions: The charter authorizes the city to enact ordinances regulating the matter of granting licenses for the selling at retail of intoxicating liquors, and, in pursuance of that authority, the ordinances may vest a discretionary power in the council the same to be reasonably exercised, as to the place or places where such sale, within the city, shall be permitted or denied, and may prescribe the locality or district within which said sales may be, and without which may not be, licensed, and that the council, upon the facts and circumstances set forth in the agreed statement of facts, had authority to refuse to issue a license to the relator, notwithstanding that he should give a sufficient bond conditioned as required by the ordinances.

Corn and Knight, JJ., concur.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Alfred E. SHERMAN, Admr., etc., of John Baker, Deceased,
v.

Mary BAKER et al.

(..... R. I.)

1. A gift by will of a certain sum to a priest to say masses for the testator, being an outright gift to take effect at once, is valid.

NOTE.—Validity of bequests for masses.

There is some conflict of authority as to the validity of a bequest for masses. It seems that by the weight of American authority a bequest of — dollars to A. B., requesting him to say masses for the testator's soul, will be sustained as a valid gift. In some cases such a bequest has been sustained on the ground that it was a valid trust, in others it was held valid because not a trust, but a gift to the donee. In other cases it has been sustained as not contravening a statute prohibiting devises to charitable or religious societies of more than half of the testator's property.

In addition to the cases cited in Festorazzi v. St. Joseph Roman Catholic Church (Ala.) 25 L. R. A. 360, note, the following cases sustain the validity of a bequest or devise for the purpose of having masses said for the souls of the testator and others. HARRISON v. BROPHY, HOFFLER v. CLOGAN, SHERMAN v. BAKER, Moran v. Moran (Iowa) 39 L. R. A. 204; Emsley v. Madden, 18 Grant, Ch. (N. C.) 386; Brennan v. Brennan, Ir. Rep. 2 Eq. 321; Atty. Gen. v. Delaney, Ir. Rep. 10 C. L. 104; Re Backes, 9 Misc. 504; Re Zimmerman, 22 Misc. 411; Bradshaw v. Jackman, Ir. L. R. 21 Eq. 12; Pheian v. Slaterry, Ir. 40 L. R. A.

2. A bequest the income of which is to be used to ornament and keep in repair the burial lot of the testator is void because it is a gift in perpetuity for a private trust, and not for a charitable trust.

3. A bequest to the parish priest of a certain church to say masses for the testator goes to the priest who is in office when the will takes effect.

4. Clauses of a will giving specified

L. R. 19 Eq. 177; Reichenbach v. Quin, Ir. L. R. 21 Eq. 138; Dillon v. Reilly, Ir. Rep. 10 Eq. 152.

In SHERMAN v. BAKER it was held that a bequest to the parish priest of A. B. church of $100 "to say masses for me," was evidently not intended to be a trust, as it was for the parish priest himself for his own service in saying masses, and was valid. It was further held that the legatee designated in this clause was intended to be the parish priest in office when this will should take effect.

So, in HARRISON v. BROPHY, a bequest of a sum of money to a priest of the Roman Catholic Church for the celebration of mass for the souls of the testator and another was construed as a gift direct to the donee, with an injunction to the performance of the ceremonial named, and was held not to be in trust for such purpose, and was not void because incapable of being enforced by beneficiaries in being. It was further held that the English common law, which avoided as being for superstitious uses bequests for masses, was not the law in Kansas.

In HOFFLER v. CLOGAN it was held that a devise and bequest to a church in trust to expend the proceeds in saying masses for the repose of the souls of certain persons was not void as a mere private trust, but was a valid charitable trust aiding portions of the residue are construed to refer to the residue mentioned near the beginning of the will after deducting the burial expenses, and not to the residue after deducting the legacies made in the intervening clauses, where the terms of the will are such that this construction makes a disposition of substantially all the estate, while the other construction would leave a considerable portion undisposed of, except by a final residuary clause tacked on to the will on a separate slip as an evident afterthought, to provide for a possible contingency.

5. The children of certain persons to whom a bequest is made, to take effect after the determination of a life estate, are those living at the death of the testator, and their interests vest upon his death rather than at the death of the life tenant.

6. A widow's election of dower and refusal to accept the gift of the income of certain property for life in lieu thereof, under a will which contemplates the conversion of the real estate into money and then a division, will entitle the administrator to divide the balance of the estate after setting off dower, without waiting for the death of the widow.

(April 5, 1898.)

BILL for the construction of the will of John Baker deceased.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Herbert Almy, for complainant:

The renunciation of the wife of the provisions of the will in her favor "works an extinguishment of her life estate and acceleration of the rights of the second taker."

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 897, note; Earestaff v. Austin, 19 Beav. 591; Re Schultz (Mich.) 71 N. W. 1079.

All the legacies down to the fourteenth, with the exception of the thirteenth, vest at once on the death of the testator, the time of payment only being postponed to the time when all the real and personal estate should be converted into money.

1 Jarman, Wills, 6th ed. p. 811; Chafee v. Maker, 17 R. I. 741; Williams v. Knight, 18 R. I. 333.

to support the clergy and public worship, as it was presumed that the masses would be said in public. It was further held that a trustee would be appointed by the court if necessary to prevent the failure thereof.

So, in Moran v. Moran (Iowa) 39 L. R. A. 204, it was held that a bequest to the pastor of a specified church "that masses may be said for me," although not a charity, created a valid private trust.

And where a bequest was made of £100 to the Society of St. Vincent de Paul; £15 to be expended in paying for masses to be said for the soul of the testator, and the residue to be converted into cash and paid to the House of Providence, it was held that the bequest for masses was not void as a bequest for superstitious uses. It was further held that the fact that neither of the societies was a corporation did not render the gifts void, as gifts to voluntary charitable associations were valid. Emsley v. Madden, 18 Grant, Ch. (N. C.) 386.

In Reichenbach v. Quin, Ir. L. R. 21 Eq. 138, where a testatrix directed her trustees to sell her interest in certain premises and out of the amount realized to apply £100 towards having masses offered up in public in Ireland for the repose of her soul and the souls of other persons mentioned, one of whom was then alive and survived her, it was 40 L. R. A.

As the thirteenth legacy is to a class, and is not to take effect until after the death of the wife, and as the gift is of one sixth of all the said residue of my estate to one class, and one sixth-part of all of my said estate to the other class, this legacy is also accelerated, and these children take vested interests.

Earestaff v. Austin, 19 Beav. 591; Gillespie v. Schuman, 62 Ga. 256.

Formerly a gift to say masses was held to be void as against the general policy of the law. See 1 Jarman, Wills, 6th ed. p. 199.

But latterly and in this country such bequests are upheld.

See 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 923, notes.

A bequest for the purpose of ornamenting and keeping in proper repair the burial lot is void.

Kelly v. Nichols, 17 R. I. 306.

Mr. James M. Gillrain also for complainant.

Messrs. David S. Baker, Charles E. Gorman, and Lewis A. Waterman for respondents.

Stiness, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill for the construction of the will of John Baker. After providing for his burial and the erection of a monument, the testator at once goes on to say that all the residue of his estate, real and personal, shall be converted into money and disposed of according to the remaining clauses of the will. The tenth and eleventh clauses give to the parish priest of St. Patrick's Church at Valley Falls $100 "to say masses for me," and $100 "the income of which to be used in ornamenting and keeping in proper repair my burial lot in said St. Patrick's cemetery."

The strife of the time of the Reformation naturally found vent in statutes. Among them was that of 1 Edw. VI. chap. 14, for vesting in the Crown property, devoted to "superstition and errors in Christian religion," which specified "vain opinions of purgatory and masses satisfactory, to be done for them which held without discussion not to create a perpetuity, and was not void for that cause.

In Dillon v. Reilly, Ir. Rep. 10 Eq. 152, where a testator directed a sum to be invested and the interest thereof to be paid to the Roman Catholic clergyman attached to the parish at the time of his death, from time to time forever thereafter, upon condition that "four masses each month shall be celebrated for the benefit of my soul and the souls of my relatives and the poor souls late of the parish of St. Peter, Drogheda, now suffering in purgatory," the bequest was held to be valid for the lives of the clergyman officiating in the parish at the time of the testator's death and the survivor of them, and that at the death of such survivor the principal invested formed a part of the residuary personal estate.

In Small v. Torley, Ir. L. R. 25 Eq. 338, it was said in regard to Dillon v. Reilly, Ir. Rep. 10 Eq. 152, that from the very unsatisfactory nature of the report of it, comment has frequently arisen. "It cannot be treated as a decision that in a case where words are used which purport to tie up property beyond legal limits, the court will from thence carve out a life estate, hold it good to that extent, and reject the rest. On the contrary it is plainly a decision on the peculiar words of a particular will."

were departed." From this came the English doctrine of superstitious uses, and even now, after the statute of 2 & 3 Wm. IV. chap. 115, which legalizes bequests for the support of the Roman Catholic religion, a legacy to priests and chapels for the benefit of their prayers and masses is held to be void on account of the superstitious purpose attached to them. West v. Shuttleworth, 2 Myl. & K. 684; Heath v. Chapman, 2 Drew, 417; Re Blundell, 80 Beav. 860.

In this country, where all forms of religious belief stand upon equal legal rights, the doctrine of superstitious uses has never been recognized, and bequests for masses are now generally admitted to be legal, but there is a diversity of opinion as to their execution. One class of cases holds that they are good as charitable trusts, being for religious services. Another class holds that they are private trusts which are void because there is no living beneficiary to enforce the trust. A third class holds that they are good as outright gifts for a specified legal object.

Of the first class is Schouler, Petitioner, 184 Mass. 426, in which the court says: "Masses are religious ceremonies or observances of the church, of which she [the testatrix] was a member, and come within the religious or pious uses which are upheld as public charities." In Rhymer's Appeal, 93 Pa. 142, 39 Am. Rep. 786, it was held that a gift for masses was a gift to a religious use, and so void under a statute declaring that no gift in trust for charitable or religious uses should be made, except it should be done at least one month before the testator's death. The opinion says that the mass is a prominent part of the religious service of the Catholic Church, and that the service is the same in kind, whether it be designed to promote the spiritual welfare of one or many. See also Seibert's Appeal, 18 W. N. C. 276; Seda v. Huble, 75 Iowa, 429.

Recent examples of the second class may be found in Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 25 L. R. A. 860; Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312, and McHugh v. McCole, post, 724. In this last case the court held a gift of this kind to be invalid because its form implies a trust, but, at the same time, it said this: "We know of no legal reason why any person of the Catholic faith, believing in the efficacy of masses, may not make a direct gift or bequest to any bishop or priest, of any sum out of his property or estate, for masses for the repose of his soul, or the souls of others, as he may choose. Such gifts or bequests, when made in clear, direct, and legal form, should be upheld; and they are not to be considered as impeachable or invalid, under the rule that prevailed in England, by which they were held void as gifts to superstitious uses."

The third class of cases is like those which this court referred to in Williams v. Herrick, 19 R. I. 197, relating to something to be done and ended, such as erecting a monument or a building, as to which we said that we made no question that a devise with such a simple direction would be good.

The essential distinction between these classes of cases is not the legality of the purpose of the gift, but the creation of a perpetuity. A charitable trust may be in perpetuity, but a private trust cannot be. If a gift is a charitable trust, it will be good, whenever it is to be executed. If it is not a charitable trust it will be good if it has the proper elements of a trust and is to be executed within the limit allowed by law; or it will be good if it is an outright gift for a specified legal object, although it may not have all the elements of a trust, but may be only what has been called an honorary trust,—an expression of a desired purpose rather than an imposed condition, for present execution, and not in perpetuity.

This will presents an example both of a gift in perpetuity for a private trust, i. e. for the care of the testator's burial lot, and an outright gift for masses. The former is invalid. Kelly v. Nichols, 17 R. I. 306; Williams v. Herrick, 19 R. I. 197. The latter, the gift for masses, is valid, as one which takes effect at once, like any personal bequest for a legal object. It is evidently not intended to be a trust, as it is for the parish priest himself, for his own service in saying masses. A gift to one for a mourn-

If we look to the terms of the bequest we find no mention of the 'successors' of the persons taking the gift: the only persons named are 'the clergymen attached to the parish of St. Peter, Drogheda, at the time of my death.' And the court, in Small v. Torley, further says: "If the gift was held to be a dedication of property forever, I should respectfully decline to follow the decision."

In Brennan v. Brennan, Ir. Rep. 2 Eq. 321, where a bequest was made in a will "of £50 to such person as shall at my death be the Roman Catholic priest . . . upon the following trust . . . to have one half thereof expended in procuring masses to be celebrated for the repose of," and by a subsequent will "£20 to the priest of the parish in which I die, for masses to be celebrated for the repose of," and both wills were admitted to probate,—it was held that the legacies for masses in both wills should be paid. The court does not discuss the question as to the validity of a devise for masses.

In Re Backes, 9 Misc. 504, where a will directed her executors "to cause masses to be read in a German Catholic Church in the city of Buffalo, for herself and her deceased husband, for any balance of cash money which might be left after the payment of her just debts, doctor bills, and funeral expenses," it was held that the testator had the right to appropriate a reasonable amount of her money, in offering masses for the remission of her and her deceased husband's sins, and the direction to her executor to have the masses said in a German Catholic Church in Buffalo was not indefinite, as the deceased could not have intended any other than a German Roman Catholic Church, and the direction contained in the will for the masses was valid.

And a bequest of bank stock was sustained where it was made to J., provincial of the Franciscan missionaries of M. chapel in D., or to the provincial of said missionaries at the time of my death, for the offering up of masses for the souls of the testator and his late father, mother, brothers, and sisters, although it was held that J. could not be compelled to apply anything to the use of the Franciscan order. It was further held that the gift in the alternative did not affect its validity, as the money in the hands of such provincial would be bound by no trust for the order, but would be simply in trust for the celebration of masses. It was also held there was nothing in the will making it compulsory that the masses should be held by the Franciscan order. Bradshaw v. Jackman, Ir. L. R. 21 Eq. 12.

ing ring would not be a trust, and this is the same in principle. In each case the testator would seek a posthumous benefit,—a memorial of his personality in one case, and a benefit to his soul in the other. In both cases the substance of the gift would go to the legatee, and one is not a trustee for himself. It is not precisely like the gift for a monument, for that is not intended to go to the legatees, and is like a trust, except that it lacks a living beneficiary; but given a legal bequest, not personal to the legatee or to his use, and it is hard to see why it should not be enforced as a trust. The answer that there is no one in interest to have a standing in court is met by the rejoinder that an heir at law of the testator has a sufficient interest to see that the will is carried out. See article by Prof. James B. Ames on "Failure of Tilden Trust," 5 Harvard Law Rev. 389. But, however this may be, there can be no doubt that the bequest in the tenth clause of the will is good for the reasons we have stated. This view is supported by Moran v. Moran (Iowa) 89 L. R. A. 204; Seda v. Huble, 75 Iowa, 429; Vanderveer v. McKane, 25 Abb. N. C. 105; Gilman v. McArdle, 99 N. Y. 451, 52 Am. Rep. 41; Reichenbach v. Quin, Ir. L. R. 21 Eq. 188. The case is expressly put upon the ground that no perpetuity is created.

We are also of opinion that the legatee designated in the tenth clause was intended to be the parish priest in office when the will should take effect.

The second question is whether the gifts of the residue in the thirteenth and fourteenth clauses relate to the residue mentioned in the second clause or to the residue after taking out the legacies in the intervening clauses. The will is very crudely drawn. It starts out with a residue after the burial expenses; then refers again to a residue in these clauses; and, as though these were not residues enough, another residuary clause is added at the end of the will. We think that the testator must have meant the residue referred to in the second clause. That was the net remainder of his property to be divided. In the twelfth clause he gives the income of one third of all his "said estate" to his wife for life, and in the next clause he gives two sixths to the children of her brother and the children of Thomas Murphy. But one sixth is described as a part "of all the said residue of my estate," and the other as "one sixth part of all of my said estate." Evidently he did not mean to make a distinction in these two gifts. They just made up the one third given to his wife for life, and which was to pass upon her death, and the indiscriminate use of the words "residue" and "estate" show that they meant the same thing. In clause 14 he gives one third "of all the said residue;" and here again we think that he must have had in mind the net remainder of his estate which he was dividing. This construction is supported by the scheme of the will. The final residuary clause has the phrase, "if any there should be;" which shows that, to his mind, about all of the property had been divided, and it was doubtful if any would remain. By the terms of the will, the pecuniary legacies were about one third of the value of his property, one third to his wife and one third to Catherine Baker. This would dispose, very nearly, of the whole estate. If the sale of the real estate should be favorable there might be a surplus in the third devoted to pecuniary legacies, and so, to be sure that nothing should be left over, the final residuary clause was tacked onto the will, on a separate slip, as an evident afterthought, to provide for a possible contingency. But under any other construction there must have been a residue; for if the residue, in clauses 13 and 14 refers to the remainder after the payment of the pecuniary legacies, the testator would only give away two thirds, and would leave one third of that residue not bequeathed. Upon this answer the third question becomes immaterial.

The fourth question is whether the bequests to the children of Thomas Keenan and of Thomas Murphy refer to children living at the death of the testator or at the death of his wife, when the legacies are payable, after the determination of the life estate. For the reasons given

So, where a testator left to the abbot of M. for the time being £100 for masses for the repose of his soul at a stipend of 5s. each, it was held to be a valid bequest as being immediately payable, the word "stipend" being used as meaning price, and not involving any attempt to create a perpetuity. Phelan v. Slattery, Ir. L. R. 19 Eq. 177.

Where a will contained a bequest to the priest of St. Mary's Church of Lancaster, New York, of the sum of $600, for which masses shall be said for the repose of my soul and that of my husband and all my relatives and benefactors, it was held to be valid under N. Y. Laws 1890, chap. 390, providing that no person having a husband, wife, parent, or child shall devise or bequeath to any benevolent, charitable, religious, or missionary society, in trust or otherwise, more than one half of his property after the payment of his debts, although another clause gave $200 to St. Mary's Church of Lancaster, and another clause gave $200 to the Seminary and College of Our Lady of Angels for the support of students for the priesthood, as it was held that the bequest to the priest was not to the church, and therefore not more than one half of the estate was bequeathed to corporations. Re Zimmerman, 22 Misc. 411.

So, under N. Y. Laws 1893, chap. 701, § 1, providing "that no gift, grant, bequest, or devise to religious," educational, charitable, or benevolent uses, which shall in other respects be valid under the laws of this state, shall or be deemed invalid by reason of the indefiniteness or uncertainty of the persons designated as the beneficiaries thereunder in the instrument creating the same. If in the instrument creating such a gift, grant, bequest, or devise there is a trustee named to execute the same, the legal title to the lands or property given, granted, devised, or bequeathed for such purposes shall vest in such trustee. If no person be named as trustee then the title to such lands or property shall vest in the supreme court."—it was held that a bequest to the priest of St. Mary's Church of Lancaster, New York, of the sum of $600 for which mass shall be said for, etc., was not a bequest to the church, and that he would be entitled to the same on the performance of such service. Re Zimmerman, 22 Misc. 411.

Where a testatrix domiciled in Ireland bequeathed of her personal estate in Ireland sums of money to Roman Catholic ecclesiastics in Ireland to offer up masses "for the repose of the soul of her brother and of her own," it was held that bequests were liable to legacy duty at the rate of 10 per cent. Atty. Gen. v. Delaney, Ir. Rep. 10 C. L. 104.

And where a legacy was left for masses to be said in a public church in Ireland "which church in Chafee v. Maker, 17 R. I. 789, and Pond v. Allen, 15 R. I. 171, we think that the gifts took effect at the death of the testator. They were present gifts, although postponed in payment; and as there was no uncertainty in the happening of the event upon which the payment depended, but only as to the time of happening, the interest vested upon the death of the testator.

The fifth question is whether the refusal of the widow to accept the provisions of the will in lieu of her dower, and the setting off of a portion of the real estate as her dower, permit the administrator to divide the balance of the estate, which he has converted into cash, before the death of the widow. We think that there can be no doubt that the administrator has the right to pay legacies as far as he can before the death of the widow. The payment of only one third of the estate was to await her death, and that because she was to have the income for life. This she has refused by applying for and securing dower. There is no reason now to hold that third of the estate until her death. But the will contemplated that all the real estate should be converted into money, and that the division should then be made; and, as all of the real estate cannot now be sold until after her dower interest has terminated, the question is made whether there can be any division at all until after her death. The parties interested need not and ought not to be kept out of what belongs to them. A state of affairs has come which the testator did not look for. The conversion of the whole estate cannot take place at once. But that is no reason why the legatees should not have as much of their legacies as can now be paid, waiting for the balance until the rest of the estate can be converted into money, according to the will. The election of the widow to take dower has effaced the life estate, and so advanced the interests in remainder. 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 897; Re Schultz (Mich.) 71 N. W. 1079; Eavestaff v. Austin, 19 Beav. 591.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Abbie HARRISON, Plff. in Err.,

v.
Thomas BROPHY et al.

(.....Kan.....)

*1. A bequest of a sum of money, made in the will of a member of the Roman Catholic Church to a priest of such church, for the celebration of mass for the souls of the testator and another, will be construed as a gift direct to the donee, with an injunction to the performance of the ceremonial named, and not as made to him in trust for such purpose, and therefore void, because incapable of enforcement by beneficiaries in being.

2. The English common law, which avoided bequests of the kind above stated, as shall be open to the public during the celebration of each and every of said masses, at which everyone who shall so desire shall be allowed to be present," it was held to be subject to legacy duty under 5 & 6 Vict. chap. 82, § 38, providing that nothing in this act shall extend or be construed to extend to charge with duty, in Ireland, any legacy for the education and maintenance of poor children in Ireland, or to be applied in support of any charitable institution in Ireland, or for any purpose merely charitable. Perry v. Tuomey, Ir. L. R. 21 Eq. 480.

*Headnotes by DOSTER, Ch. J.

But in other cases such bequests were held void on various grounds as that the will created a trust without a beneficiary; that the trust was indefinite; that it was in contravention of a statute forbidding bequests for pious or charitable uses within a certain time prior to the testator's death. In some cases it was held void as a gift to a superstitious use, and in others void as creating a perpetuity.

In the following cases a bequest for masses was held invalid and void: McHUGH v. McCole; Boyle v. Boyle, Ir. Rep. 11 Eq. 433; Hart v. Brewer, Cro. Eliz. pt. 1, p. 449; West v. Shuttleworth, 2 Myl. & K. 684, 4 L. J. Ch. N. S. 115; Small v. Torley, Ir. L. R. 25 Eq. 388; Morrow v. McConville, Ir. L. R. 11 Eq. 228; Kehoe v. Wilson, Ir. L. R. 70 Eq. 10; Dillon v. Reilly, Ir. Rep. 10 Eq. 162.

40 L. R. A.

being for superstitious uses, never became a part of the law of this country; and the validity of the gift for the purpose named is therefore upheld.

(January 8, 1898.)

ERROR to the District Court for Franklin County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in a proceeding brought to contest the validity of a bequest. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John W. Deford, for plaintiff in error:

The bequest is void because it violates a doctrine of the common law, which has never been modified in this state by constitutional or statutory law, or judicial decision; and the condition and wants of our people, and of

In McHUGH v. McCole it was held that a bequest of a certain sum to a bishop, to be used and applied for masses for repose of the souls of certain persons specified, was void for the reason that there was no beneficiary who could enforce the performance of the trust. It was further held that a bequest to a certain person "to be used and applied as follows, for masses for the repose of" the souls of certain persons named, created a trust and not a gift to the donee, and was void. It was said: "Had the testator made a plain direct bequest of the sum in question to Bishop Messmer or to any bishop or priest, for masses for the repose of the souls of persons named in his will in that behalf, it would certainly be our duty to declare it valid." The court cited and adopted the argument in Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 25 L. R. A. 360.

Where a testator domiciled in Ireland devised and bequeathed his property situated in Ireland to his executors upon trust to apply the same to works of charity "such as masses for the repose of my soul and whatever else they may judge most charitable," and died within three months from the execution of the will, it was held that, the trust being indefinite, the gift totally failed. It was further held that the gift for masses was a pious every people, call loudly for its stringent enforcement.

2 Kan. Rev. Stat. § 7281.

The laws are made for the government of actions, and while they cannot interfere with mere religious belief and opinions, they may, with practices.

Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244; Mormon Church v. United States, 136 U. S. 49, 50, 34 L. ed. 493; Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 33 L. ed. 637.

The rules of the common law avoiding bequests for "superstitious uses" are in full force in Kansas. As to what these rules are, see—

1 Bacon, Abr. pp. 581, 582; 1 Jarman, Wills, *188, 189; West v. Shuttleworth, 2 Myl. & K. 684.

This bequest creates a clear trust in Rev. James Collins, "for mass" for certain souls, "if he performs her request well. If he fails no human power can compel performance," for the plain reason that the cestuis que trust are "disembodied souls," which cannot complain of breaches of trust to earthly courts, and over which such tribunals have no jurisdiction.

Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312; Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 25 L. R. A. 360.

The trust is void for uncertainty. The Rev. James Collins has, or had, two grandfathers and two grandmothers.

How many masses are to be said for this use, under 7 & 8 Vict. chap. 97, § 16, charitable donations and bequests act, providing that no donation, devise, or bequest for pious or charitable uses in Ireland shall be valid unless executed three calendar months at least before the death of the person executing the same. It was further held that the gift failed, although the will did not say in terms that the trust was to be executed and applied in Ireland. Boyle v. Boyle, Ir. Rep. 11 Eq. 433.

In Boyle v. Boyle, Ir. Rep. 11 Eq. 433, it was held that 7 & 8 Vict. chap. 97, § 16, charitable donations and bequests act, invalidated under the prescribed circumstances gifts of land whether for charitable purposes or for pious purposes.

Where a devise was made of two houses to the church wardens of — to these uses, first to find an obit and to bestow 3s. 4d. annually upon an obit in the church of St. Stephens, secondly to repair the same houses, thirdly to bestow the residue of the profits about reparations of the same church of St. Stephens and to provide ornaments in the same church, conditioned that if they failed in finding the obit then the estate should cease and the lands should be to the mayor and commonalty of London, and that they should find that obit and repair the tenements and bestow the residue of the profits upon London bridge,—it was held that the Queen should have no more but that which was appointed for the maintenance of the obit, under 1 Edw. VI. chap. 14, providing that the King shall have bequests given for obits. Hart v. Brewer, Cro. Eliz. pt. 1, p. 449.

In West v. Shuttleworth, 2 Myl. & K. 684, 4 L. J. Ch. N. S. 115, where a testatrix directed several sums to be paid to certain Roman Catholic priests and chapels, desiring that they be paid as soon as possible after her decease that she may have the benefit of their prayers and masses, and gave the residue of her property to the trustees upon trust to pay £10 each to the ministers of certain specified Roman Catholic chapels for the benefit of their prayers for the repose of her soul and that of her deceased husband, and to appropriate the re-money? And if any particular number, why so many only? And if no particular number, why any at all? And to what court is the trustee to account?

Bristol v. Bristol, 58 Conn. 242; Hess v. Murphy, 40 Wis. 276, and cases cited.

Mr. William H. Clark for defendants in error.

Doster, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Mary Brophy, a widow lady, was a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and a believer in its faith and doctrines. She was possessed of an estate consisting of personal property alone. She died after having executed a will in which specific legacies in money were given to her children and grandchildren. A residuary sum was bequeathed in the following language: "I give and bequeath to Rev. James Collins, for mass for his grandfather's and grandmother's soul." The legatee named was a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, and was the grandson of the testatrix and her deceased husband. The validity of the legacy made to him is denied by the heirs of Mary Brophy. The district court sustained the bequest, and error is now prosecuted from its decision. The claims of error are that the will undertakes to create a trust, the beneficiaries of which are disembodied spirits, in whose favor no trust can exist; that the trust, if other-mainder in such a way as they may judge best calculated to promote the Catholic Christian Religion among, etc., it was held that the gifts to the priests and chapels were void, as the statute of Edw. VI. avoids certain superstitious gifts previously created; and such statute has been considered as establishing the illegality of such gifts. It was further held that the gift of the residue, and appropriating it in such a way as the trustee shall judge best calculated to promote the knowledge of the Catholic Christian Religion among the poor and ignorant inhabitants of A—, was not void.

In Dillon v. Reilly, Ir. Rep. 10 Eq. 152, a bequest to the Roman Catholic Primate of Ireland and his successors forever, upon condition to celebrate masses for the salvation of the testator's soul and those of his relatives, was held void.

And a bequest to A. B. or other the clergyman for the time being officiating in the parish of C. D. at the time of the testator's death, and his successors, of an annuity payable during a term of fifty years from the testator's death upon trust for the celebration of masses for the repose of the souls of the testator and others, was void as being an attempt to create a perpetuity. Small v. Torley, Ir. L. R. 25 Eq. 358.

A bequest of the testator's property to his wife for life, and after her death the property held on 999 years' lease to be let and one moiety to be given to the Roman Catholic clergy of the L. church to say masses for the repose of his soul and the soul of his wife, was void, not being a charitable gift, and was an attempt to create a perpetuity. Morrow v. McConville, Ir. L. R. 11 Eq. 236.

So, in Kehee v. Wilson, Ir. L. R. 7 Eq. 10, it was held that the bequest of a sum to the superior of a body of laymen bound by religious vows, the income to be applied in masses for the benefit of the members of said order, was void as being a perpetual dedication of the income of the legacy to a purpose not charitable. As to the validity of four other gifts for masses the defendants consented to their being paid, and no opinion was expressed on their validity.

L. T.

wise valid, is void for uncertainty in the cestui que trust; and that the gift is void, because repugnant to the ancient common law against bequests for "superstitious uses." Of these in their order.

The will does not undertake to create a trust. The gift is absolute to the person named. The language in which it is made is advisory, persuasive, expressive of desire, "precatory," as called in the law of wills, but the passing of the gift is not conditioned upon the performance of the act enjoined. Upon the conscience of the donee alone is laid the duty of performing the sacred service named. The testatrix might have made the gift in the usual terms. That she coupled with it an injunction to the performance of a solemn religious ceremonial cannot avoid it. The case of Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312, is not in point against this view. The bequest in that case was made to trustees eo nomine. It was not made direct as in this case. There can be, of course, no trustee without a beneficiary in being; and, inasmuch as in the case named there was no beneficiary, there could be no trustee, and consequently no trust. Moreover, the case of Holland v. Alcock recognized the distinction we draw. The court in its opinion says: "If the bequests had been of a sum of money to an incorporated Roman Catholic church or churches duly designated by the testator, and authorized by law to receive such bequests for the purpose of the solemnization of masses, a different question would arise. But such is not this case." Since the decision of that case, the subordinate courts of New York have upheld bequests of the character of the one in question. Howard's Estate, 5 Misc. 295; Vanderreer v. McKane, 25 Abb. N. C. 105.

The fact that the legacy was a gift direct, and was not bequeathed in trust, obviates the necessity of noticing the objection made by counsel for plaintiff in error that it is void for uncertainty as to the beneficiaries. Neither is it void because repugnant to the law against bequests for "superstitious uses." To properly interpret the part of the will in question, and to determine whether effect can be given to it, we must bear in mind the Catholic Church doctrine of Purgatory. Purgatory is defined by an authoritative expositor of the church's creed to be "a state of suffering after this life, in which those souls are for a time detained who depart this life, after their deadly sins have been remitted as to the stain and guilt, and as to the everlasting pain that was due to them, but who have, on account of those sins, still some debt of temporal punishment to pay; as also those souls which leave this world guilty only of venial sins. In Purgatory these souls are purified and rendered fit to enter into Heaven, where nothing defiled enters." Catholic Belief (Lambert's Am. ed.) 196. Devotees of this church also believe "that souls in Purgatory are relieved by the sacrifice of the mass, by prayer, and pious works and alms deeds." Id. 202. Scriptural authority, as it is recognized by Catholics, though by others regarded as apocryphal, exists for the practice of offering prayers for the dead, and for contributions to the church to enable it to perform its offices in their behalf. "And, making a gathering, he [Judas Maccabeus] sent 12,000 drachms of silver to Jerusalem for sacrifice, to be offered for the sins of the dead. (For, if he had not hoped that they that were slain should arise again, it would have seemed superfluous and vain to pray for the dead.) And because he considered that they who had fallen asleep with Godliness had great grace laid up for them. It is therefore a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead, that they may be loosed from sin." 2 Maccabees, xii., 43-46. In the light of these beliefs, the act of Mary Brophy in making the bequest is reasonable and consistent, and should be upheld unless it be prohibited by force of some positive rule of law.

In the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. statutes were enacted to prevent the devoting of property to what was termed "superstitious uses." This was anterior to the reign of James I., during which the common law, consisting of the statutes and legal customs and usages then in force, was imported into the colonies; and therefore, unless these statutes have been abrogated or modified by constitutional or statutory law, judicial decisions, and the condition and wants of the people, they are of binding force in this state. Gen. Stat. 1897, chap. 1, § 4. If, by proper construction, the statutes of Henry and Edward prohibit the making of bequests for the purposes named in the will under consideration, assuming them to be parts of our law, the gift in question must fail. It is said, however, that the English courts did not hold the making of such gifts to be repugnant to the terms of these statutes, but declared them void by analogy to the prohibitions of the statutes, and by the general policy of the common law. 1 Jarman, Wills, 6th ed. 197, 198. Be that as it may,—and for the purpose of the question before us, it can make no difference whether the prohibition was originally statutory or otherwise,—we have no hesitation in declaring the English common-law interdiction of bequests of the kind named to be without force in this state. It is opposed to the spirit of religious toleration which has always prevailed in this country, and which has found expression in the Federal Constitution and statutes, and in the Constitution and statutes of every state of the Union. That religious intolerance which infused itself through parliamentary enactments and judicial sentences, and which procured the law to anathematize different creeds as "superstition" or "heresy," according as Catholic or Protestant gained governmental ascendancy, was, more than anything else, what our ancestors fled from. It would be strange, indeed, had they carried to this country, and established here, the very laws of religious persecution from which they sought to escape. They brought here such of the common law as was adapted to the condition and wants of the people, and as was consistent with the spirit and genius of free political and religious institutions. What was not thus brought has since been made, and every addition to the ancient fabric which bears any relation to the subject of religious right has been a cumulative guaranty of religious freedom. It is not, however, meant that religious toleration, as it now exists, was from the beginning the rule of practice in the colonies. What is meant is that the disabilities of the English law upon the rights of conscience and freedom of worship, though imposed in many instances, did not become established as a part of our legal polity. The fierce struggle between ancient bigotry and growing liberality, though renewed and continued here, was not a struggle between an established order and a revolutionary and protesting force. It was a struggle to prevent, and not to uproot, a legally authorized ecclesiastical system. In the sense, therefore, that the effort of many of the colonists to prescribe articles of faith and forms of worship, though partially and temporarily successful in parts of the country, finally and wholly failed, it may be said that the penalties of the English statutes and courts upon non-conformity of religious belief and practice never became incorporated into the common law of this country. The express provisions of our constitutional guaranties are to the contrary. "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." U. S. Const. Amend. art. 1. "The right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience shall never be infringed; nor shall any person be compelled to attend or support any form of worship; nor shall any control of, or interference with, the rights of conscience be permitted, nor any preference be given by law to any religious establishment or mode of worship. No religious test or property qualification shall be required for any office of public trust, nor for any vote at any election, nor shall any person be incompetent to testify on account of religious belief." Kan. Const. Bill of Rights, § 7. Many other provisions illustrative of the degree of religious toleration allowed to the people of this country might be quoted. The bequest of Mary Brophy is valid by the letter of many of them and by the spirit of them all. We may question the soundness of her belief, and may deride the claim of efficacy of the service she desired to have performed; but the law has no care for contrariety of faith as to spiritual things, and will therefore sanction the bequest she has made. The law interferes with no mere religious opinions, nor with religious practices, except such as tend to subvert the foundation of public morals and order. Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Allen, J., concurs. Johnson, J., concurs with the result.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

James McHUGH et al.

v.

Patrick McCOLE, Exr., etc., of Owen McHugh, Deceased, et al.

(.....Wis.....)

1. The doctrine of cy pres is not in force in Wisconsin.
2. A bequest to the Bishop of Fond du Lac to be used by him for the benefit and behoof of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Fond du Lac, which is not shown to be a body corporate or legal entity, capable in law of taking or asserting any right in court to the fund, but which consists of several organizations, is void for uncertainty.
3. A bequest of property to be used by the Roman Catholic Bishop of the diocese of Green Bay "for the benefit and behoof of the Roman Catholic Church," there being several churches in the diocese, is void for uncertainty.
4. Conversion of realty into personality will not be affected by a will if the provisions which require it are void, but the property will descend to the heir at law as realty.
5. A bequest of a certain sum to a bishop to be used and applied for masses for the repose of the souls of certain persons specified is void for the reason that there is no beneficiary who may enforce performance of the trust.
6. Language of the will which is plain and unambiguous will not be wrested from its natural import, as creating an unenforceable trust, for the purpose of saving the provisions from condemnation.

7. A trust, and not an absolute gift, to the individual named as recipient of the gift, is effected by a bequest to a certain person "to be used and applied as follows: for masses for the repose of" the souls of certain persons named, etc.

8. A trust will result to the donor, his heirs or legal representatives, in case of a gift upon trusts that are void in whole or in part for illegality, if the property is not otherwise disposed of.

(October 22, 1897.)

CROSS-APPEALS from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Calumet County in an action brought to test the validity of certain provisions in the will of Owen McHugh, deceased; the plaintiff appealing from so much of the judgment as upheld certain bequests in trust for religious associations, and defendant appealing from so much as held void a bequest in trust for masses. Reversed on plaintiff's appeal. Affirmed on defendant's appeal.

Statement by Pinney, J.:

This action was brought by the heirs at law of one Owen McHugh, deceased, against Patrick McCole, executor of his last will and testament; S. G. Messmer, as bishop of the Roman Catholic diocese of Green Bay; Bridget Carney, John O'Rourke, and Frank McGrath, as trustees of the St. Augustine's Roman Catholic Church of Chilton, Calumet county, Wisconsin; C. C. Grafton, as the Protestant Episcopal bishop of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, and the Catholic Orphan Asylum at Green Bay, Wisconsin,—to obtain the judgment of the court as to the intent, meaning, and legal effect of the will of said Owen McHugh, deceased, and especially with reference to the bequests and devises contained in paragraphs 4 to 7, inclusive; and to ascertain whether said provisions were void, and whether the persons named as legatees and devisees in said paragraphs take anything thereby, or are entitled to receive and take the several legacies and devises provided thereunder, and whether the executors of the deceased are entitled, under and by the terms of the will, to sell the lands of the deceased, and out of the proceeds thereof to pay said several sums to the persons therein named, as provided by the will, or whether said property should descend or pass to the heirs at law of the testator or his personal representatives for the benefit of his distributees. It appeared that the executor refused to bring an action for these purposes, or to participate therein; that one of the heirs at law, Bridget Carney, refused to join as plaintiff, and was therefore made a defendant. The plaintiffs assert several grounds of invalidity or illegality in respect to the provisions in paragraphs 4 to 7 of the will, inclusive. It was alleged that the testator left personal property sufficient to pay his debts, together with his funeral expenses, but that Patrick McCole, the executor, applied to the county court of Calumet county for an order or license authorizing and empowering him to sell the real estate of the testator, and to pay the proceeds over to the devisees and legatees mentioned in said will. There were answers put in by the defendants, raising substantially the same issues, in which it is conceded that the executor, Patrick McCole, applied to the county court of Calumet county for the purpose aforesaid, and insisted upon the validity of all the paragraphs of the will numbered 4 to 7, inclusive, but denied that the testator left personal property sufficient to pay his debts and the cost of administration, and, except as expressly admitted, denied each and every allegation of the complaint. The testator bequeathed $1,000 to his daughter Bridget Carney, $600 to his daughter Hannah Daugherty, and $300 to his grandson Joseph Daugherty; and the provisions of the fourth to the seventh paragraphs of the will, inclusive, are as follows, namely: "(4) I do give and bequeath unto the Protestant Episcopal bishop of Fond du Lac, in the state of Wisconsin, the sum of $300, to be used by him for the benefit and behoof of the Protestant Episcopal Church of said diocese of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin." (5) I do give and bequeath unto the Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese of Green Bay, Wisconsin, the sum of $4,150, the said sum to be used and applied as follows: For masses for the repose of my soul, $2,000; for masses for the repose of the soul of my deceased wife, Mary McHugh, the sum of $1,000; for the repose of the soul of my deceased son John McHugh, $500; for the repose of the soul of my deceased daughter, Katie McHugh, the sum of $100; for masses for the repose of the souls of my father and mother, Owen and Hannah McHugh, $50; for the Catholic Orphan Asylum at Green Bay, Wisconsin, the sum of $500." (6) I do give and bequeath unto the trustees of the Roman Catholic Church at Chilton, Calumet county, Wisconsin, to wit, St. Augustine Church, to be used for the benefit of said church, and in repairing the same, the sum of $500. (7) I do give, grant, bequeath, and devise all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, real or personal, to the Roman Catholic bishop of Green Bay, Wisconsin, to be by him used for the benefit and behoof of the Roman Catholic Church." Upon trial by the court it was found that the testator made his will with the provisions stated, and that it had been admitted to probate; that the defendant C. C. Grafton is the Protestant Episcopal bishop of Fond du Lac, in the state of Wisconsin; that S. G. Messmer is the Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese of Green Bay, Wisconsin, which said diocese includes the county of Calumet; that St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum of Green Bay is and was duly incorporated under the laws of the state of Wisconsin at the time of the making and publishing of said will, and was and is the only Catholic orphan asylum in said city; that the Roman Catholic bishop, the vicar general of the diocese of Green Bay, the pastor of the congregation of St. Augustine, together with John O'Rourke and Frank McGrath, are the trustees of St. Augustine's Church, Roman Catholic Church of Chilton. The court, as conclusions of law, affirmed the validity of all the provisions of the will except the sixth paragraph and so much of the fifth paragraph as disposes of $3,650, to be used and applied for masses for the repose of the souls of the persons therein named, and judgment was rendered accordingly. The plaintiffs appealed from that part of the judgment upholding the bequest to the Protestant Episcopal bishop of Fond du Lac of $300, and the provisions sustaining the seventh or residuary clause of the will, and ordering and adjudging the rest, residue, and remainder of the testator's estate to be assigned to S. G. Messmer, the Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese of Green Bay, "for the benefit and behoof of the Roman Catholic Church of his diocese." There was a cross-appeal by the defendant Patrick McCole, the executor of the testator, from so much of the judgment as declared that part of the fifth paragraph of the will bequeathing $3,650, "to be used and applied for masses" as therein specified, void for indefiniteness and uncertainty, and from the failure of the court to render judgment in accordance with said bequest.

Messrs. J. E. McMullen and L. J. Nash for plaintiffs.

Messrs. Wigman & Martin, for defendants.

The first essential inquiry is of the testator's intent, and, when this is ascertained, if it contravenes no law, it must be given effect.

Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 70; Cassoday, Wills, §§ 594-640.

The Catholic who gives money for masses trusts implicitly to the honor and conscience of the celebrant or donee, and to the rules and doctrine of the church, that his wishes shall be observed.

The testator does not use the term "trust," or "give in trust." He indicates no purpose to create a trust.

No trust is here created, and the bequest is valid.

Ruppel v. Schlegel, 55 Hun, 188; Vandermeer v. McKane, 25 Abb. N. C. 105; Howard's Estate, 5 Misc. 295; Seda v. Huble, 75 Iowa, 429; Re Backes, 9 Misc. 504; Re Hagenmeyer, 12 Abb. N. C. 432; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 181, note 4; Elmsley v. Madden, 18 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 386; Charitable Donation & Bequest Comrs. v. Walsh, 7 Ir. Eq. Rep. 34; Atty Gen. v. Hall, (1896) 2 I. R. 291; Read v. Hodgins, 7 Ir. Eq. Rep. 17; Seibert's Appeal, 18 W. N. C. 276; Kehoe v. Kehoe, Chicago Legal News, May 12, 1888.

The right of a person to devote his property to any purpose which he believes to be a religious purpose is just as necessary to the religious liberty guaranteed by the Constitution as is the right to believe and worship according to the dictates of one's own conscience.

The court should put itself in the position of the testator at the time he made the will, in order that it may determine, in the light of all the surrounding circumstances, his intent.

Lee v. Simpson, 134 U. S. 572, 33 L. ed. 1038; Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 32 L. ed. 138; Hess v. Singler, 114 Mass. 56.

Whether or not the sacrifice of the mass is ever offered for deceased, or other designed person, living or dead, is within the sole knowledge of the celebrant.

If, then, upon inquiry to determine whether or not this service has been performed, the question is dependent in its ultimate upon the honor and integrity of the celebrant, why impute to testator an intent to create a trust, a purpose to invoke the aid of a court, where its service would be nugatory and its aid futile?

Seda v. Huble, 75 Iowa, 429; Schouler, Petitioner, 134 Mass. 426.

The right of the testator to make an absolute gift or donation to some designated priest or bishop of his church, coupled with the direction that masses be said for his soul, cannot be denied. Such purpose and intent is lawful. Why should not the testator be credited with the lawful rather than the unlawful intent?

Foose v. Whitmore, 82 N. Y. 405, 37 Am. Rep. 572; Jarman, Wills, p. 686.

It was competent to prove the nature of the diocesan organization, the relation of the bishop to this organization; how the property of the diocese, real and personal, is held, and what are diocesan purposes for which such property may be used, as well that this bequest was intended for the use of the Roman Catholic Church of the diocese of Green Bay.

And the decrees, rules, canons, etc., of the church are admissible in evidence, so far as might be necessary, to establish the facts.

Fadness v. Braunborg, 73 Wis. 257; Heiss v. Vosburg, 59 Wis. 532; Mannix v. Purcell, 46 Ohio St. 102, 2 L. R. A. 753; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 723, 20 L. ed. 674.

The testator's will is, alike, simple and certain in its provisions, and his intent ascertained, must be given effect where it contravenes no law.

Dodge v. Williams, 40 Wis. 70; Cassoday, Wills, §§ 594-640; Lee v. Simpson, 134 U. S. 40 L. R. A.

572, 33 L. ed. 1038; Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 32 L. ed. 138.

The will must be construed as one relating to personal property.

Chandler's Appeal, 84 Wis. 505; Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 70; Gould v. Taylor Orphan Asylum, 46 Wis. 106; Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 559; Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 366, 57 Am. Rep. 278; Ford v. Ford, 70 Wis. 19; Crowley v. Hicks, 72 Wis. 539; Cassoday, Wills, §§ 659, 660.

The bishop in the case is trustee, ex officio, of diocesan property.

Sanborn & Berryman, Anno Stat. § 2001 (b), and subdv. 9 (a); Heiss v. Vosburg, 59 Wis. 532; Mannix v. Purcell, 41 Ohio St. 102, 2 L. R. A. 753; Re First Presby. Soc. 106 N. Y. 251.

There is no limitation of the use and no trust fastened upon any property carried by the residuary clause, other or different from the limitation and trust attached to any other property now held or which may be hereafter held by the bishop, for the benefit and behoof of the church of his diocese. This is one founded solely upon the character of the donee.

Beaver v. Beaver, 117 N. Y. 421, 6 L. R. A. 403.

It was competent to prove that the testator intended the Roman Catholic Church of the diocese of Green Bay.

Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 366, 57 Am. Rep. 278; Cassoday, Wills, § 612.

This fact appearing, the will should be read as if the words, "of the diocese of Green Bay" or "of his diocese" were found in the will.

Baker v. McLeath, 79 Wis. 534.

A voluntary association, religious or secular, may take hold and enjoy property, through its proper officers or trustees, and a court of equity will take cognizance of, and protect, the property rights of such association, against any breach of trust on the part of its officers or trustees.

Fadness v. Braunborg, 73 Wis. 257; Heiss v. Vosburg, 59 Wis. 532; Mannix v. Purcell, 46 Ohio St. 102, 2 L. R. A. 753; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 723, 20 L. ed. 674; Brown v. Storkel, 74 Mich. 269, 3 L. R. A. 430; Lafond v. Deems, 81 N. Y. 507.

Lapsed and void legacies and devises go to the residuary legatee.

1 Jarman, Wills, p. 635; Hawkins, Wills, p. 44; Sanborn & Berryman, Anno Stat. § 2279; Smith v. Curtis, 29 N. J. L. 343; Prescott v. Prescott, 7 Met. 141; Patterson v. Sallows, 44 Pa. 437; Stelman v. Stehman, 1 Watts, 475; Bayard v. Atkins, 10 Pa. 18; Drew v. Wakefield, 54 Me. 291; Brigham v. Shattuck, 10 Pick. 306; Hayden v. Sloughton, 5 Pick. 528; Thayer v. Wellington, 9 Allen, 23, 85 Am. Dec. 753; Youngs v. Youngs, 45 N. Y. 254; Cruikshank v. Home of the Friendless, 113 N. Y. 337, 4 L. R. A. 140; Re Pierce, 56 Wis. 560; Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 570; Neuman v. Waterman, 63 Wis. 616, 53 Am. Rep. 310; Hiles v. Atlee, 90 Wis. 72.

Pinney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The record does not disclose how much of the testator's estate consisted of realty, or how much of personal property. It may be fairly assumed from the seventh or residuary clause of the will, disposing of "all the rest, residue, and remainder of the testator's estate, real or personal," to the Roman Catholic bishop of Green Bay, Wis., "to be by him used for the benefit and behoof of the Roman Catholic Church," that the testator owned both real and personal estate, and that it was understood that there might be a residue or remainder of either real or personal estate not required for the payment of the legacies specified in the will. The will contemplates, as to the legacies therein named, that it should be executed in personality exclusively, and that any residue of real estate which it might not be necessary to sell in order to pay said legacies should pass under the residuary clause in the will. It was plainly the intent of the testator that, for the purpose of satisfying said legacies, his executor should convert, if need be, all his real estate into money. If the said provisions of the will are valid, the doctrine of equitable conversion would apply to the extent that the provisions of said will may be valid; and the court would deal with the estate as personality. Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 97, and 104; Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 399, 57 Am. Rep. 278. It will be seen upon an examination of the record that if a residue of realty remained unsold, the sale of which was not necessary for the payment of such bequests, the validity of the will as a devise of such realty will be determined by principles involved in the determination of the validity of the bequests above stated. All the contested provisions of the will are essentially trust provisions, and appear to be void for uncertainty, and wholly incapable of being executed by a court of equity by virtue of its judicial jurisdiction over private trusts. Unless they can be so executed, they must necessarily fail; for it is settled that the doctrine of cy près, as it existed in England, and as it has been applied in some of the states of the American Union (whereby trust provisions are administered and executed as near to the presumed intention of the donor or founder as may be), is not recognized or acted upon by the courts of this state as a part of the judicial power of the state. The doctrine rests upon a prerogative or sovereign power, is not strictly judicial in its nature, and consequently the courts of the state cannot exercise it. Fuller's Will, 75 Wis. 435; Heiss v. Murphey, 40 Wis. 276; Ruth v. Oberbrunner, 40 Wis. 238. We are of opinion that the trust provisions in question are void for uncertainty, in that no certain and competent beneficiaries are named who may come into a court, and claim and establish their right to the fund and to the execution of the trusts of the will; and no method has been prescribed or pointed out for the administration of the several funds or their application to the purposes of the supposed trusts. The testator has not fully defined his trust purposes, but has left them so indefinite that it is impossible for the court, in the exercise of its judicial functions, to administer them after the manner of private trusts, without, in substance, making a new will for the testator, or, at least, new and effective provisions to carry his supposed intentions into effect. Fuller's Will, 75 Wis. 435. In order that these trusts shall be sustained, they must be of such a clear and definite nature that the court can deal with them in the exercise of its ordinary judicial functions, and render them effective. Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 399, 57 Am. Rep. 278; Heiss v. Murphey, 40 Wis. 276; Hoffen's Estate, 70 Wis. 522. The position that the disputed trust provisions of this will are hopelessly indefinite and uncertain, for the reasons stated, is supported by very many recent and well-considered cases, and by arguments which we are compelled to regard as unanswerable. It was conceded by the learned counsel for the party seeking to maintain these several disputed provisions that, regarded as trusts, they must necessarily fail. That they are trust provisions, imposing active duties upon the trustee, does not, we think, upon a consideration of their terms, admit of doubt or question.

1. The bequest of $300 to the bishop of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, is "to be used by him for the benefit and behoof of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin." The Protestant Episcopal Church of the diocese of Fond du Lac is not, so far as we are advised, a body corporate or legal entity, capable in law of taking, claiming, or asserting any right in court to this fund, and could not, as against the personal representatives and distributees of the testator or donor, apply for and have it paid over. It consists, as we understand, of several churches or organizations, and there has been no selection or provision as to which of said churches, or what members of either of them, are to take or participate in the donor's bounty, or to what extent, nor has there been authority conferred on anyone to make such selection. In the absence of such provision, the court will be powerless to make any such selection without any plan or scheme, cy près, for the distribution of the funds.

2. The seventh or residuary clause of the will is of like character, and subject to similar infirmities. The property to be affected by this provision is "to be used" by the Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese of Green Bay, "for the benefit and behoof of the Roman Catholic Church." What church or body is thus designated or intended? Is it the Roman Catholic Church in any particular city, state, or diocese? Certainly, no such church is specified. Or does this designation include the Roman Catholic Church throughout the entire world? The difficulty—indeed, the utter impossibility—of dealing with and executing this provision as a valid trust is, we think, obvious and insuperable; and, within the authorities, this clause of the will must be regarded, for these reasons, as void and inoperative for any purpose, and utterly ineffective to pass any interest or estate whatever to the bishop of the Roman Catholic Church of the diocese of Green Bay. Manifestly, he could not take or derive thereunder any trust estate or interest which a court of equity could execute, protect, or enforce, for want of certain, competent, and definite beneficiaries of the trust. It is evident that no one of these trust provisions affecting the testator's real estate can be sustained under the statute in relation to uses and trusts. No one of them is for any one of the purposes specified in § 2081, Rev. Stat. [Sanborn & [B. Anno. Stat.], for which express trusts in real estate may be created; and neither of them is so framed that it can be sustained as being "for the beneficial interests of any person or persons, when such trust is fully expressed and clearly defined upon the face of the instrument creating it." Whatever residue, therefore, of real estate, may remain after satisfying the valid bequests of the will, is undisposed of by it, and must go to the heirs-at-law of the testator. Failing the bequests in the fifth and seventh clauses in the will, the purpose of the conversion of real estate into personalty ceases, except as to the valid bequests. The case in this respect falls within the general principle that a power of sale, however peremptory in form, does not operate as a conversion in aid of a particular purpose of the testator where the testator's plan or purpose fails by reason of illegality, lapse, or other cause. In such event an intention to convert realty into personalty will not be implied, and the property retains its original character, and goes to the heir or next of kin as real or personal estate, as the case may be. Read v. Williams, 125 N. Y. 571.

The bequest for the Catholic Orphan Asylum at Green Bay, Wisconsin, an incorporated body, was sustained, and is not in question on these appeals. That part of the judgment adjudging the bequest in the sixth clause of the will of $500, to the trustees of the Roman Catholic Church at Chilton, Calumet county, to wit, St. Augustine Church (to be used for the benefit of said church, and in repairing the same), void, does not appear to have been appealed from, and its validity is not now in question.

The trust provision in the fifth paragraph of the will, bequeathing $3,650, to be used and applied for masses as therein specified, is also void, for the reason that there is no beneficiary or beneficiaries of the trust who may come into equity and enforce performance. It is evident that such a trust is not capable of execution, and no court could take cognizance of any question in respect to it for want of a competent party to raise and litigate any question of abuse or perversion of the trust. Although the testator has used language ordinarily used for the declaration of a trust, it is argued that the court cannot impute to him the intention of creating a trust simply for the sake of subsequently condemning it. It is the duty of the court to declare the construction and meaning of this clause of the will, and then to determine whether it is in conformity with the law. Where the language is plain and unambiguous, we are not permitted to wrest it from its natural import, in order to save a provision from condemnation. Cottman v. Grace, 112 N. Y. 309, 3 L. R. A. 145. The court is still bound to give judgment upon the essential character of the instrument, according to its true legal effect and meaning. In Ford v. Ford, 70 Wis. 21, a trust was held to exist under the provisions of a will as a matter of construction, and yet the court declared it void as to a part of the property affected by it. It is a well-settled rule that, where a trust fails for indefiniteness or uncertainty, the representatives or distributees of the donor will prevail over the claimant under the trust. Levy v. Levy, 33 N. Y. 107; Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 313. In the case last cited, the will of G. bequeathed his residuary estate, which consisted exclusively of personalty, to his executors, in trust for the purposes expressed therein, as follows: "To be applied by them for the purpose of having prayers offered in a Roman Catholic Church, to be by them selected, for the repose of my soul and the souls of my family, and also the souls of all others who may be in purgatory." It was held that the trust so attempted to be created was invalid; and that, as to such residuary estate, the testator died intestate, and the next of kin of the testator were entitled thereto, as there was no beneficiary in existence, or to come into existence, who was interested in or who could demand the execution of the trust. In Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 313, it was said that "when a trust is attempted to be created without any beneficiary entitled to demand its enforcement, the trustee would, if the trust property were in his possession, have the power to hold it to his own use, without accountability to anyone and contrary to the intention of the donor, but for the principle that in such a case a resulting trust attaches in favor of whoever would, but for the alleged trust, be equitably entitled to the property. This equitable title cannot on any sound principle be made to depend upon the exercise by the trustee of an election whether he will or will not execute the alleged trust. In such a case there is no 'trust' in the sense in which the term is used in jurisprudence. There is simply an honorary and imperfect obligation to carry out the wishes of the donor which the alleged trustee cannot be compelled to perform and which he has no right to perform, contrary to the wishes of those legally or equitably entitled to the property, or who have succeeded to the title of the original donor. The existence of a valid trust capable of enforcement is consequently essential to enable one claiming to hold as trustee to withhold the property from the legal representatives of the alleged donor. A merely nominal trust in the performance of which no ascertainable person has any interest, and which is to be performed or not as the person to whom the money is given thinks fit, has never been held to be sufficient for that purpose." In Levy v. Levy, 33 N. Y. 107, Wright, J., said that, "if there is a single postulate of the common law established by an unbroken line of decision, it is that a trust without a certain beneficiary who can claim its enforcement, is void." Priehard v. Thompson, 95 N. Y. 76, 47 Am. Rep. 9. And in Fodick v. Hempstead, 125 N. Y. 589, 11 L. R. A. 715, it was held that, to constitute a valid testamentary trust, there must be a defined beneficiary either named or capable of being ascertained, within the rules of law applicable in such cases. The beneficiaries, under these disputed trust provisions, are neither named nor capable of being ascertained, within the rules of law applicable to such cases. The elaborate decision in the case of Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312, would seem to be decisive of the trust for masses; nor is it supported by the case of Power v. Cassidy, 79 N. Y. 602, 35 Am. Rep. 550, as explained in People v. Powers, 147 N. Y. 104, 35 L. R. A. 502. In Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312, it was contended that the disposition in question contained all the elements of a valid trust of personal property; that there were definite and competent trustees; that the purpose of the trust was lawful, and it was sufficiently defined to be capable of being enforced by a court of equity, as the court could decree the payment of the legacies for the purposes directed by the will. But to this contention the court responded that, if all this should be conceded, there is still one more important element lacking. There is no beneficiary in existence, or to come into existence, who is interested in or can demand the execution of the trust. No defined or ascertainable living person has, or ever can have, any temporal interest in its performance; nor is any incorporated church designated, so as to entitle it to claim any portion of the fund. The absence of a defined beneficiary is, as a general rule, a fatal objection to any attempt to create a valid trust. In Read v. Williams, 125 N. Y. 560, the bequest was to such charitable institutions and in such proportions as the executors, by and with the advice of the testatrix's friend, Rev. John Hall, D. D., should choose and designate. After the death of the testatrix, the executors, with the advice and approval of Dr. Hall, made a written designation of certain incorporated charitable institutions; but it was held, under the language used, a charitable institution was not capable of taking, and that it was not such a trust as could be carried into execution by the court; and it was therefore held void. In Fordick v. Hempstead the bequest was to the town, to keep as a fund for the support of the poor of the town; and it was held that the bequest was indefinite and invalid, for the want of an ascertained beneficiary, the "poor of the town" being too general; and it was said that, applying the rule to these cases, it appears that the conclusion is inevitable that the trust attempted to be created is unenforceable, for the reason of a failure to designate the beneficiary, or to designate or describe a class or kind of beneficiary, to whom distribution is practicable, or that could with reasonable certainty be identified and ascertained. These considerations and authorities sustain as well the proposition that the residuary clause of the will relied on is clearly invalid and inoperative.

3. In support of the cross appeal of the executor from so much of the judgment as declares that part of the fifth paragraph of the will bequeathing $3,650, to be used and applied for masses as therein specified, void for indefiniteness and uncertainty, it was contended that this provision was not in fact valid as a trust, but that it was a valid bequest of that sum personally to the bishop of the diocese, and that there was no limitation of this bequest in his hands; that it was his to use and enjoy as he chose; that he might burn it up the moment received, and his doing so would not impair in any degree his ability to execute the testator's wish; that it was not named as a consideration for the masses; and that the bishop could as well perform the service without as with it. It was also contended "that this gift was absolute to the church." We know of no legal reason why any person of the Catholic faith, believing in the efficacy of masses, may not make a direct gift or bequest to any bishop or priest of any sum out of his property or estate for masses for the repose of his soul or the souls of others, as he may choose. Such gifts or bequests, when made in clear, direct, and legal form, should be upheld; and they are not to be considered as impeachable or invalid, under the rule that prevailed in England, by which they were there held void, as gifts to superstitious uses. No such rule or principle obtains here. Had the testator made a plain, direct bequest of the sum in question to Bishop Messmer, or to any bishop or priest, for masses for the repose of the souls of the persons named in his will in that behalf, it would certainly be our duty to declare it valid, and give full effect to it. It is a matter of regret when a will or other disposition of property is so framed that effect cannot be legally given to what may well be supposed to have been the intention of the testator or donor; but the law, for wise and just reasons of public policy, has established rules and has made provisions in these respects that may not be disregarded. The true interests of society are best subserved in all such cases by faithfully following the law made to regulate and protect the interests of all alike; and it is the duty of courts in all such cases to adhere to it, and uphold its salutary provisions and principles. As has already been said, we are clearly of the opinion that the fifth clause of the will is essentially a trust provision. There is no foundation in the language used for the contention that this clause operates as a bequest in favor of any church or person. We are to give full force and effect to the language of the testator, and this, in the strongest and clearest terms, excludes the contention of the counsel for the bishop. It does not give or bequeath to S. G. Messmer, in his personal right or individual capacity, any sum whatever for masses or other purpose. The position of the parties and the relations between them seem to repel any such intention to bestow the sum named as a personal bequest. The express language of the will is that it is given "to be used and applied as follows: For masses for the repose of," etc. This language is the proper and appropriate language quite universally used to create trust provisions of an active character in wills and other instruments. It excludes the idea of personal interest on the part of the donee of the fund, or any authority to make a personal use and application of it. It would be a most unwarranted construction, we think, to place upon this provision, to hold that language imposing a mere matter of duty—to use and apply a fund for a particular purpose—should operate by way of gift to the person upon whom the instrument imposed the duty. The bequest is not to any church, nor to Bishop Messmer. It was not designed to include him personally, because it could not be known that upon the occurrence of the death of the testator, by which the will would become operative, he would be bishop, so as to answer the description in the will. A similar contention—whether a trust provision, invalid as such, might be considered a direct bequest—was decided in Festorazzi v. St. Joseph Roman Catholic Church, 25 L. R. A. 360, 104 Ala. 327, and in the note to which the cases bearing upon this question appear to have been fully collected. The clauses of the will there in question were substantially the same as in the case at bar: "I give and bequeath to the Roman Catholic Cathedral in the city of Mobile the sum of $3,000, the same to be used in solemn masses for the repose of my soul;" and, "I give and bequeath to the Roman Catholic Church of St. Joseph in the city of Mobile the sum of $2,000, also to be used in solemn masses for the repose of my soul." And it was held that the provisions could not be considered a direct bequest to the church for its general use, and that the form of the bequest repelled the idea that a gift to the church for its general use was intended. The court said: "The bequest is to the church, 'to be used in solemn masses for the repose of my soul.' Similar bequests have been many times before the courts in England and this country, and in all the cases, so far as our research extends, they were treated as having the form and nature of the declaration of a use or trust, and not as direct gifts to, and for the general uses of, the church. An application of the fund to other uses than securing masses to be said for the repose of the donor's soul would contravene the intent and purpose of the testator;" that the authorities, whether English or American, are potent to show that they partake of the nature of trusts, and cannot be treated as gifts to the churches themselves. And it was said that the trust was not valid as a private trust, for the want of a living beneficiary; that a trust in form of which no one could enjoy or enforce the use is no trust, and that argument was unnecessary to show that there was no imaginable being possessing power to enforce the use declared in the bequest; that the executor could not, because he succeeds only to the right of the testator; and if the church should receive this bequest, and apply it to paying its debts or supporting its priests, the purpose would be clearly violated. But what living person is authorized to call the trustee to account for the misuse of the fund? If a trust for a specific purpose fails by the failure of the purpose, the property reverts to the donor or his heirs; and if the gift is made upon a trust insufficiently or ineffectually declared, as if it is too indefinite, vague, and uncertain to be carried into effect, the gift will revert to the settler, his heirs or representatives. And it seems to be well settled that, where a gift is made upon trusts that are void in whole or in part for illegality, a trust will result to the donor, his heirs or legal representatives, if the property is not otherwise disposed of; and the donee will take in trust for the donor or his heirs or representatives. The case of Rhymer's Appeal, 93 Pa. 142-145, 39 Am. Rep. 736, is an authority to show that the provision in question was a trust provision, and not a bequest by which the parties named were intended to take beneficially. We hold that the disputed trust provisions of the will of the testator are void trusts, and are not valid personal bequests.

It follows from these views that so much of the judgment appealed from by the plaintiffs as adjudges that the deceased, Owen McHugh, disposed of $300 of his estate to the defendant C. C. Grafton, Protestant Episcopal bishop of Fond du Lac, and so much thereof as orders and adjudges that the rest, residue, and remainder of the estate of said deceased be assigned to S. G. Messmer, Roman Catholic bishop of Green Bay, for the benefit and behoof of the Roman Catholic Church of said diocese, be reversed; and that so much of the judgment appealed from by Patrick McCole, executor of the deceased, declaring that part of the fifth paragraph of the will of the testator bequeathing $3,650, to be used for masses as therein specified, void for indefiniteness and uncertainty, be affirmed. The costs of the respective parties, to be allowed and adjusted by the judge of the county court, are to be paid out of the estate of the testator. It is ordered accordingly.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

James F. K. HOEFFER et al., Appts., v.

Patrick CLOGAN et al.

(171 Ill. 482.)

- 1. Trustees representing a religious society to which a devise was made in trust to expend the proceeds in saying masses are proper parties to appeal from a decision against the devise.
- 2. A devise and bequest to a church in trust to expend the proceeds in saying masses for the repose of the souls of certain persons is not void as a mere private trust, but is a valid, charitable gift, aiding to support the clergy and public worship, as it is presumed that the masses will be said in public.
- 3. A trustee or trustees will be appointed by the court to take gifts and apply them to the purposes of the trust, when necessary to prevent the failure thereof.

(February 14, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendants Hoeffer et al. from a decree of the Circuit Court for Cook County declaring void certain bequests in the will of Andrew Clogan, deceased. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William Dillon for appellants.

Messrs. A. J. Redmond and Avery R. Hayes for appellees.

Cartwright, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Andrew Clogan, of Chicago, died June 6, 1892, leaving a last will and testament, which was admitted to probate, and letters testamentary were issued to the executor, James Clogan. The fourth and fifth clauses of the will are as follows: "Fourth, I give and devise unto the Holy Family Church (on West Twelfth street), its successors and assigns, lot † NOTE.—See note to cases preceding.

56 in Sharp & Smith's subdivision of block 42, in the Canal Trustees' subdivision of the west one half (W. $\frac{1}{2}$) of the west one half (W. $\frac{1}{4}$) of the northeast quarter (N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$) of section seventeen (17), town thirty-nine (39), north, range fourteen (14) east of the third principal meridian, in Chicago, Cook county, Illinois, together with the building and improvements thereon, in trust for the following purposes: To sell the same, and expend the proceeds of said sale in saying masses for the repose of my soul, and the souls of my deceased wife, Margaret Clogan, my mother-in-law, Ellen Hurley, and my brother-in-law, James Hurley. Fifth, I give and bequeath unto the Holy Family Church (on West Twelfth street), the sum of \$1,000, in trust to be expended in saying masses for the repose of my soul and the soul of my deceased father, Patrick Clogan, mother, Julia Clogan, and sister, Margaret Clogan." By the will the testator also directed the expenditure of \$250 in erecting a monument on his lot in Calvary Cemetery, bequeathed \$500 to his sister Mary Daly, and devised certain real estate to his brother, Patrick Clogan, and his nephew, the executor, James Clogan, and by the seventh clause said James Clogan was made residuary devisee. On March 17, 1896, said Patrick Clogan purchased from said James Clogan all his interest as residuary devisee in the property mentioned in the fourth clause of the will, and afterwards filed the bill in this case, alleging the above facts, and averring that there was no society or corporation in Chicago, on West Twelfth street, known as the Holy Family Church, but that there was an unincorporated religious society known as the Holy Family Parish, which had a church on West Twelfth street, and that the title to said church was in the appellants, clergymen, who are, respectively, rector, assistant rector, and treasurer of said Holy Family Parish, and their successors, as such, in trust for the purposes of the Society of Jesus, including the maintenance of the church for the benefit of the Holy Family Parish. The Holy Family Church, James Clogan, in his own right and as executor, Mary Daly and appellants were made defendants. The prayer of the bill was that the will should be construed, and the validity of the devise and bequest to be expended in saying masses for the repose of souls should be determined. James Clogan and Mary Daly answered, admitting the allegations of the bill. The amended answer of appellants admitted the facts alleged in the bill, and averred that the church referred to therein was commonly known as the Holy Family Church, and was the only one in Chicago of that name; that the mass was a solemn act of worship according to the belief and practice of the Roman Catholic Church; that mass was celebrated several times each day at the said Holy Family Church, and that whenever mass was so celebrated the doors of the church were open, and such of the public as might desire to worship at such celebration of mass were admitted to do so. The cause was heard on the bill and answers so filed, and the court decreed the fourth and fifth clauses of the will null and void; that the title to the lot therein described was vested in Patrick Clogan, as grantee of the residuary devisee; and that the \$1,000 mentioned in the fifth clause should be paid to the residuary legatee, James Clogan, in due course of administration. An appeal to this court was prayed by appellants and allowed by the court.

Appellee Patrick Clogan has moved to dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction, and because appellants have no interest in the cause. The purpose of the bill was to settle the question whether the fee-simple title to the lot described in the fourth clause of the will passed under that clause, or whether the attempted devise was void, and the title passed to the residuary devisee under the seventh clause. The decree of the circuit court held the devise of the freehold by the fourth clause void, and established title in Patrick Clogan. A freehold is involved in the appeal from that decree. Appellants are the officers of the Holy Family Parish, and trustees representing the religious society to which the devise was made. They were made defendants to the bill as representing such society, and their official relation to the parish and church makes them proper parties to represent it in the question of the true construction of the will, and the validity of the devise and bequest. The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

The devise and bequest were made to the Holy Family Church, in trust for a specific purpose, which was that the church expend the proceeds of the sale of the real estate and the amount of the bequests in masses for the repose of the souls of the persons named. They were not intended as gifts to the church for its general uses, and any other application than that specified in the will would contravene the purpose of the testator. This being so, it is claimed that the trust is void, because it is a private trust, with the souls of particular deceased persons as beneficiaries, none of whom can come into court and call the trustees to account or enforce its execution, and also for want of a trustee capable of taking legal title to the property. On the other hand, it is claimed that the devise and legacy are for a charitable use, within the meaning and spirit of the doctrine on that subject, and if this position is correct, the rules of law which would invalidate them as an express private trust will not affect their validity. The doctrine of charitable uses has been repeatedly held to be a part of the law of this state. The equitable jurisdiction over such trusts was not derived from the statute of charitable uses (43 Eliz. chap. 4), but prior to and independent of that statute charities were sustained, irrespective of indefiniteness of the beneficiaries, or the lack of trustees, or the fact that the trustees appointed were not competent to take (Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. 127, 11 L. ed. 205; Heuser v. Harris, 42 Ill. 425). The statute, however, became a part of the common law of this state. Heuser v. Harris, 42 Ill. 425; Andrews v. Andrews, 110 Ill. 223; Hunt v. Fowler, 121 Ill. 269. The statute of charitable uses of Elizabeth has, since its passage, been considered as showing the general spirit and intent of the term "charitable," and the objects which come within such general spirit and intent are to be so regarded. The definition given by Mr. Justice Gray in the case of Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, 539, was adopted and approved by this court in the case of Crerar v. Williams, 145 Ill. 625, 21 L. R. A. 454. It is as follows: "A charity, in a legal sense, may be more fully defined as a gift, to be applied consistently with existing laws, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves for life, or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works, or otherwise lessening the burdens of government. It is immaterial whether the purpose is called charitable in the gift itself, if it is so described as to show that it is charitable in its nature." Any trust coming within this definition for the benefit of an indefinite class of persons sufficiently designated to indicate the intention of the donor, and constituting some portion or class of the public, is a charitable trust. Among such objects are the support and propagation of religion, and the maintenance of religious services (Andrews v. Andrews, 110 Ill. 223), to pay the expense of preaching and salary of rectors (Alden v. St. Peter's Parish, 158 Ill. 631, 30 L. R. A. 232), or the preaching of an annual sermon in memory of the testator (Duror v. Motteux, 1 Ves. Sr. 320). The doctrine of superstitious uses arising from the statute (1 Edw. VI. chap. 14), under which devises for procuring masses were held to be void, is of no force in this state, and has never obtained in the United States. In this country there is absolute religious equality, and no discrimination, in law, is made between different religious creeds or forms of worship. It cannot be denied that bequests for the general advancement of the Roman Catholic religion, the support of its forms of worship, or the benefit of its clergy, are charitable, equally with those for the support or propagation of any other form of religious belief or worship. The nature of the mass, like preaching, prayer, the communion, and other forms of worship, is well understood. It is intended as a repetition of the sacrifice on the cross, Christ offering Himself again through the hands of the priest, and asking pardon for sinners as He did on the cross; and it is the chief and central act of worship in the Roman Catholic Church. It is a public and external form of worship,—a ceremonial which constitutes a visible action. It may be said for any special purpose, but from a liturgical point of view every mass is practically the same. The Roman Catholic Church believes that Christians who leave this world without having sufficiently expiated their sins are obliged to suffer a temporary penalty in the other, and among the special purposes for which masses may be said is the remission of this penalty. A bequest for which special purpose merely adds a particular remembrance to the mass, and does not, in our opinion, change the character of the religious service, and render it a mere private benefit. While the testator may have a belief that it will benefit his soul or the souls of others doing penance for their sins, it is also a benefit to all others who may attend or participate in it. An act of public worship would certainly not be deprived of that character because it was also a special memorial of some person, or because special prayers should be included in the services for particular persons. Memorial services are often held in churches, but they are not less public acts of worship because of their memorial character; and in Duror v. Motteux, supra, the trust for the preaching of an annual sermon in memory of the testator was held to be a charitable use. The mere fact that the bequest was given with the intention of obtaining some benefit, or from some personal motive, does not rob it of its character as charitable. The masses said in the Holy Family Church were public, and the presumption would be that the public would be admitted, the same as at any other act of worship of any other Christian sect. The bequest is not only for an act of religious worship, but it is an aid to the support of the clergy. Although the money paid is not regarded as a purchase of the mass, yet it is retained by the clergy, and, of course, aids in the maintenance of the priesthood.

40 L. R. A.

In the case of Schouler. Petitioner, 134 Mass. 426, it was held that a bequest of money for masses was a good, charitable bequest of the testatrix, and the court said: "Masses are religious ceremonials or observances of the church of which she was a member, and come within the religious or pious uses which are upheld as public charities." So, in Pennsylvania, it has been held that a bequest to be expended in masses for the repose of souls is a religious or charitable bequest under the statute. Rhymer's Appeal, 93 Pa. 142, 39 Am. Rep. 736; Seibert's Appeal, 18 W. N. C. 276. A recent case, decided in the Irish courts January 24, 1897, is Atty. Gen. v. Hall. It was held unanimously, both in the exchequer and the court of appeals, that a bequest for saying masses for the soul of a deceased person was a good charitable bequest. In New York and Wisconsin it has been held that a trust of this character is void for the want of a definite beneficiary to enforce its execution. Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312; McHugh v. McCole, ante, 724. But the decisions in those states are readily distinguishable from the rule in this state. In New York charitable uses were abolished by legislation, and in all valid trusts there must be a definite and certain beneficiary to take the equitable title, unless the act of 1893, which is said to have resulted from the decision in Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 29, 14 L. R. A. 33, has enlarged or relaxed the rule as to a definite beneficiary. In Wisconsin all trusts are abolished by statute, except certain specific trusts, where there is certainty in the beneficiaries, and in that state bequests have been held to be void which have been uniformly sustained in this court as for charitable purposes. The decision in McHugh v. McCole, ante, 724, was upon the ground that the doctrine of charitable uses was not in force in that state, and that a trust, to be sustained, must be of a clear and definite nature, and the beneficiary interest to every person therein must be fully expressed and clearly defined upon the face of the instrument. The will in that case gave a certain sum of money to the Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese of Green Bay, Wisconsin, to be used and applied in specified amounts for masses for the repose of testator's soul and the souls of certain named persons. It was held invalid solely on the ground that the provision amounted to a trust which, under the statutes of that state, was invalid. It was said that, if the testator had made a direct bequest of the sum in question to Bishop Messmer, or to any bishop or priest, for masses for the repose of the souls of persons named in his will, it would be valid, and the court said: "We know of no legal reason why any person of the Catholic faith, believing in the efficacy of masses, may not make a direct gift or bequest to any bishop or priest of any sum out of his property or estate for masses for the repose of his soul or the souls of others, as he may choose." The court expressed regret that the intention of the testator could not be given effect because he had put it in the form of a trust provision. So, also, in New York it has been held in several cases that a bequest to a named priest for the saying of masses for the repose of the souls of specified persons is valid. Ruppel v. Schlegel, 55 Hun, 188; Howard's Estate, 5 Misc. 295; Vanderveer v. McKane, 25 Abb. N. C. 105. The case of Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 25 L. R. A. 880, holds that a bequest to that church in the city of Mobile, to be used in solemn mass for the repose of testator's soul, could not be supported as a charitable bequest.

The decision seems to be on the ground that the testator's own soul was the exclusive object and beneficiary of the trust, and that no public benefit was to be derived from it, and no living person was able to call the trustee to account. We are not able to agree with the conclusion that there is no benefit to the church or public in such case, and, as we have seen, the ceremonial of the mass is a public action, which can be seen and taken cognizance of, so that there is no more difficulty in procuring a mass to be said than there is in securing the public delivery of a sermon or a lecture. A bequest for the erection of a public statue or monument to a distinguished person is a good charitable bequest, and yet such person, if deceased, could not enforce its execution, but the courts could and would do it. We think the devise and legacy charitable, and a rule applicable to trusts is that they will not be allowed to fail for want of a competent trustee. The court will appoint a trustee or trustees, to take the gifts and apply them to the purposes of the trust. Heuser v. Harris, 42 Ill. 425.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to proceed in conformity with the views herein expressed.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Eva ARON, Appt.,
v.
City of WAUSAU, Respt.
(.....Wis.....)

1. A demurrer admits issuable facts alleged in the complaint, and not mere conclusions of law from such facts.
2. It is of common knowledge that, in a city, crowds assemble in the streets and on the sidewalks on the 4th of July, and explode fire-crackers and cannon crackers and other combustible materials.
3. A person injured by the explosion of a cannon cracker on a city street on the 4th of July in violation of an ordinance, while persons assembled there are exploding fire-crackers without any common purpose to injure anyone, cannot recover from the city for the damages under Sanb. & B. Anno. Stat. § 938, making a city liable for injury done by a mob or a riot, and under Rev. Stat. § 4511, providing that three or more persons shall be guilty of a riot if they assemble in a violent or tumultuous manner to do an unlawful act, or, being together, attempt to act in a violent, unlawful, or tumultuous manner.

(March 1, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Circuit Court for Marathon County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by an unlawful assemblage negligently permitted by defendant. Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to the liability of a city for fireworks, see note to Scanlon v. Wedger (Mass.) 16 L. R. A. 306; Fifield v. Phoenix (Ariz.) 24 L. R. A. 430.
40 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Silverthorn, Hurley, Ryan, & Jones, for appellant:

The common purpose of the crowd was to do acts which were in violation of law and in disturbance of the public peace by exciting fear, alarm, and consternation among the people. Such common purpose is unmistakably implied by the conduct of the crowd, and the riot consisted in actually carrying out that purpose.

Bonnerville v. State, 53 Wis. 680; State v. Snow, 18 Me. 346; Solomon v. Kingston, 24 Hun, 562; State v. Straw, 33 Me. 554; State v. Boies, 34 Me. 235; Higgins v. Minaghan, 78 Wis. 602, 11 L. R. A. 138; Palmer v. Concord, 48 N. H. 211, 97 Am. Dec. 605; Allegheny County v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 397, 35 Am. Dec. 670; Gianfortone v. New Orleans (C. C. E. D. La.) 24 L. R. A. 592, and annotations; 22 Enc. Brit. p. 564, note.

Messrs. Mylrea, Marchette, & Bird, for respondent:

The statutes generally were intended to provide compensation for damages resulting from local insurrections and disturbances, popular uprisings and excesses, beyond the control of local authorities, evidencing an intention of the populace to take the law into their own hands, and exceeding ordinary violations of law, breaches of the peace, etc. It is to such occurrences that similar statutes have been applied.

Allegheny County v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 397, 35 Am. Rep. 670; Gianfortone v. New Orleans, 61 Fed. Rep. 64, 24 L. R. A. 592, and cases in note.

The obvious intention of the legislature in the light of the result intended must govern.

Haentze v. Howe, 28 Wis. 298; Duryea v. New York, 10 Daly, 300.

The word "unlawful" must be construed in connection with the other adjectives used, otherwise any breach of the peace, or assault by three or more persons, would be a riot. These words were intended as synonyms, the better to express the real meaning.

Bonnerille v. State, 53 Wis. 680.

The complaint alleges the conclusion of law that the acts were done in a "violent, unlawful, and tumultuous manner, to the terror and disturbance of others," but as no facts are pleaded to justify the conclusion it must go for naught.

Stedman v. Berlin (Wis.) 73 N. W. 57, 60.

An essential element of this crime is "some sort of resistance to lawful authority."

Queen v. Hunt, 1 Cox, C. C. 177; 1 Hawk. P. C. chap. 28, § 4, p. 518; 4 Stephen, Com. 9th ed. 215; 2 Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 7th ed. 901; United States v. Peaco, 4 Cranch, C. C. 601; Duryea v. New York, 10 Daly, 300.

Cassoday, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint upon the ground of insufficiency. Of course the demurrer admits the issuable facts alleged in the complaint, but does not admit mere conclusions of law from the facts so alleged. Pratt v. Lincoln County, 61 Wis. 62; Williams v. Williams, 63 Wis. 72, 53 Am. Rep. 253; Stone v. Oconomowoc, 71 Wis. 159; Brown v. Phillips, 71 Wis. 239; Palmer v. Hawes, 73 Wis. 50; Meggett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 329; Peake v. Buell, 90 Wis. 508. The issuable facts so alleged and admitted are to the effect that July 4, 1896, between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening, the sidewalk along the west side of Third street, and in and along Third street, between Scott street and McClellan street, in Wausau, was occupied by a crowd of thirty or more persons, then and there being and blocking up and obstructing the sidewalk and street, and unlawfully hindering and preventing the plaintiff and others from freely passing along the sidewalk and street, and unnecessarily and unlawfully, and contrary to the city ordinance and the statutes, engaged in exploding, and who did unnecessarily and unlawfully explode, firecrackers and other fireworks, and did unnecessarily and unlawfully throw in the street squibs and other articles containing powder and other explosives, such as giant powder, dynamite, nitro-glycerine, and gun cotton inclosed in strong, heavy pasteboard and strong paper with cement, constituting what is called and known as "cannon crackers" or "American firecrackers,"—in fact, dynamite bombs,—which were dangerous to human life and safety, unless handled with extreme care: that such explosions took place without restraint, in a violent, unlawful, and tumultuous manner, to the terror and disturbance of others and this plaintiff; that while this plaintiff, an unmarried woman, was riding with her brother, in a one-horse buggy, in a quiet manner, at the time and place mentioned, among the persons so assembled without knowing of the danger, and without any negligence on her part, she was struck upon her head and face by one of the cannon crackers or explosive articles or bombs thrown and exploded by someone in the crowd, to the plaintiff unknown, and severely injured by wholly destroying one of her eyes, and greatly impairing her other eye, to her damage in the sum of $20,000, for which she prayed judgment. Thus stripped of allegations and conclusions of law, and of arguments and exaggerations, the facts alleged in the complaint are few and simple. The city contained more than 10,000 inhabitants. It is of common knowledge that, in such a city, crowds assemble in the streets and on the sidewalks on the 4th of July, and explode firecrackers, cannon crackers, and other combustible materials. In the instant case the explosion was violent and in a tumultuous manner, to the terror of the plaintiff and others. The unknown person who so recklessly threw and exploded the cannon cracker which so cruelly injured the plaintiff is not a party to this action, and, of course, his liability is not before us for consideration. The only question here for consideration, upon the merits, is whether the city is liable. The explosion was in violation of an ordinance of the city, which, by its terms, the mayor and common council had power to suspend on the 4th of July, but which had not been suspended. The complaint alleged that the crowd was an unlawful assemblage,—a riot and a mob,—and in violation, not only of the ordinance, but of the statute. The statute gives a remedy against the city for any bodily harm or injury sustained in consequence of any mob or riot, by any person not implicated therein, and whose act or negligence in no way contributed thereto. Sanborn & Berryman, Anno. Stat. § 938. The statute also provides that "any three or more persons, who shall assemble in a violent or tumultuous manner to do an unlawful act, or, being together, shall make any attempt or motion towards doing a lawful or unlawful act, in a violent, unlawful, or tumultuous manner, to the terror or disturbance of others, shall be deemed an unlawful assembly; and if they commit such acts in the manner and with the effect aforesaid, they shall be deemed guilty of a riot." Rev. Stat. § 4511. It will be observed that the "three or more persons" must be so assembled "to do an unlawful act," or being so assembled, shall attempt to do "a lawful or unlawful act, in a violent, unlawful, or tumultuous manner, to the terror or disturbance of others," in order to constitute an unlawful assembly; and then, "if they commit such acts in the manner and with the effect aforesaid, they shall be deemed guilty of a riot." In other words, to constitute such unlawful assembly, the three or more persons must have a common purpose to do the act complained of, and, if they commit such act with such common purpose or intent, then they are to be deemed guilty of a riot. A distinguished text-writer, adopting the defini-dition taken from the Draft Report of the English Commissioners of 1879, says: "An unlawful assembly is an assembly of three or more persons who, with intent to carry out any common purpose, assemble, in such a manner, or so conduct themselves when assembled, as to cause persons in the neighborhood of such assembly to fear on reasonable grounds that the persons so assembled will disturb the peace tumultuously, or will by such assembly needlessly and without any reasonable occasion provoke other persons to disturb the peace tumultuously." 2 Whart. Crim. L. 10th ed. § 1535. "A riot is the tumultuous disturbance of the public peace by an unlawful assembly of three or more persons in the execution of some private object. . . . If it be to resist a statute, but not to overthrow government, then, in the United States, . . .

the offense is not treason, though it may be riot or a high misdemeanor." Id. § 1537. There is nothing in the complaint to indicate that the crowd in the street, or on the sidewalk, or any three or more persons in the crowd, had any common intent or purpose to injure the plaintiff or any other person by the explosion of the cannon cracker in question. It was thrown and exploded by someone unknown to the plaintiff. Others were throwing and exploding firecrackers, but each person was, apparently, the sole manipulator of his own firecracker, and there was no common intent or purpose, of any three or more persons, to explode any particular firecracker, much less to injure the plaintiff or any other person by such explosion. It is equally apparent that it was not a mob.

The order of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

John DOLAN

r.

Patrick HUGHES,

Riverside Worsted Mills, Garnishee.

(.....R. I.....)

1. Fraud in an assignment of wages by a debtor is not shown by the fact that the assignee never drew the wages, but they were drawn on his orders by the assignor, and immediately paid over to him.

2. An assignment of wages for the period of one year, made by a person then working under a contract, whether it was for work by the day, by the week, or otherwise, is valid, under Gen. Laws, chap. 254, § 28, when made and recorded as the statute provides.

(May 5, 1898.)

EXCEPTIONS to rulings of the Court of Common Pleas for Providence County charging the garnishee for wages alleged to be due the defendant in a proceeding to collect money alleged to be due by defendant to plaintiff. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William C. Barry, for defendant:

The assignment of defendant's wages to the assignee for the space of one year was valid and in accordance with § 28, chap. 254, Gen. Laws.

Thayer v. Kelley, 28 Vt. 19, 65 Am. Dec. 220; Tiernay v. McGarity, 14 R. I. 231; Kennedy v. Tiernay, 14 R. I. 528; Hartley v. Tapley, 2 Gray, 565; Brackett v. Blake, 7 Met. 335, 41 Am. Dec. 442; Emery v. Lawrence, 8 Cush. 151; Chase v. Duby, 20 R. I. —.

The title to future earnings belonged of right to assignee, and his delegating another, even the defendant, to obtain said wages, was not of itself fraudulent, as the said assignee might for convenience, or any other way best suited to himself, secure another to obtain same.

Privity of contract and interest must in general combine to justify charging the garnishee. Drake, Attachm. § 612.

Mr. C. Slocum Smith for plaintiff.

Tillinghast, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is before us on exceptions to the rulings of the common pleas division whereby the Riverside Woolen Mills was charged as garnishee. The record shows that the defendant was in the employ of said Riverside Mills at the time of the attachment of his wages, on November 5, 1897, and that the sum of $13.02 of his earnings was then in its hands. It also shows that prior to said attachment, viz., on the 24th day of November, 1896, the defendant for a valuable consideration, had assigned his wages to one John F. Fogarty for the period of one year, and that said assignment was duly recorded; that at the time of the making of the assignment the defendant was indebted to said Fogarty, and continued to be, and still is, indebted to him, for groceries and other necessities furnished to him and his family; and that he was so indebted at the time of the service of the writ in this case. It further appears that said Fogarty, assignee, never personally drew the defendant's wages, but that the same were drawn by the defendant upon orders given by the assignee for that purpose, and that all of the moneys so collected were immediately paid over by the defendant to the assignee. In view of these facts, the common pleas division held that, as the assignee did not personally draw the defendant's wages, but permitted the defendant to draw the same, the assignment was fraudulent and void. The court also held that, there being no evidence of any time contract between the defendant and the garnishee, the defendant is presumed to have been hired by the day, and hence had nothing assignable to set over to the claimant.

NOTE.—As to the assignment of future earnings, see also Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Robinson (Iowa) 14 L. R. A. 128, and note.

We think the court erred in its decision. The mere fact that the wages were drawn or collected by the defendant in the manner aforesaid, did not, in our opinion, render the assignment fraudulent and void. In thus drawing his wages the defendant was simply acting as the agent or messenger of the assignee. That the latter could have authorized any other person than the defendant to draw the wages for him will not be questioned. Why could he not as well confer this power on the defendant as upon any other person? If it be answered that to do so would furnish opportunity for fraud, as between the assignor and assignee, by enabling a debtor to prevent other creditors from attaching the money, we reply that while this may be so, and while we might perhaps be inclined to hold that, where the assignor is allowed to draw wages thus assigned without explanation as to the disposition thereof, it would afford prima facie evidence of collusion and fraud, yet when it appears, as it does in this case, that the wages drawn by the assignor were immediately and fully paid over to the assignee, we fail to see that fraud can properly be inferred. The presumption of law is in favor of the validity of the assignment and of the good faith of the transactions thereunder, and they must be proved to have been fraudulently made before the court can decide against them. Johnson v. Thayer, 17 Me. 408; Adams v. Robinson, 1 Pick. 561; Drake, Attachm. § 615; Shinn, Attachm. § 114. The case is different from that of Hickey v. Ryan, 19 R. I. 399, cited by plaintiff, where it appeared that the assignee returned to the defendant about one half of the wages earned by him each week, which conduct was held to be fraudulent, as against other creditors.

As to the second ground upon which the common pleas division held that the assignment was invalid, we are of opinion that it is not tenable. R. I. Gen. Laws, chap. 254, § 28, recognizes the validity of an assignment of future earnings when made and recorded in accordance therewith, and this court has repeatedly held such an assignment to be good. Tiernay v. McGarity, 14 R. I. 231; Kennedy v. Tiernay, 14 R. I. 528; Chase v. Duby, 20 R. I. —. It is true that in the case at bar the record does not show the terms of the hiring, but it does show that the defendant was in the employ of the garnishee, and had been for a considerable period of time, and that his wages were payable weekly. In other words it appears that there was a present subsisting contract between the defendant and the garnishee at the time of the making of the assignment, and that out of that contract an indebtedness did in fact arise upon which the assignment could operate. It is not the case of a mere possibility of future indebtedness without any subsisting engagement upon which it shall accrue (see assignment in Kennedy v. Tiernay, 14 R. I. 528), but the case of both an actual and a possible debt arising, and contingently to arise, out of a subsisting contract; and, this being so, we do not see that it is material whether it was a contract to work by the day, by the week, or otherwise. If it was a hiring by the day, as the common pleas division decided, then it was evidently not for a single day, but was a continuous hiring by the day, so long as the contract of hiring continued. In McConnell on Trustee Process (§ 209), the law is summarized as follows: "The contract of employment need not cover a fixed time. A hiring is all that is necessary, even though the employee may leave, or the employer may discharge, at any time. Nor need the hiring be for a regular salary. A hiring by the piece will be sufficient, although the wages vary in amount from month to month. And the same rule applies where the assignor works by the day, but his wages are paid monthly. And so the contract may be defeasible or avoidable. In such case it will be valid until defeated by some act of the parties. And although wages may be conditional or uncertain as to amount, or contingent, still they may be assigned." Garland v. Harrington, 51 N. H. 409, and Lannan v. Smith, 7 Gray, 150, were cases where the hiring was by the day, and it was held in each of them that the wages were assignable.

We therefore decide that the assignment in question was effectual to convey the wages of the defendant to said Fogarty, and hence that the garnishee should be discharged. The case is remitted to the common pleas division for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Nancy E. SIMS, by Her Guardian, W. R. Sprinkle,

v.

W. M. SIMS, Appt.

(121 N. C. 297.)

1. A marriage with a person who has, in appropriate proceedings, been found to be men-

- NOTE.—Marriage of person when insane.
- I. Invalidity of.
 - II. Degree of incapacity which will affect.
 - III. Test of capacity to contract.
 - IV. Test of capacity to know the nature of the act.
 - V. Incapacity combined with fraud.
 - VI. Incapacity as a ground for divorce.
 - VII. Ratification and waiver of right to attack.
 - VIII. Evidence of incapacity.
 - a. Presumption and burden of proof.
 - b. Sufficiency, weight, and admissibility.
 - c. Effect of inquisition.
 - IX. The annulment.
 - a. Necessity of decree for.
 - b. Jurisdiction; procedure.
 - c. Effect.

I. Invalidity of.

By the common law an idiot might contract marriage, and the marriage of an idiot or lunatic was considered valid. Park v. Barron, 20 Ga. 702, 65 Am. Dec. 641, dictum; Stiles v. West, cited in Sid. 112.

But the universal rule now is that the marriage of parties either of whom lacks the mental capacity to consent, not during a lucid interval, is ineffectual and void ab initio. Waymire v. Jetmore, 22 Ohio St. 274; Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; Unity v. Belgrade, 76 Me. 419; Smith v. Smith, 47 Miss. 211; Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49; Foster v. Means, Speers, Eq. 569, 42 Am. Dec. 832; Browning v. Reane, 2 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 69; Ash's Case, 2 Freem. Ch. 259; Greno's Case, cited in 2 Freem. Ch. 268; Smart v. Taylor, 9 Mod. 98; Morrison's Case, cited in 1 Bl. Com. p. 439; 1 Collinson, Lunacy, 574; Legeyt v. O'Brien, Millward, 325.

Though the insanity was only temporary. Legeyt v. O'Brien, Millward, 325.

Idiocy or lunacy is an insuperable impediment to the contracting of marriage, as it is to the entering into of any other contract. Johnson v. Kincade, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 470.

And a marriage of an insane person is absolutely void by reason of the want of capacity of such person to contract. Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774; Smith v. Smith, 47 Miss. 211.

Marriage is a civil contract, and will be invalidated by want of consent of capable persons. Turner v. Meyers, 1 Hagg. Consist. Rep. 414; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 2 Dana, 102, 26 Am. Dec. 437; Cole v. Cole, 5 Sneed, 57, 70 Am. Dec. 275; Jaques v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. 490.

And may be avoided, like any other contract, for want of sufficient mental capacity in the parties, if the mind was unsound at the time or incapable of consent, that being an essential element in all contracts. Cole v. Cole, 5 Sneed, 57, 70 Am. Dec. 275.

And the court, in an action for the annulment of a marriage on the ground of lunacy, has no discretion to refuse a decree, where it is legally demanded, on the ground that such refusal would be best for all the parties under existing circumstances. Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447.

40 L. R. A.

tally imbecile, is absolutely void ab initio, and can be at any time so declared by the court.

2. A guardian of a lunatic cannot be removed in an ex parte proceeding in which no notice is served on him.

3. A marriage void on account of lunacy cannot be cured merely by cohabitation after restoration.

4. The guardian of a lunatic may bring

So, the marriage of a lunatic does not determine the right to her custody. Ash's Case, 2 Freem. Ch. 259.

And the marriage of a man to a woman who was before and at the time of the marriage a lunatic, incapable of entering into a valid marriage contract, does not confer the settlement of the husband on the wife where the marriage had been decreed to be a nullity, on that ground. Reading v. Ludlow, 43 Vt. 623.

But a woman may gain a settlement by residence in the house of her husband, if she has property and sufficient intellect to choose a home, though she was insane at the time of her marriage, and afterwards, and her marriage was decreed to be null and void for that cause. Concord v. Rumney, 45 N. H. 423.

So, administration of the effects of a deceased person will be refused to the man who married her where the marriage is null and void on the ground of her mental imbecility. Browning v. Reane, 2 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 60.

And a marriage ceremony performed while the man was upon his deathbed, in extremis and helpless, and surrounded by the woman married and her friends, when he was apparently oblivious to his former wife and children, affords no presumption against the validity of his previous marriage. Christy v. Clarke, 45 Barb. 529.

Nor will the performance of a marriage ceremony, and continued cohabitation, with a person whose mind had remained constantly unsound until death, constitute a legal marriage which will give claim to dower or curtesy in his or her estate. Jenkins v. Jenkins, 2 Dana, 102, 26 Am. Dec. 437.

In Wiser v. Lookwood, 42 Vt. 720, however, it was held that though a marriage be one which can be avoided on the ground of the lunacy of a party, it is a still a marriage in fact, and on the death of the husband the wife is entitled to a distributive share of his estate.

But while a lunatic, during his lunacy, is not capable of marriage, he may marry during a lucid interval. Ash's Case, 2 Freem. Ch. 259; Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565.

And where one is rational at the time of his marriage, subsequent unsoundness will not invalidate it. Banker v. Banker, 63 N. Y. 409.

To warrant the annulment of a marriage on the ground that the defendant was a lunatic, it must appear that such cause existed at the time of the marriage. Forman v. Forman, 53 N. Y. S. R. 639.

And where a woman marries a man of sufficient mental ability to comprehend the obligations assumed and the functions of the marriage, and cohabits with him, and they have children, and misfortune overtakes him, and he grows worse and has to be confined in an asylum for the insane, the subsequent affliction furnishes her with no ground for the annulment of the marriage. Forman v. Forman, 53 N. Y. S. R. 639.

Nor can an action be maintained for the annulment of the marriage of an insane person where at the time of the marriage he was fully competent to enter into the marriage relation, which he an action to have her marriage, solemnized after she was declared insane, set aside.

5. Receipt and confirmation of the report of a jury finding lunacy as required by statute will be presumed if the clerk acts on it by appointing a guardian.

(December 7, 1897.)

did understandingly, and the parties to the marriage lived together as husband and wife for more than a year, and until his death, without objection from his guardian or anyone else, or any proceeding being taken to annul the marriage. McCleary v. Barcalow, 6 Ohio C. C. 481.

Neither insanity nor idiocy of a party at the time of marriage, however, is a sufficient ground for divorce, or a decree of nullity, unless the other party was ignorant of such disability at the time of the marriage. Smith v. Smith, 47 Miss. 211.

One who enters into, and consummates, a contract of marriage with full knowledge of the insanity of the person married, is estopped from denying the validity of the marriage on the ground of such insanity, the contract being invalid only at the election of the insane party. Keyes v. Keyes, 22 N. H. 558, dictum.

But the fact that the nephew of an alleged insane person opposed his marriage, to the knowledge of the person about to marry him, is not notice to her that her intended husband was insane, which will sustain the claim that she did not become a party to the marriage contract in good faith, and therefore that she is not entitled to compensation by virtue of Iowa Code, § 2238, providing that, in case either party enters into a contract of marriage in good faith, supposing the other party to be capable of contracting, and the marriage is declared a nullity, the court may decree such innocent person compensation as in case of divorce, where she knew of his doing business and managing large property interests, and supposed him to be of sound mind, and he exhibited no indications of mental unsoundness. Barber v. Barber, 74 Iowa, 801.

II. Degree of incapacity which will affect.

While the rule is generally laid down as above stated, there are different degrees of mental incapacity, and it is not every mental defect which will invalidate a marriage.

Thus, mere weakness of mind on the part of a party to a marriage will not avoid it, unless it amounts to derangement. Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 566; Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410; Baughman v. Baughman, 32 Kan. 538; Nonnemacher v. Nonnemacher, 159 Pa. 634.

And mere imbecility or weakness of mind, caused by disease, is not sufficient ground for avoiding a marriage when unaccompanied by circumstances showing that it was taken advantage of. Baughman v. Baughman, 32 Kan. 538.

Nor will great eccentricity of conduct be sufficient ground, unless it reaches a point that evinces inability to comprehend the subject-matter of the contract. Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410; Nonnemacher v. Nonnemacher, 159 Pa. 634.

Nor will mere proof of defection, or singularity of conduct. Anonymous, 4 Pick. 32.

And dullness of intellect, coupled with deafness and dumbness, is not alone sufficient to render a person incompetent to marry. Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4, 18 Jur. 858.

And inability upon the part of a deaf and dumb person to understand others in general, especially strangers, and an occasional, and not infrequent, inability to appreciate simple mathematical calculations, are insufficient to show incapacity to contract marriage, or to warrant the granting of an issue as to the validity of the marriage. Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4, 18 Jur. 858.

So, mere proof of the fact of insanity, without more, is not sufficient to warrant a decree of nullity.

lity of a marriage. Concord v. Rumney, 45 N. H. 423.

In annulling a marriage on the ground of lunacy, the law proceeds upon the ground that the party was in fact incapable of making such a contract for want of the proper understanding necessary to yield an intelligent assent to the obligation. Forman v. Forman, 53 N. Y. S. R. 639.

And a marriage contract can be declared void on the ground of insanity, only for such want of understanding as to render the party incapable of assenting thereto. Lewis v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 124, 9 L. R. A. 506.

And the fact that a party to a marriage is subject to some vice or uncontrollable impulse or propensity will not justify setting it aside as void, where he was otherwise sound and able to understand the nature and obligations of the marriage contract. Lewis v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 124, 9 L. R. A. 506.

The terms "non compos mentis," and "of unsound mind," as used with reference to capacity to marry, mean the same thing, and have a determinate legal signification importing, not weakness of understanding, but a total deprivation of sense, and are alike applicable to idiots and lunatics. Foster v. Means, Speers, Eq. 669, 42 Am. Dec. 382.

In Hancock v. Peaty, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 335, 35 L. J. Prob. N. S. 57, however, it was held that the question to be considered on an issue whether a person had sufficient mental capacity to contract a marriage is whether his mind was diseased or not at the time of the contract, and if the evidence established that his mind was diseased at that time, the court will not consider the extent of the derangement.

III. Test of capacity to contract.

Under Ga. Code, § 1702, a marriage of persons unable to contract is void. Bell v. Bennett, 73 Ga. 784.

And some of the cases lay down the rule, without reference to statute, that a marriage is invalid where one of the parties to it was so imbecile as not to understand the nature of the contract. True v. Ranney, 21 N. H. 52, 58 Am. Dec. 164; Middleborough v. Rochester, 12 Mass. 383.

And that persons not having the regular use of their understanding sufficient to deal with discretion in the common affairs of life, or whose weakness is so considerable as to amount to derangement, are incapable of contracting a valid marriage. Cole v. Cole, 5 Sneed, 57, 70 Am. Dec. 276; Foster v. Means, Speers, Eq. 669, 42 Am. Dec. 382.

And a marriage between such a person and a female pauper will not change the place of her settlement from that of her nativity. Middleborough v. Rochester, 12 Mass. 383.

And to justify a divorce upon the ground of insanity of the wife at the time of the marriage, within this rule, such evidence of insanity must be given as would justify a jury in a civil action in finding a party incapable of making a contract. Anonymous, 4 Pick. 32.

But no greater, if as much, mental capacity is required to make a matrimonial contract, than is required for ordinary business contracts, or a valid testamentary disposition of one's estate. Kern v. Kern, 51 N. J. Eq. 574.

And a marriage will not be set aside on the ground of mental incapacity of a party on less proof than would suffice to annul contracts less sacred and important in their nature. Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410.

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Wilkes County adjudging void a marriage which had been entered into between plaintiff and defendant after plaintiff had been found to be mentally imbecile. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

And an instruction in an action attacking the legality of a marriage because of the alleged insanity of the husband at the time, that a degree of mind sufficient to enable one to enter into a valid contract or make a valid will or deed is sufficient to enable him to contract matrimony, is sufficiently favorable to the party contesting such marriage. Atkinson v. Medford, 48 Me. 510.

Upon the other hand, however, it has been held that the marriage of one who has an intelligent understanding of the nature of the act in which he was engaged, and the contract and relation into which he was entering, is valid, though he was not capable of making business contracts and carrying on business generally. Nonnemacher v. Nonnemacher, 159 Pa. 634.

IV. Test of capacity to know the nature of the act.

The rule held by a great majority of the cases makes capacity to know the nature of the act the test of capacity to marry.

Thus, to avoid a contract of marriage on the ground of mental unsoundness within this rule, there must be an inability to know the nature of the act, and to intelligently will to do it. Baughman v. Baughman, 32 Kan. 538; Nonnemacher v. Nonnemacher, 159 Pa. 634.

Insanity which will disable one to contract marriage must be of such a nature, or of such severity, that the person is incapable of exercising a rational judgment upon the subject. Concord v. Rumney, 45 N. H. 423.

The evidence must show that there was such imbecility or unsoundness of mind at the time that the party did not, and could not, have an intelligent understanding of the contract and relation of marriage. Nonnemacher v. Nonnemacher, 159 Pa. 634.

The marriage of a woman who was eccentric, and whose mind was affected, is valid where she had mind enough to know what she did, and memory enough to remember it afterwards, and judgment enough to recollect and comment upon the manner and character of the act she had committed. Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410.

Nor will a marriage be decreed invalid under a statute authorizing the court to decree marriages null and void where either of the parties was at the time insane, where the party alleged to be insane knew his father and uncle at the time, and his trustee, and the nature of the trustee's office, and displayed shrewdness and intelligence when speaking on the subject of the legal relation which he bore him, though his mind was weak and he could not learn to count. Elzey v. Elzey, 1 Houst. (Del.) 309.

So, a marriage will not be annulled on the ground that a party thereto was afflicted with a morbid propensity to steal, commonly denominated kleptomania, where it is not proved that she was not otherwise sane, or that her mind was so affected by such propensity as to be incapable of understanding or assenting to the marriage contract. Lewis v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 124, 9 L. R. A. 505.

And it will not be set aside upon the ground of the insanity or imbecility of a party thereto, because he was a person of weak intellect, who at times did not express himself coherently, and who was unable to reason from cause to effect, and who had been judicially determined to be unfit to take care of himself and his property, where, until he was thirty-five years of age he had been permitted by his family to care for himself and property, and had so taken care of his estate that it had been preserved if not increased, and his memory was good, and he manifested shrewdness and judgment in making a bargain, and conducted himself with reference to the marriage without impropriety or peculiarity, and seemed to have a proper conception of the ceremony and to understand the rights, duties, and responsibilities which attach to the marriage relation. Kern v. Kern, 51 N. J. Eq. 574.

A marriage contract will be declared null and void, however, where either party from imbecility of mind or deranged intellect is incapable of volition, or unable to comprehend the nature of the engagement entered into. Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410.

Where the incapacity of a person is such that he is incapable of understanding the nature of the contract of marriage, and incapable from mental imbecility of taking care of his person and property, he cannot dispose of his person or property by a matrimonial contract, any more than by any other contract. Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447; St. George v. Biddeford, 78 Me. 568; Browning v. Reane, 2 Phillim. Ecol. Rep. 60.

The question in an action for the annulment of a marriage on the ground of the infirmity of mind of a party is, Had he sufficient mental capacity to understand the marriage contract? Kern v. Kern, 51 N. J. Eq. 574.

Whether he had possession of his reason at the time of the alleged marriage ceremony, so as to know the effect of the act he was about to perform and be capable of intelligently consenting thereto. Baughman v. Baughman, 32 Kan. 538.

The court, in an action to annul a marriage on the ground of lunacy, must determine whether the alleged lunatic was capable of understanding the nature of the contract and the duties and responsibilities which it creates, and was free from the influence of morbid delusions upon the subject. Durham v. Durham, L. R. 10 Prob. Div. 80.

The question of the capacity of a party to a marriage to comprehend the nature and consequences of her acts, however, is not to be put generally, but with reference to the very act in question. Doe v. Roe, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 344.

To render a marriage valid there ought to be enough of capacity on the part of the parties to comprehend the subject, and the duties and responsibilities of the marital relation. Smith v. Smith, 47 Miss. 211.

And to avoid a contract of marriage on the ground of mental unsoundness the party alleged to be insane or non compos mentis must be incapable of understanding the nature of the contract itself. Baughman v. Baughman, 32 Kan. 538.

One who contracts marriage should be held bound thereby, where he had an appreciation of the condition of the marriage state, and understood the rights and responsibilities which attach thereto, and regarded the marriage ceremony as the incident which effected the marriage, though he was a person of weak mind. Kern v. Kern, 51 N. J. Eq. 574.

A marriage is not invalid for want of understanding of either of the parties, where they were sufficiently intelligent to understand at the time of the ceremony that they had thereby agreed to cohabit solely together. Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4, 18 Jur. 858.

But a marriage is void if at the time it was contracted and solemnized the husband had not sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature of the marriage contract, and that by it he assumed all the duties, obligations, and responsibilities, and all the rights, growing out of the relations; he need

Mr. W. W. Barber for appellant.
Messrs. Glenn & Manly for appellee.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On November 11, 1898, Nancy E. Sims, not have understood such duties, obligations, and responsibilities, but should have understood that he took them all upon himself whatever they might be. St. George v. Biddeford, 76 Me. 593.

The question in an action to annul a marriage upon the ground of the insanity of a party is not whether she was aware that she was going through the ceremony of marriage, but whether she was capable of understanding the nature of the contract she was entering into, free from the influence of morbid delusion upon the subject. Hunter v. Edney, L. R. 10 Prob. Div. 93.

And an instruction in an action involving the validity of a marriage, given by way of illustrating and enforcing the theory already presented, that the husband must have sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature of the marriage contract, that the same rule would apply to the contract of marriage that would apply to other contracts, is not erroneous. St. George v. Biddeford, 76 Me. 593.

Nor is one given in illustration of the rule previously stated, that the husband must have been of sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature of the marriage contract,—that he would be considered incompetent if he had not mental capacity enough to be able to provide a support for a family, when he was possessed of sufficient means for that purpose. St. George v. Biddeford, 76 Me. 593.

And a marriage contract is null and void where the prevailing characteristic of the mind of one of the parties is the absence of the reasoning faculties, accompanied by only occasional manifestations of sense, and where only in rare instances the reasoning powers can be detected at all, and the evidence tends to the conclusion that the individual is incapable of transacting the ordinary affairs of life. Foster v. Means, 1 Speers, Eq. 569, 42 Am. Dec. 332.

And one who, while in her childhood, was sent to school, but does not seem to have ever been able to read or write, and who was apprenticed, but never learned the business so as to earn her livelihood, and whose brother always supplied her with common necessities by paying other persons to take care of her, and who never has had the use or possession of her property, and who is washed and cleaned and put to bed by others, is not competent to enter into a contract of marriage. Browning v. Keane, 2 Phillim. Ecol. Rep. 69.

So, in Rex v. Kelly, cited in Shelford on Lunatics, 360, it was held that a woman who married while she had no conception whatever of the meaning of the transaction, and expressed various doubts as to its nature, and was perfectly indifferent and frivolously careless as to whom she lived with, and manifested much indecision of character, and her intellect was so weak as to render her an easy victim to artful designs, was not the wife of the party who married her.

The question whether a person contracting marriage had sufficient understanding to comprehend the nature and consequences of the act is one of fact for the jury. Doe v. Roe, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 344.

And the real point in issue is whether, at the precise time of the marriage, the party had sufficient understanding to comprehend the nature of the contract and relation into which he was entering. Nonnemacher v. Nonnemacher, 150 Pa. 634.

So, the marriage of a person who at the time of entering into it was so intoxicated as to be non compos mente, and as not to know what he was doing, and was for the time deprived of reason, is invalid, but not so if the intoxication was of a less degree. Prine v. Prine, 36 Fla. 676, 34 L. E. A. 87.

But to render a marriage void on the ground that the man was intoxicated at the time, it must appear that the intoxication was such as to deprive him of all sense and volition, and to render him incapable of knowing what he was about. Roblin v. Roblin, 23 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 430.

And the marriage of a man while suffering from attacks of delirium tremens is valid, where it took place during a lucid interval, and he was able to discuss and arrange the terms of the marriage agreement. Scott v. Paquitt, 17 Lower Can. Rep. 233.

Insanity from delirium tremens will avoid a contract of marriage, but the question whether the party was really insane or only intoxicated is a matter of fact for the jury. Clement v. Mattleon, 3 Rich. L. 93.

V. Incapacity combined with fraud.

A less degree of incapacity may serve to invalidate a marriage when combined with fraud than that required when taken alone.

Thus, a marriage clandestinely solemnized, accompanied by circumstances of fraud and circumvention, between a person of weak and deranged mind and the daughter of his trustee and solicitor, who had great influence over him, and by whom he was clearly considered and treated as of unsound mind, is null and void, where he was the mere instrument in their hands to go through with the necessary forms. Countess Portsmouth v. Earl Portsmouth, 1 Hag. Ecol. Rep. 350.

And a marriage and conveyance secured by a disolute and designing woman of middle age with and from an old man who firmly believed in spiritualism, who sought his acquaintance for that purpose and secured it by pretending to be a medium and to have received communications from spirits commanding their marriage and the conveyance to her of valuable property, claiming to be a clairvoyant physician and able to cure his deafness, and by other fraudulent devices, will be set aside as having been procured by fraud and undue influence, though mere belief in spiritualism is not per se sufficient ground for setting aside a marriage and conveyance. Hides v. Hides, 65 How. Pr. 17.

And the marriage of a person to one of the daughters of his solicitor and trustee, and a settlement obtained from him while visiting the solicitor's family, will be pronounced null and void where his reason was defective, and, though he was capable of making a few observations on the state of the weather or on horses and gaming, and attended public meetings, races, and country balls, and behaved with ordinary propriety at parties in the company of persons who commanded his respect, but on being left to himself and unrestrained indulged in practices so irrational and unnatural as to be in some instances bordering on idiocy, and in others attended with actual delusions and fancies, believing in the existence of things which no rational being endowed with powers of reasoning could believe to exist. Foster v. Means, Speers, Eq. 569, 42 Am. Dec. 332.

So, a marriage is null and void, and will be so declared, where the husband is led to enter into it by fraud and imposition, with one who was well ab initio, and can be at any time so declared by the courts. Crump v. Morgan, 88 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447, which has been often cited and approved (Womack's Dig. No. 2,005); and of late years in Webber v. Webber, 79 N. C. at page 576, and Batty v. Cranfill, 91

N. C. at page 298, 49 Am. Rep. 641. The power of the courts to declare a marriage a nullity for incapacity of one of the parties, though not an adjudged lunatic at the time of the marriage, is also upheld in Johnson v. Kincaide, 87 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 470; State, Setzer, known to her friends to be wholly unfit and legally incapacitated to contract marriage, that fact being concealed by her friends with whom she resided, and he being ignorant thereof. Keyes v. Keyes, 22 N. H. 583, dictum.

The concealment upon the part of a party to a marriage, that she was afflicted with a morbid propensity to steal, commonly denominated kleptomania, however, is not such a fraud as will afford ground for the annulment of the marriage. Lewis v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 124, 9 L. R. A. 505.

And occasional paroxysms of hereditary insanity upon the part of a wife before marriage, unknown to the husband at the time of and for some time after marriage, affords no ground for rescinding the marriage contract on account of fraud, mistake, or inadvertence, where, in the interval, she was capable of all the duties of a citizen or a wife. Hamaker v. Hamaker, 18 Ill. 137, 65 Am. Dec. 705.

VI. Incapacity as a ground for divorce.

Mental incapacity at the time of marriage is a ground for divorce in some states. Brown v. Westbrook, 27 Ga. 102.

And a proceeding to declare a marriage a nullity on the ground of the mental incapacity of one of the parties to consent to the contract, at the time it was entered into, is unauthorized and unknown under the judicial system of the state of Georgia. Brown v. Westbrook, 27 Ga. 102.

But imbecility of mind is not a sufficient ground for divorce under the Delaware statute unless it amounts to idiocy or insanity. Elzey v. Elzey, 1 Houst. (Del.) 306.

And occasional spells of insanity before marriage, and ultimate permanent insanity several years after, together with evidence of hereditary taint in the family, do not warrant a divorce under a statute making insanity at the time of the marriage a ground therefor. Smith v. Smith, 47 Miss. 211.

In Smith v. Smith, 47 Miss. 211, Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 414, supra, III., IV., was distinguished on the ground that it arose prior to the revision of the statute, and was decided under the common law.

VII. Ratification and waiver of right to attack.

A lunatic, on regaining his reason, may affirm a marriage celebrated while he was insane. Cole v. Cole, 5 Sneed, 57, 70 Am. Dec. 275; Goodheart v. Ramsley, 28 Ohio L. J. 227; Prine v. Prine, 38 Fla. 676, 34 L. R. A. 87; Durie v. Norris, 1 U. S. Law Mag. (Monthly) 49; Ash's Case, 2 Freem. Ch. 259; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 278, pl. 6.

And it may be affirmed by any acts or conduct which amount to a recognition of it. Prine v. Prine, 38 Fla. 676, 34 L. R. A. 87.

Thus, the validity of a marriage cannot be impugned on the ground that the husband was out of his mind when the marriage ceremony was performed, where the couple had lived together as man and wife until the husband's death,—so as to impair the claim of the widow to a sum allowed by law to widows in necessitous circumstances. Sabatot v. Populus, 81 La. Ann. 854.

And the fact that two deaf and dumb persons had lived together thirty years, during which a suit had been compromised in which the husband and wife were plaintiffs, and that they had otherwise recognized their marriage as legal and sufficient, is strong evidence against a claim that it was invalid for want of capacity of the parties. Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4, 18 Jur. 853.

And where a woman marries a man who subsequently has to be confined in an asylum for insanity, and continues to cohabit with him until he is so confined, having children by him, it sufficiently establishes, either that he was not insane at the time of the marriage, or that she had nevertheless elected to treat the contract as a valid and subsisting one. Forman v. Forman, 53 N. Y. S. R. 639.

So, the appellate court will not reverse a decree of the circuit court in an action for the annulment of a marriage upon the ground of incapacity, as being against evidence, where the evidence is conflicting upon the subject of mental capacity, and there is sufficient evidence, if believed, to show that the party was not deprived of the use of his reasoning faculties at such time, and it appears that he had repeatedly, since the marriage, ratified the same by cohabitation with the other party thereto. Prine v. Prine, 38 Fla. 676, 34 L. R. A. 87.

But one who was married while insane and under guardianship, but who was subsequently declared sane, and the guardian discharged, after which he was again declared insane and placed in an asylum, will not be deemed to have ratified the marriage by acts performed after he was declared sane and before he was the second time declared insane, in the absence of evidence of actual cohabitation, where he was afflicted with progressive paresis, and the disease had been of at least a year's standing, and he subsequently became a confirmed lunatic, and the evidence is overwhelming that he was at all times insane. Goodhart v. Speer, 7 Ohio Dec. 47; Goodheart v. Ransley, 28 Ohio L. J. 237.

And an instruction, in an action to annul a marriage on the ground of the lunacy of one of the parties, that the plaintiff must show unsoundness of mind at the time of the marriage continuing beyond question to the time of the husband's death, without lucid intervals, if erroneous, is obviated by a finding of sanity at the time of the marriage. Banker v. Banker, 68 N. Y. 409.

It has been held, however, that where a marriage is void because of the insanity of one of the parties it is not ratified and rendered valid by their subsequent cohabitation after the insane person becomes sane. Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410.

And that a marriage by a person totally deprived of reason is void, and that the performance of a marriage ceremony between such a person and another and their continued cohabitation until death, do not constitute a legal marriage or give claim to dower or curtesy in his or her estate. Jenkins v. Jenkins, 2 Dana, 108, 26 Am. Dec. 437.

So, a wife who waits twenty-two years after obtaining knowledge that her husband was insane when they were married before filing a bill to avoid the marriage on that ground is barred, by the lapse of time, from obtaining the relief sought. Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 665.

And where a man who has been adjudged of unsound mind, afterwards marries a woman, with whom he lives for thirty years, the presumption of continued insanity will not prevail as against the presumption in favor of the legality of the marriage. Castor v. Davis, 120 Ind. 231.

And a marriage will not be disturbed upon the ground that previous thereto the wife had been afflicted, without the knowledge of the husband, with periodical attacks of insanity, and that such

v. Setzer, 97 N. C. 252; Lea v. Lea, 104 N. C. 603. This might be done even after the death of parties (Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49)—though issue could not be bastardized; but it must be done in a direct proceeding, as in this case, and not incidentally (Williamson v. Williams, 56 N. C. (8 Jones, Eq.) 446). Such action is for a divorce (Lea v. Lea, 104 N. C. 603), and all actions for a lunatic can be brought either in the name of the guardian or in the name of the lunatic by the guardian (Crump v. Morgan, 38 attacks had continued ever since, lasting for months together, and often rendering it dangerous for him to live with her, after the lapse of more than thirty years, and the birth of a family, all of which have reached the age of maturity. Secor v. Secor, 1 MacArth. 630.

VIII. Evidence of incapacity.

a. Presumption and burden of proof.

Every man is presumed to be sane until the contrary is shown, and the burden of proof rests with the person alleging a marriage contract to be void by reason of the incapacity or mental unsoundness of a party thereto. Baughman v. Baughman, 32 Kan. 538; Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; Nonnemacher v. Nonnemacher, 150 Pa. 634.

And if the proofs in the case on this question are of equal weight and reliability the presumption of sanity must prevail. Nonnemacher v. Nonnemacher, 150 Pa. 634.

And refusal to charge that the jury should start with the presumption that a person was of unsound mind is not error, in an action for the annulment of his marriage on the ground of unsoundness of mind, where a finding was made in an inquisition two days after the marriage that he was then insane, and had been for six months previous thereto. Banker v. Banker, 63 N. Y. 400.

But where the existence of insanity is once established in an action to annul a marriage, the onus is cast upon the party seeking to sustain the marriage, to prove by testimony as clearly convincing as that required to establish insanity, that the particular contract was entered into during a lucid interval. Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565.

And the burden of proof rests with the party asserting the validity of a marriage entered into by a person under a decree of lunacy and guardianship, to establish that it was entered into during a lucid interval. Goodheart v. Ransley, 28 Ohio L. J. 227.

As to presumption and burden of proof of sanity and insanity generally, see notes to State v. Scott (La. Ann.) 36 L. R. A. 721, and Ford v. State (Miss.) 36 L. R. A. 117.

b. Sufficiency, weight, and admissibility.

Proof of insanity to invalidate a marriage on an application for its annulment must be clear and unquestionable. Cole v. Cole, 5 Sneed, 57, 70 Am. Dec. 275; Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410; Powell v. Powell, 27 Miss. 783.

Especially after the death of one of the parties. Powell v. Powell, 27 Miss. 783.

Thus, proof of the insanity of a wife both before and after marriage will not invalidate the marriage where it appears that she was sane at the time it took place. Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410.

And going through the marriage ceremony with propriety and decorum is of itself prima facie evidence of sufficient understanding of the contract making it valid. Anonymous, 4 Pick. 32.

And evidence that a marriage was solemnized in an unusual manner, by the wife going to the house of the husband and both parties dispensing with the ceremony generally used on such occasions, but agreeing to become man and wife, establishes perfect indifference to the customs of society, and does not overcome the presumption of sanity, or tend to show mental incapacity of either party amounting to incompetency to contract the marriage. Powell v. Powell, 27 Miss. 783.

40 L. R. A.

So, evidence that a woman performed her usual duties until the day before her marriage, but was at times dull and reticent, and that she was very quiet on the day of the wedding, and after the ceremony stated that she was not worthy of her husband, and remained reticent, and after a few days could not be gotten to take interest in anything, and shortly afterwards tried to strangle herself and set fire to a toilet mat, and was afterwards sent to an asylum, where she became violent and had delusions to the effect that she was not married, and afterwards improved and again passed into violent mania, with the testimony of an expert that there was melancholia in her mental condition at the time of the marriage, but that to a certain extent she understood what she was doing, though she did not fully understand the marriage relation,—is not sufficient to warrant a decree of nullity. Cannon v. Smally, L. R. 10 Prob. Div. 2.

And evidence in an action to annul a marriage, the parties to which had been previously divorced and remarried, showing that the mind of the wife was ill-balanced at times, and that she was of an eccentric and irritable disposition and afterwards became positively insane, and that upon the second marriage she agreed to quit complaining and scolding and not bring up old troubles, and that on the day of the marriage she began making the same old charges as badly as ever, is not sufficient to warrant relief. Slais v. Slais, 9 Mo. App. 34.

So, administration of her husband's effects will not be refused to a widow upon the ground that he was a lunatic at the time of the marriage and incapable of consenting to marriage, though he had a very weak understanding from his infancy and by hard drinking was at times a lunatic, and did many mad and frantic acts, where no commission had issued against him, and it appeared that he married with deliberation and intention after procuring the license himself and declaring that he was going to be married, and went through the ceremony with propriety, and lived with his wife as such during the remainder of his life. Parker v. Parker, 2 Lee, Ecol. Rep. 382.

Evidence that a party to a marriage was ignorant of the most common things in life, such as the parts of a dollar that are current, seed and harvest time of the usual crops in the locality in which he lived, and the days of the week, and the opinions of witnesses that he had been a fool or an idiot from birth, however, are sufficient to warrant a finding of incapacity to contract marriage. Johnson v. Kincaide, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 470.

And the fact that a person had attacks of insanity which became more frequent in their visitations, more especially in the spring and autumn, and that his father did not trust him with any business and he was entirely unfit to be employed, is sufficient to throw the onus on the other party, in an action to annul a marriage, to establish his sanity or a lucid interval at the time of the marriage. Turner v. Meyers, 1 Hag. Constat. Rep. 414.

So, evidence that a woman immediately after her marriage, and upon the next morning, requested her husband to cut her throat, declaring herself a weak person who had committed crimes for which she was liable to be taken to prison, and that she was an unfit person to be united to so good a man, and that she attempted to commit suicide, it appearing that she had always been a well-conducted and virtuous young woman, is sufficient to show that at the time of the marriage she was not able to understand and appreciate the act she was doing. Hunter v. Edney, L. R. 10 Prob. Div. 98.

N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447; Shaw v. Burney, 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 149). W. R. Sprinkle, son of Nancy E. Sims, was duly appointed her guardian after the aforesaid inquisition of lunacy, and such proceedings and orders are "valid until reversed or superseded."

And a marriage with a woman, secretly solemnized, will be set aside on the ground of her inability to understand the nature and obligation of the contract, where she could not wash or dress herself properly or decently, knit or sew, or take care of her clothes, or distinguish colors or cotton from flannel, and could not be taught to cook or do the simplest house work, and could hardly read, though she went to school until twenty, and could not spell, add, or count twenty, or state the number of Sabbaths in a year, and could be taught nothing of geography or tell the time of day by watch, or distinguish one piece of money from another, and had no idea of the value of property, and could not be trusted to do errands, and played with children and their toys, and did not appreciate the proprieties of life. True v. Ranney, 21 N. H. 62, 63 Am. Dec. 164.

So, evidence that a person afflicted with inflammation of the lungs, which frequently affects the mind, suddenly sat up in bed in the night and called to the person nursing him and asked her if she would be his wife, to which she assented, and he declared before God and man that she was his wife, does not establish a valid marriage, where shortly before and after the event he was in a state of stupor with occasional fits of delirium, and a few minutes afterwards he jumped out of bed and became so ungovernable that assistance had to be sent for, and there was no previous deliberation or conversation on the subject, and he afterwards died without appearing to know anything about the marriage claimed. Jaques v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. 499.

And in Doe v. Roe, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 344, which was a feigned issue sent down from the court of chancery to try the validity of a marriage, it was found invalid on evidence that the woman married was wayward, wilful, and difficult to govern in childhood and that with all the advantages of education she had learned less at sixteen than her brothers at eight, and had never been able to learn the multiplication table, and that when fully grown she was more fond of association with little children than with persons of her own age, and was more prone to being with the servants than with the family, and that she was slovenly and untidy in her room and dress and had a passion for collecting old rags, and was subject to paroxysms of violent passion, and would use profane and obscene language and be insolent to her parents, and was habitually cruel, and took pleasure in the sufferings of animals, and was greatly addicted to falsehood, and when detected would only laugh, and that her memory was bad and her judgment weak and her passions violent, and that she had no affection, but rather hatred, for her parents and brothers and sisters, and the opinions of witnesses that she was an imbecile.

So, the question of soundness or unsoundness of mind depends upon the general frame and habit of the mind, and cannot be determined from particular actions. Foster v. Means, 1 Speers, Eq. 559, 42 Am. Dec. 332.

And the question, in an action for the annulment of a marriage, whether the party alleged to be insane had sufficient capacity to understand the marriage contract, is not to be solved by the mere opinions of persons who may have been brought in contact with him, but each case must be decided
40 L. R. A.

Bethea v. McLennon, 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 527. The ex parte proceedings brought by the husband in 1895, to have the wife declared sane, were without any notice or service upon the guardian, to whom the law had confided the protection of her rights, and hence were a nulon its own circumstances; and his ability can be ascertained in no more satisfactory way than by referring to his conduct in other transactions. Kern v. Kern, 51 N. J. Eq. 574.

And the court will form its opinion as to the mental condition of a party alleged to be incapable of contracting marriage by reason of insanity, from the testimony of witnesses who have been long acquainted with him, and that of medical experts, in preference to any personal examination. Thayer v. Thayer, 9 R. I. 577.

So, evidence as to the condition and conduct of a husband, both before and after marriage, is competent, and may be taken into account in judging as to his mental capacity at that time. St. George v. Biddeford, 76 Me. 598; Nonnemacher v. Nonnemacher, 159 Pa. 634.

And an expert witness may be permitted to testify, in an action in which the validity of a marriage is at issue, to his opinion that a party to the marriage, alleged to be imbecile, was not capable of understanding his duties toward his wife arising out of the matrimonial union. St. George v. Biddeford, 76 Me. 598.

But the sane party cannot be admitted as a witness against the insane party when the statute provides that if one party is insane the other shall not be permitted to testify in his own favor. Little v. Little, 13 Gray, 264.

So, where a marriage is sought to be invalidated upon the ground that the alleged husband was so paralyzed at the time of the marriage that he could not comprehend what was passing at the time, his written and oral declarations, made prior to and repeated up to within a short time of the ceremony, showing that the relations of the parties were affectionate, and that he had stated that he could not live happily without the party married, and that he intended that she should have his property as she had helped to make it, and the fact that they had corresponded several months, and that the marriage engagement had been previously made, may be given on her behalf to sustain the marriage. Baughman v. Baughman, 32 Kan. 538.

c. Effect of inquisition.

An adjudication that a person was a lunatic, and incapable of taking care of himself or his property by reason of intemperance or habitual drunkenness or otherwise, and the appointment of a guardian of his person and property, which was never vacated or set aside, but continued in force until his death, is only prima facie, and not conclusive, evidence that he was incompetent, for want of mental capacity, to enter into and consummate a legal marriage. McCleary v. Barcalow, 6 Ohio C. C. 481.

Though prima facie it is not conclusive evidence of incapacity. Keys v. Norris, 6 Rich. Eq. 398.

And a finding that a person was of unsound mind, and that he had been so for six months previous, upon an inquisition in lunacy made two days after his marriage, is presumptive evidence of incompetency to marry only, and the fact that the wife had notice of the pendency of the inquisition at the time of the marriage does not render the marriage invalid, as by going on with it she took the hazard of a finding which would render the marriage presumptively void, and nothing more. Banker v. Banker, 63 N. Y. 409.

So, a marriage contract during a lucid interval, by one who had been found to be a lunatic, is bind-lity (Code, § 217, subd. 3), as was also the subsequent order, founded thereon, removing him without notice. Indeed, the marriage, at the time, of a legally declared lunatic, being a nullity, could only have been remedied by proceedings to set aside the inquisition of lunacy for fraud or other good ground, or by a new marriage, if the lunatic is since found to be restored. The void marriage on account of lunacy could not be cured merely by cohabitation after restoration. Marriages entered into by parties under the legal age, however, being ing on him where the proof of the existence of the lucid interval in which it was done is clear. Re Gangwere, 14 Pa. 417, 53 Am. Dec. 564.

And a marriage will not be declared invalid without an issue directed to try the fact, though the husband was found a lunatic from a period antecedent thereto, where a son, the issue of the marriage, had enjoyed an estate devised to the lunatic and his children as a legitimate child. Ellis v. Bowman, 17 L. T. 11.

And a marriage voluntarily contracted by a person of full age and sufficient mental capacity to understand and carry it out, after a guardian had been appointed for him, which guardianship continued until his death, the parties living together as husband and wife for sixteen months and until his death without objection, and with the consent of the guardian, is valid and binding where no proceedings were ever taken to invalidate it. McCleary v. Barcalow, 6 Ohio C. C. 487.

But a judgment in an action in equity brought by the committee of an alleged lunatic against his wife to declare the marriage contract null and void, whereby it was adjudged that at the time of his marriage he was not a person of unsound mind, merely establishes his ability to enter into the marriage contract, and not that he must be regarded as a person of sound mind, fully capable of managing his affairs and disposing of his property, in an action brought by the wife against a bank, asserting her right to money of the husband deposited therein, arising out of an antenuptial contract with him, where the bank had in good faith paid the money to his legal representatives previously appointed in a proceeding adjudging him a lunatic. Veits v. Union Nat. Bank, 101 N. Y. 568, 54 Am. Rep. 748.

So, the appointment of a guardian ad litem for a respondent in an action to annul a marriage on the ground of insanity is prima facie evidence of her insanity in any subsequent stage of the case. Little v. Little, 18 Gray, 264.

And the fact that a husband was under guardianship, as a person of unsound mind, at the time of his marriage, should be averred in an action for its annulment, and not left to mere inference. Pence v. Aughe, 101 Ind. 817.

And an inquisition finding a woman to be neither an idiot nor a lunatic, but of weak understanding, obtained with a view to set aside her marriage, will not be set aside and a new one ordered for a mere irregularity, where the court is satisfied that substantial justice has been done. Ex parte Glen, 4 Dessaus. Eq. 546.

In England, in the ecclesiastical courts, an inquisition finding idiocy or lunacy is regarded as only part of the requisite proof of unsoundness of mind to warrant a decree of nullity of a marriage. Johnson v. Kincaide, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 470, dictum.

For the North Carolina rule on this question, see Sims v. Sims.

IX. The annulment.

a. Necessity of decree for.

The marriage of a lunatic is void, and must be so pronounced by every court to which and in every form in which the subject can be presented. Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447.

And a marriage which is void at its inception because of the insanity of a party thereto is a mere nullity from the beginning to the end, and does not require a sentence, decree, or judgment of any court to restore the parties to their original rights. Bell v. Bennett, 73 Ga. 784; Hawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; Unity v. Belgrade, 76 Me. 419; Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 2 Dana, 103, 26 Am. Dec. 487.

The invalidity may be shown in any proceeding in any court whenever the question arises collaterally. Unity v. Belgrade, 76 Me. 419; Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49.

Thus, the question may be decided in a collateral action, as a suit for dower for distribution, or the like. Jenkins v. Jenkins, 2 Dana, 103, 26 Am. Dec. 487; Keys v. Norris, 6 Rich. Eq. 388.

And the question as to the competency of a party to a marriage to enter into the marriage contract may be raised and decided in a proceeding by the widow, after the death of her husband, to obtain a year's support. An objection may be made to granting such support on the ground that he was of unsound mind and incapable of contracting marriage. Bell v. Bennett, 73 Ga. 784.

So, in Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49, it was held that the question whether a marriage was void or not may be inquired into by any court in which rights are asserted under it, although the parties to a marriage are dead; but the question in the case was not one of mental capacity to contract marriage.

It is within the power of the legislature, however, to prohibit the questioning of the validity of existing marriages in a trial of collateral issue on the ground of the insanity or idiocy of the other party. Goshen v. Richmond, 4 Allen, 458.

And Mass. Stat. 1845, chap. 222, providing that the validity of a marriage shall not be questioned on the trial of a collateral issue on account of the insanity or death of either party applies to marriages existing at the time of its passage, and it cannot be shown, in an action to recover for the support of a pauper, against a town in which a settlement is sought to be established by reason of a marriage performed before the passage of that act, that the marriage was invalid by reason of the insanity of the party. Goshen v. Richmond, 4 Allen, 458.

And while a marriage with a lunatic is absolutely void, for the sake of the good order of society, as well as the quiet and relief of the party, its nullity should be declared by the decision of some court of competent jurisdiction. Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 343; Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774; Johnson v. Kincaide, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 470.

In Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 343, it was presumed that all that could have been intended by the common-law judges in Stiles v. West, cited in 8id. 112, supra, I., where it was said that if an idiot contracted marriage it is good, was that though such marriages are ipso facto void, yet that it is proper that there should be a judicial decision to that effect by some court of competent jurisdiction.

So it has been held that though a marriage by a lunatic is declared void by statute, sentence of nullity of the ecclesiastical court is necessary. Ex parte Turing, 1 Ves. & B. 140.

And a court of equity will not entertain the question of nullity of marriage on account of imbecility incidentally in North Carolina, but will stay proceedings in the suit in which such issue is made, so not void, but voidable, can be validated by cohabitation after arrival at the marriageable age. State v. Parker, 106 N. C. 711; Koonce v. Wallace, 52 N. C. 194. His honor correctly adjudged that W. R. Sprinkle was authorized to bring this action. There is no other exception. As to the argument that the record does not affirmatively show that the report of the jury had been "received and confirmed." It is not required. Code, § 1670, only requires the clerk to "file and record" it. But if it had been a case in which the court was empowered that it may be determined by a direct sentence in either a superior court of law or a court of equity. Williamson v. Williams, 56 N. C. (3 Jones, Eq.) 446.

And in Vermont it has been held that a decree of nullity of a marriage cannot be attacked in a proceeding for the removal of the woman concerned as a pauper. Reading v. Ludlow, 43 Vt. 623.

And that where the existence of a marriage as a fact is established the probate court has no jurisdiction to try its validity or power to treat it as a nullity. Wiser v. Lockwood, 42 Vt. 720.

So, in Stuckey v. Mathes, 24 Hun, 461, it was held that an action upon an account for necessities furnished a wife cannot be resisted upon the ground that the marriage between her and her supposed husband was solemnized while he was a lunatic without lucid intervals, and was therefore void.

A private contract of marriage, or present words, with a lunatic, without any proceeding or succeeding act indicating the entrance into the marriage state, is not such a marriage as is contemplated by the New York act of legislature providing that a marriage shall be valid until pronounced null by a court of equity. Jacques v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. 499.

b. Jurisdiction; procedure.

A court of equity has authority to pronounce a marriage null and void from the beginning for want of capacity in one of the parties. Johnson v. Kincade, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 470.

While congenital or other mental imbecility is not among the statutory causes of divorce, a court of equity, in the exercise of its ordinary power, will entertain jurisdiction, at the suit of the imbecile's guardian, to declare his marriage a nullity on the ground that social order and public decency, and questions of legitimacy and succession of property, demand that the parties to a meretricious relation, in which the forms of marriage apparently legal seem to bind them, should be judicially relieved therefrom. Waymire v. Jetmore, 22 Ohio St. 274; Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 343.

And where a person insane at the time of her marriage refuses to ratify or consummate it after her return to a lucid interval, and files her bill to annul it, the court of chancery will decree the marriage null and void, and the parties absolved from its obligation. Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 343.

The court of chancery, possessing exclusive jurisdiction over cases of lunacy and matrimonial causes, is the proper tribunal to afford relief in a suit for the annulment of a marriage on the ground of the lunacy of a party. Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 343.

And the reference of a suit for the annulment of a marriage confers no greater jurisdiction on the referee over the subject-matter of the suit than the court itself had. Wiser v. Lockwood, 42 Vt. 720.

So, a husband may maintain an action to annul his marriage upon the ground of his insanity after recovery. Turner v. Meyers, 1 Hagg. Consist. Rep. 414.

And an action for the annulment of a marriage of a supposed lunatic on the ground of lunacy may be maintained in the name of the supposed lunatic, by her committee, and need not be in the name of the committee alone. Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447.

40 L. R. A.

And under 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 302, § 23, a marriage sought to be annulled on the ground of the lunacy of one of the parties may be declared void at any time during the continuance of the lunacy or after the death of the lunatic, in that state, during the lifetime of the other party to the marriage, on the application of near relatives of a lunatic interested to avoid the marriage. Jacques v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. 499.

But an action for the annulment of a marriage under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1025, providing therefor when either of the parties to a marriage is incapable, from unsoundness of mind or want of understanding, to contract the same, must be brought in the name of the incapable party, and cannot be maintained by his guardian in his own name. Pence v. Aughe, 101 Ind. 317.

And an application to postpone the pronouncing of a decree in an action to annul a marriage, on the ground that the party had become sane and was so at the time of the marriage, and not of any subsequent recovery, will be denied where the court is satisfied by the evidence that he was not of sound mind at that time, and a physician makes affidavit that he could not be produced in court without suffering injury. Thayer v. Thayer, 9 R. I. 377.

And the application for an order requiring the next friend of a husband, who applies for a divorce in his behalf alleging his insanity, to produce such husband in court at the time of the trial, will be refused, at least until the court can determine upon the trial of the petition whether his presence is desirable or necessary. Thayer v. Thayer, 9 R. I. 377.

So, a finding of a trial court, in an action to annul a marriage on the ground of lunacy of a party, that he was of sound mind when the marriage took place, which is sustained by the evidence and affirmed by the general term, is conclusive on appeal to the court of appeals. Banker v. Banker, 63 N. Y. 406.

And in Hancock v. Peaty, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 335, 38 L. J. Prob. N. S. 57, the court declined to adjourn the case, in an action for the annulment of a marriage on the application of the respondent, where a guardian ad litem had been duly assigned to the petitioner, on a suggestion of recovery and of a desire for discontinuance of the suit for the appointment of medical men to examine her, but, being satisfied by evidence that she was insane at the time of the marriage, postponed the pronouncement of its decree to give opportunity to establish recovery, intimating that if satisfied of recovery it would not pronounce a decree except at her instance.

When the question arises collaterally in an action in equity, an issue at law is a proper mode of trying it. Keys v. Norris, 6 Rich. Eq. 383.

An action prosecuted, tried, and decided as a divorce suit under the provisions of the Code, however, cannot be considered as one prosecuted to have a void marriage pronounced a nullity. Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774.

But a libel to dissolve a marriage on the ground of mental incapacity at the time of the marriage, under the Georgia statute, is to be filed and tried, and is subject to all the incidents regulating the practice in divorce cases. Brown v. Westbrook, 27 Ga. 102.

And while the Florida statute with reference to alimony to a wife refers exclusively to divorce cases, where the suit is brought by the alleged hus-to confirm the report, as the clerk acted on it by appointing the guardian, the confirmation would have been presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, on the maxim, Omnia præsuntur rite acta. The jury found, further, that Nancy E. Sims did not have mental capacity to enter into the marriage with the defendant on the 14th of November, 1898; but this was unnecessary, as the marriage with a declared lunatic was ipso facto void. Craun v. Morgan, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447.

Affirmed.

band to obtain a decree declaring the marriage void on the ground of his incompetency at the time it was had, a court of chancery has power to grant alimony to the alleged wife independent of the statute, and as an incident of its jurisdiction in such case. Prine v. Prine, 36 Fla. 676, 34 L. R. A. 87.

And where a suit is brought by a husband against a putative wife to annul the marriage relation on the ground of his incapacity at the time it was entered into, and the fact of marriage is prima facie established, and the husband has means wherewith to live and litigate, and the wife is destitute, he will be required to furnish her the means of subsistence while the action is pending, to enable her to maintain her defense. Prine v. Prine, 36 Fla. 676, 34 L. R. A. 87.

And the allowance to a wife in an action by her husband for the annulment of their marriage upon the ground of his incapacity at the time it was entered into, upon proper showing, of temporary alimony, counsel fees, and suit money while the suit is pending in the appellate court, is not an exercise of original jurisdiction, but is essential to the proper and impartial administration of justice in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction. Prine v. Prine, 36 Fla. 676, 34 L. R. A. 87.

So, in Lea v. Lea, 104 N. C. 603, which was an action for the annulment of a marriage on the ground that the husband had a wife living at the time of the pretended marriage, it was held that such an action is an action for divorce, and alimony pendente lite may be allowed.

As to procedure in divorce cases when husband or wife becomes insane, see note to Mohler v. Shank (Iowa) 34 L. R. A. 161.

c. Effect.

Where a man marries a woman the relation of husband and wife is prima facie established, and so long as he voluntarily continues such a relation he subjects himself to the continued obligation of providing her with suitable support; and where the marriage is subsequently declared void because of her insanity at the time, he cannot make the cost of her support while living and cohabiting with her a charge upon her separate estate. Gerhold v. Wyss, 18 Neb. 90.

And proof that a woman married an alleged lunatic, and continued to live and cohabit with him until he was declared a lunatic, when without fault on her part she was obliged to seek board and the necessities of life apart from him because of a committee having been appointed of his personal estate, no fraud or duress having been practised by her to bring about the marriage, does not establish that she was not his wife at the time the necessities were furnished her so as to defeat an action therefor. Stuckey v. Mathes, 24 Hun. 461.

Under Maine Rev. Stat. chap. 481, § 18, when a marriage is annulled on the ground of insanity the issue is the legitimate issue of the parent capable of contracting marriage. Unity v. Belgrade, 73 Me. 419.

And the determination of a jury that an intestate had not mental capacity to make an effectual marriage contract at the time of its solemnization cannot detract from the rights of his son to share in his estate on the ground that the marriage was absolutely void and their only child was therefore illegitimate, under N. C. Rev. Stat. chap. 30, § 1, providing that the marriage of an insane person is null and void, but that nothing therein contained shall be construed to affect or render illegitimate any child or children of the marriage. State, Setzer v. Setzer, 97 N. C. 252.

In Packer v. Windham, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 138, in which a man got a lunatic under inquisition whose person and estate were committed to the charge of another, and married her without making any settlement upon her, the husband and others concerned in the act were committed to the fleet, and all deeds and securities relating to her fortune and her jewels were ordered to be lodged with the master to secure some provision for her, if she should survive her husband, and for the children, if any, of the marriage. F. H. R.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIFTH CIRCUIT.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Piff.
in Err.,

v.

Perry C. SMITH.

(86 Fed. Rep. 292.)

1. One holding a mileage ticket, who, with intent to board a train standing on a siding near the station, without going to the station, is compelled to cross the main line, is not a passenger to whom the railroad company owes extraordinary care or diligence, but is entitled only to ordinary care as one of the general public, if he has done nothing to notify any of the officers or agents of the defendant company that he is a prospective passenger.

2. It is erroneous to give a charge, in an action for personal injuries to one struck by a train while attempting to board another train, assuming that the train was running at 8 or 10 miles an hour, and suggesting that it usually ran into the station among the passengers at that rate of speed.

3. Punitive damages cannot be recovered for injuries to one attempting to board a railroad train from being struck by another train upon the main track, which he was obliged to cross, where whistles were sounded and the bell was rung and the fireman called to such person to look out, and there was nothing to prevent him from seeing the train.

4. Recovery for injuries to one struck by a train upon a track which he was obliged to cross to reach the train which he desired to take is barred, under Ga. Code, § 3880, providing that if the plaintiff by ordinary care could have avoided the consequence to himself caused by defendant's negligence he is not entitled to recover, if such person failed to use his senses to ascertain the approach of the train, and could have avoided the consequence of the company's negligence by the exercise of ordinary care.

NOTE.—As to when a person who has started for a train becomes a passenger, see note to Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co. (Mass.) 24 L. R. A. 521; Wood v. 40 L. R. A.

Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 35 L. R. A. 199; Western & A. R. Co. v. Voils (Ga.) 25 L. R. A. 655; also Illinois C. R. Co. v. O'Keefe (Ill.) 39 L. R. A. 148.

5. A verdict for defendant should be directed in an action against a railroad company for personal injuries to one struck by a train, where the accident occurred in the daytime, and the injured person was in possession of sight and hearing, and the undisputed testimony is that the train could have been seen from 20 yards to $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile before it reached the place of the accident, notwithstanding his testimony that he looked for the train and did not see it.

(March 29, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Georgia, Western Division, to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence.

Reversed.

On September 16, 1895, a train was standing on a siding near the depot in the town of Eastman, Georgia, waiting for the schedule time to arrive for its departure. Plaintiff having a mileage ticket, after having placed his baggage on the train and gone to a store near by, attempted to get on board of the train. In order to do so he was compelled to cross the main track and walk along the railroad a short distance. While he was so engaged he was struck by the engine of a train coming from the opposite direction and injured.

Further facts appear in the opinions.

Before Purdee and McCormick, Circuit Judges, and Shoayne, District Judge.

Messrs. DeLacy & Bishop, for plaintiff in error:

When the evidence demands a verdict for defendant, and no other verdict could properly be rendered under the evidence and under the law applicable in the case, it is the duty of the court to direct and instruct such a verdict.

Elliott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 150 U. S. 245, 87 L. ed. 1068; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Pounds, 49 U. S. App. 476, 82 Fed. Rep. 217, 27 C. C. A. 112.

The doctrine of contributory negligence does not apply to cases where the plaintiff's own negligence is the sole cause of the injury, or where, by the exercise of ordinary care, he could have avoided the consequences to himself caused by the defendant's negligence.

Butterfield v. Forrester, 11 East, 60; Western & A. R. Co. v. Bloomingdale, 74 Ga. 618; Blitch v. Central R. Co. 76 Ga. 335.

If plaintiff was crossing the street, and the bell was not ringing so as to warn him, yet if he saw the approach of the engine in time to get away, he could by ordinary care have prevented the effect of defendant's negligence. Section 2972 of the Code applies, and he cannot recover.

Central R. Co. v. Harris, 76 Ga. 508; Smith v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 82 Ga. 804.

40 L. R. A.

A passenger owes it to himself, and to the railroad company, not to expose himself to danger, and an injury resulting from an attempt to alight from a rapidly moving train will afford no cause of action, because the passenger could avoid such injury by ordinary care.

McLarin v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. 85 Ga. 504.

Where it affirmatively appears from the evidence that the defendant company was not, relatively to the plaintiff, guilty of any negligence, and also that the latter, by the use of ordinary care, might have avoided the injury he received, the court was right in granting a nonsuit.

Martin v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 95 Ga. 361.

Without regard to the question of the defendant's negligence, the evidence introduced by the plaintiff showed that by the exercise of ordinary care he might have avoided injury, he cannot recover, and it is a proper case for a nonsuit.

Ashworth v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 97 Ga. 807.

The denying of probative force, even to direct and affirmative testimony, when such testimony is plainly at war with the physical facts and surroundings, has passed into precedent.

Payne v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 136 Mo. 562; Arts v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 34 Iowa, 153; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Pounds, 49 U. S. App. 476, 82 Fed. Rep. 217, 27 C. C. A. 112.

Negligence of a railroad company in not ringing the bell or sounding the whistle near the crossing of a highway does not relieve a person who is about to pass over the highway from the obligation to employ his sense of hearing and seeing in order to ascertain if a train is approaching.

Wilcox v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 39 N. Y. 358, 100 Am. Dec. 440; Pyle v. Clark, 75 Fed. Rep. 644; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Pounds, 49 U. S. App. 476, 82 Fed. Rep. 217, 27 C. C. A. 112; Childress v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 94 Va. 186; Markham v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 119 N. C. 715.

It is the duty of the pedestrian at the street crossing of a railway to look carefully for an approaching train, and, if the view is obstructed, to listen before attempting to cross the track; otherwise, he will himself be guilty of negligence, which will prevent his recovery for an injury received at the crossing.

Berkeley v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 11; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224.

Every person is bound to know that a railroad crossing is a dangerous place, and he is guilty of negligence unless he approaches it as if it were dangerous.

2 Thomp. Trials, pp. 1299, 1300; Baker v. Western & A. R. Co. 68 Ga. 744; Central R. Co. v. Brinson, 70 Ga. 227; Parker v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 86 N. C. 221; Americus, P. & L. R. Co. v. Luckie, 87 Ga. 7; Pennsylvania Co. v. Sinclair, 62 Ind. 801, 30 Am. Rep. 185.

No person shall recover from a railroad company for an injury to himself caused by his own negligence.

Central R. Co. v. Brinson, 70 Ga. 208; Central R. Co. v. Thompson, 76 Ga. 781; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. ed. 97; 41 Cent. L. J. 312.

Messrs. A. O. Bacon, A. L. Miller, and William Brunson for defendant in error.

Swayne, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The case comes to this court upon writ of error containing twenty-one separate specifications founded upon fifteen special requests by defendant to charge, which the court refused, and upon exceptions to the charge as given by the court. The first error we would notice upon the record is that in which the court treated the plaintiff below as a passenger, and charged the jury that the defendant below owed him extraordinary care and diligence as such passenger. We think plaintiff below was not a passenger in the contemplation of law. He was not upon the train, had not been to the depot recently, nor purchased a ticket, and did nothing to notify any of the officers or agents of the defendant company that he was even a prospective passenger. The company did not owe him extraordinary care or diligence as such passenger, but only ordinary care as to the general public.

We think the court erred in charging the jury, as recited in the eighteenth specification of error, in which it assumed to be a fact that the train was running at 8 or 10 miles per hour, when it injured the plaintiff below, and further suggested to the jury that it usually ran into the station among the passengers at that rate of speed.

We think the requests contained in twelfth and thirteenth assignments of error, that there was no allegation or proof to justify or uphold a verdict for punitive damages, were erroneously refused, and that this was error.

Another question arising out of many of the assignments of error, and embodied in many of the special requests to charge by defendant below, is the question whether the injury to plaintiff below was caused by his negligence; that if, by the exercise of ordinary care, the plaintiff could have avoided the consequence caused by defendant's negligence, if defendant was negligent, then he could not recover. This request to charge the law long established both by the statutes and decisions of the state of Georgia as well as the decisions of courts generally was repeatedly requested by the defendant below, and was as repeatedly refused by the court. This doctrine is so well established, and is of such long standing, and upon which the courts of the country are so unanimous, that we should not stop to make any citations to sustain it if it was not so pointedly questioned by the record. First, § 8880 (2972) of the Code of Georgia reads as follows: "If the plaintiff by ordinary care could have avoided the consequences to himself caused by the defendant's negligence, he is not entitled to recover. But in other cases the defendant is not relieved, although the plaintiff may in some way have contributed to the injury sustained."

In such cases the doctrine of contributory negligence does not apply. In Western & A. R. Co. v. Bloomingdale, 74 Ga. 604, Branham, J., indorses this doctrine; and, after quoting from several Georgia as well as noted English decisions to sustain it, adds: "These cases were followed and made the basis of the opinion of this court in Branan v. May, 17 Ga. 136, and doubtless that case, as well as its citations, were duly considered by our codifiers in drafting §§ 2972 and 3034 of the Code."

In Blitch v. Central R. Co. 76 Ga. 335, Blandford, J., indorses the above doctrine, and adds: "So it appears that the plaintiff, in trying to make out his case, made out a full and perfect defense for the defendant, rebutting all presumption of negligence against it." See also Central R. Co. v. Harris, 76 Ga. 508, by Jackson, Ch. J.

In Enright v. Atlanta, 78 Ga. 297, Jackson, Ch. J., correctly states the law as follows: "Our view of the law is that to prevent his recovery, he must have been not only lacking in ordinary care and diligence to avoid injury, but that by that ordinary care and diligence, had he used them, he could have avoided the injury."

In Smith v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. (a case in which the facts are similar in many respects to those at bar, except it was established that the company was negligent) 82 Ga. 804, Bleckley, Ch. J., announces the law of Georgia and the construction of § 2972 of the Code as follows: "It is beyond dispute that the railroad company was negligent. It failed to give the signals, to check the train at public crossings, and was running at a speed altogether too high. Enough and more than enough appears to fix liability upon the company if only its negligence were involved. But the evidence makes the plaintiff's negligence quite as apparent as that of the company: not only so, but it shows in the fullest and clearest light that by the use of ordinary care he could have avoided the consequences to himself of the company's negligence; and that being so, the Code, § 2972, declares in express terms that he is not entitled to recover. This rule of law it is that bars him, and renders a recovery impossible. It is idle to try to evade the rule by dwelling upon the negligence of the company, for unless there is negligence of the company which would otherwise render it liable, the rule we are considering would have no place in the law. It is only where there is negligence the consequences of which are to be shunned, that the plaintiff is charged with the duty of shunning them if he can do so by the exercise of ordinary care. His failure in this respect does not stop with reducing the amount of his damages, but defeats a recovery altogether. Western & A. R. Co. v. Bloomingdale, 74 Ga. 604, and cases cited in the able opinion of Branham, J. Nor is this mere Georgia law dependent on a local statute, but the principle prevails elsewhere."

This rule applies to a passenger as well as to the general public at railroad crossings. See McLarin v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. 85 Ga. 504; see also Ashworth v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 97 Ga. 307. The above doctrine is fully supported by Markham v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 119 N. C. 715, and by Berkeley v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 11, and in Chi-

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542, in which Mr. Justice Field, after commenting upon the charge of the court below as misleading, and upon facts not before it, indorses the above doctrine in the following language: "The failure of the engineer to sound the whistle or ring the bell, if such were the fact, did not relieve the deceased from the necessity of taking ordinary precautions for her safety. Negligence of the company's employees in these particulars was no excuse for negligence on her part. She was bound to listen and to look before attempting to cross the railroad track, in order to avoid an approaching train, and not to walk carelessly into the place of possible danger. Had she used her senses, she could not have failed both to hear and see the train which was coming. If she omitted to use them, and walked thoughtlessly upon the track, she was guilty of culpable negligence, and so far contributed to her injuries as to deprive her of any right to complain of others. If, using them, she saw the train coming, and yet undertook to cross the track, instead of waiting for the train to pass, and was injured, the consequences of her mistake and temerity cannot be cast upon the defendant. No railroad company can be held for a failure of experiments of that kind. If one chooses, in such a position, to take risks, he must bear the possible consequences of failure. Upon the facts disclosed by the undisputed evidence in the case we cannot see any ground for a recovery by the plaintiff. Not even a plausible pretext for the verdict can be suggested, unless we wander from the evidence into the region of conjecture and speculation. Under these circumstances, the court would not have erred had it instructed the jury, as requested, to render a verdict for the defendant." See also Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224.

The only remaining error we have to notice is that raised by the first assignment of the request of defendant's counsel at the conclusion of all the evidence to direct and instruct a verdict in favor of the defendant on the grounds that the evidence demanded such a verdict, and that no other verdict could properly be rendered under the evidence and under the law applicable in this case. There can be no doubt of the right and duty of the court to do so when the evidence introduced shows that by the exercise of ordinary care he might have avoided the injury. It is the undisputed testimony in the case that the approaching train could be seen from 200 yards to $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile before it reached the point where the accident occurred. It was daytime, and the plaintiff below was in possession of sight and hearing. All other witnesses saw it approaching, and most of them heard the bell. It is true that when plaintiff below was asked by counsel to state in his own way the circumstances of the injury, in his answer thereto he states no less than four times in the first paragraph that he looked for the train; but this was not and cannot be true. It never should have been submitted to the jury, and it is too much to ask this court to affirm a judgment upon a statement so evidently false. The train was in sight, and he either did not look, or, if he did, he saw it; he would be obliged to see it.

40 L. R. A.

When there is any question to leave to the jury, they should determine it; but when the testimony of a witness is so absolutely incredible as to be impossible of belief, the court should so determine. This was done in Ashworth v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 97 Ga. 307, and in Payne v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 186 Mo. 562, and was approved by Thayer, J., in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Pounds, 49 U. S. App. 476, 82 Fed. Rep. 217, 27 C. C. A. 112. The comments of the court in the Payne Case seem so appropriate to the facts of this case that we conclude the opinion by an extract therefrom:

"But in this instance it is plainly proved beyond peradventure that this statement of plaintiff 'that he did all in his power to ascertain whether there were any trains approaching,' etc., was not, and indeed could not be, true. This matter of denying probative force, even to direct and affirmative testimony, when such testimony is plainly at war with the physical facts and surroundings, has passed into precedent. Thus, in the leading case of Arts v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 34 Iowa, 158, it is said: 'But it is urged by the appellee's counsel that the plaintiff testifies that he did both look and listen to see and hear the train, but did not; and that this testimony shows that he was not guilty of contributory negligence, or, at the very least, it made that a question of fact for the jury. The difficulty, however, with the position is that, the conceded or undisputed facts being true, this testimony cannot, in the very nature of things, be true. It constitutes, therefore, no conflict. Suppose the fact is conceded that the sun was shining bright and clear at a specified time, and a witness, having good eyes, should testify that at the time he looked and did not see it shine. Could this testimony be true? The witness may have been told that it was necessary to prove in the case that he did look and did not see the sun shine; he may have thought of it with a desire that it should have been so: he may have made himself first believe that it was so, and this belief may have ripened into a conviction of its verity, and, possibly, he even may testify to it in the self-consciousness of integrity. But, after all, in the very nature of things, it cannot be true, and hence cannot, in the law, form any basis for a conflict upon which to rest a verdict. A man may possibly think he sees an object, which has no existence in fact, but which it may be difficult, if not impossible, to prove did not exist or was not seen. But an object and power of sight being conceded, the one may not negative the other. In this case the plaintiff had good eyes; the train was approaching him in the night, with the engine's headlight burning brightly; if the plaintiff looked he must have seen it, or he must have looked very negligently and carelessly—in either case he was necessarily, in the eyes of the law, guilty of contributory negligence, precluding his right to recover.'"

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the court below to award a new trial.

McCormick, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

I cannot concur with my brethren in the decision of this case. I do not draw from the testimony the same conclusions that they announce. I think there was a substantial conflict in the testimony as to the rate of speed of the incoming train, and as to the distance to the point at which the train came into plain view, and that these matters are not so well established by the proof as requires or permits the court to find, as matter of law, that the testimony of the defendant in error to the effect that he did look, and did not see the train, "is not and cannot be true." And, in my judgment, the state of the proof in the case requires that it should be submitted to the jury. I say nothing about the manner in which it was submitted to the jury, because this court, as I understand it, reverses the case on the ground that it should have been withdrawn from the jury, holding that the proof conclusively shows that want of care upon the part of defendant in error, which would bar him from recovery, without regard to the negligence of the plaintiff in error. My understanding of the proof is that it shows that the defendant in error had placed his baggage on the outgoing train, upon which he intended to take passage, and, as that the train was stopped for dinner, he stepped across the way, to some business house, while his train was waiting, and he was returning to his train at the time he received the injury. I do not understand the force of the suggestion that he had not been to the depot, nor purchased a ticket, nor notified any of the officers or agents of the defendant company that he was even a prospective passenger. He had a ticket. Therefore he did not need to purchase another. He put his baggage upon the train. I cannot see what occasion he had to go to the depot, unless it is intended to hold that a man cannot be a passenger on a road until he notifies some officer or agent of the carrier that he is a passenger, which I presume the court does not intend to hold. My view being that the defendant in error was a passenger within the meaning of the law applicable to the diligence that devolves upon such carriers, and that there was such a conflict in the testimony with reference to the speed of the train, and the distance at which it could have been seen, it was proper to submit the issues to the jury, and let them weigh the testimony, and pass on the questions of negligence.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Irene DUFFY, Appt.,

v.

Mary J. HARRIS.

(.....Ark.....)

A married woman does not, by abandoning her husband and living apart from him in another state, even though in adultery, forfeit her right to his homestead, under Const. 1874, art. 9, § 6, providing that if the owner of a homestead die leaving a "widow" the same shall be exempt, and the rents and profits thereof shall vest in her during her natural life.

(April 23, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lee County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate as the homestead of Dan Harris, deceased. Affirmed.

Statement by Hughes, J.:

To an action of ejectment brought by the appellee, the widow of Dan Harris, deceased, against the appellant, the daughter of the said Dan Harris, to recover possession of the homestead of the deceased, the appellant answered, in substance, that the appellee had, before the death of said Dan Harris, wilfully deserted and abandoned her husband, the said Dan Harris, and the homestead in suit, wholly without provocation, and removed, against his protest and earnest entreaties, to the state of Tennessee, where she continuously resided, until after the death of said Dan Harris on said homestead; that plaintiff, as the defendant believed, had, while so absent, lived in adultery; that, though earnestly and persistently persuaded by her husband to return to her home, she persistently refused and failed to do so, until after the death of the said Dan Harris; that she, the appellee, by such conduct, had forfeited her right to the homestead. Upon motion, so much of the answer as set up an abandonment and desertion of Dan Harris, and her alleged immoral and unchaste conduct, was stricken out, over the protest of the defendant, to which she excepted. The grounds of the motion were that said portion of the answer constituted no defense, and was wholly irrelevant to the issue. The court gave judgment for appellee. Defendant moved for new trial, which was denied, to which she excepted, and appealed to this court.

Mr. James P. Brown, for appellant:

If a wife refuses to occupy the homestead of her husband while he is living, and she actually lives in another state, is it the policy of our law for her to so disgrace it, and then, as soon as the breath has left his body, for her to return and claim the homestead to the exclusion of the dead husband's heirs and creditors? It was for the benefit of no such wife that our homestead laws were made.

Trawick v. Harris, 8 Tex. 312; Cockrell v. Curtis, 83 Tex. 105; Earle v. Earle, 9 Tex. 630; Sears v. Sears, 45 Tex. 559; Newland v. Holland, 45 Tex. 588; Prater v. Prater, 87 Tenn. 78; Farnell Brick, T. & C. Shingle Co. v. McKenna, 86 Mich. 283; Thompson, Homesteads & Exemptions, §§ 73-76; Dickman v. Birkhauser, 16 Neb. 686.

No court would suggest that a husband should apply for a divorce merely as an aid to his preventing his wife or widow from ever enjoying, or coming into possession of his property.

NOTE.—For misconduct of wife to forfeit her rights in the husband's estate, see also cases in note to Adams v. Storey (Ill.) 11 L. R. A. on page 791; and also the case of Rosholt v. Mehus (N. D.) 23 L. R. A. 230, and note.

40 L. R. A.

1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. § 38.

Is there any reason in the case at bar why appellee should not be estopped to claim homestead, as regards the lot in suit?

Nuhn v. Miller, 5 Wash. 405, 84 Am. St. Rep. 868, and cases in footnote; Pickens v. Gildam, 43 La. Ann. 350.

A wife cannot force her husband to support her during her wrongful absence from him.

2 Kent, Com. p. 146.

If she can thus renounce such support, why not also homestead support?

1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 1228-1284.

Since the reason of antiquated rules, growing out of the ancient disabilities of married women, no longer exists, on account of the enfranchising spirit of modern laws, the rules themselves should be no longer enforced.

Sidway v. Nichol, 62 Ark. 146; Prater v. Prater, 87 Tenn. 78.

Messrs. McCulloch & McCulloch, for appellee:

Two rules have been established, one by the Texas courts to the effect that such conduct of the wife works a forfeiture of the claim of homestead after the death of the husband, and the other, the New Hampshire court, holding the opposite.

Trawick v. Harris, 8 Tex. 312; Earle v. Earle, 9 Tex. 630; Sears v. Sears, 45 Tex. 559; Newland v. Holland, 45 Tex. 588; Meador v. Place, 43 N. H. 308; Atkinson v. Atkinson, 40 N. H. 249, 77 Am. Dec. 712; Thompson, Homesteads & Exemptions, §§ 8, 73-77; Hairston v. Hairston, 27 Miss. 704, 61 Am. Dec. 530; Lies v. De Diablar, 12 Cal. 327; Christie's Succession, 20 La. Ann. 383, 96 Am. Dec. 411.

The constitutional provision clearly makes the right of the widow depend on her legal status as wife and widow, and not upon her de facto relations to the family or the occupancy of the property, thus bringing it squarely within the New Hampshire doctrine.

Johnston v. Turner, 29 Ark. 290; Hairston v. Hairston, 27 Miss. 704, 61 Am. Dec. 530; Meador v. Place, 43 N. H. 307, and Lies v. De Diablar, 12 Cal. 327; Gates v. Steele, 48 Ark. 539; Memphis & L. R. R. Co. v. Adams, 46 Ark. 159.

Hughes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The homestead provision for the widow (Const. 1874, art. 9, § 6) is as follows: "If the owner of a homestead die, leaving a widow but no children, and said widow has no separate homestead in her own right, the same shall be exempt, and the rents and profits thereof shall vest in her during her natural life, provided that if the owner leaves children, one or more, said child or children shall share with said widow and be entitled to half the rents and profits till each of them arrives at twenty-one years of age—each child's rights to cease at twenty-one years of age—and the shares to go to the younger children, and then all to 40 L. R. A.

go to the widow, and provided that said widow or children may reside on the homestead or not; and in case of the death of the widow all of said homestead shall be vested in the minor children of the testator or intestate." It would seem that the language of this section of the Constitution settles the question involved in this suit. The appellee had never been divorced from her husband, and she was unquestionably his widow. How, then, can she be debarred of her homestead right without reading into the Constitution an exception or provision it does not contain, to the effect that if the wife abandon her husband, and is guilty of immoral and unwifely conduct, she shall forfeit her right thereby to the homestead? We think such a construction unwarranted and untenable. We are aware that it has been held otherwise in Texas and some other states. Trawick v. Harris, 8 Tex. 312; Earle v. Earle, 9 Tex. 630; Sears v. Sears, 45 Tex. 559; Prater v. Prater, 87 Tenn. 78; Farwell Brick, T. & C. Shingle Co. v. McKenna, 86 Mich. 283. On the other hand, we find that in the case of Meador v. Place, 43 N. H. 308, and cases therein cited, it is held that the abandonment by the wife of her husband, and living apart from him, in another state, does not forfeit her right to the homestead upon the death of the husband. In this state it is held that the domicile of the wife follows that of the husband; and we understand this to be the rule, and that the fact that she abandons her husband, and lives apart from him, in another state, will not form an exception or cause her to forfeit her right to the homestead. She is not a nonresident, while her husband is a resident. Her legal status as to this is governed by that of the husband. Meador v. Place, 43 N. H. 308; Johnston v. Turner, 29 Ark. 280, and cases; Thompson, Homesteads & Exemptions, §§ 73, 77; Atkinson v. Atkinson, 40 N. H. 249, 77 Am. Dec. 712. "The wife, though living separate, might have returned to her duty at any time." He owed her protection and support as long as the relation of husband and wife existed by law. And the desertion of the wife could not alter his legal status. He was still the head of a family, entitled to a homestead; and as long as the relation of husband and wife existed de jure, the appellee was his wife, and at his death was his "widow," and entitled, under the Constitution, to the right of homestead. Const. 1874, art. 9, § 6; Gates v. Steele, 48 Ark. 539; Stanley v. Snyder, 53 Ark. 429.

A majority of the court is of the opinion that, under the Constitution and laws of this state, the appellee is, in law, the widow of Dan Harris, and that she has not, by her abandonment of him, and living apart from him, in another state, forfeited her right to his homestead, however reprehensible her conduct morally may have been.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore affirmed.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

James W. JONES, Appt.,

v.

T. Albert SKINNER et al.

(.....Md.....)

1. The right to vote in the district in which a steamer is tied up while at her home port is not acquired by the purser, who lives on the steamer, but who had previously acquired a voting residence in another district of the city.
2. The fact that a person is improperly and illegally permitted to vote at another place will not alone disqualify him from continuing to vote at his actual residence.

(May 13, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the Superior Court of Baltimore City striking his name from the register of qualified voters. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George Weems Williams, for appellant:

To acquire a residence by choice, one must remove to this state, or, being an actual resident of the state, he must remove from one county to another with the bona fide intention of abandoning his former place of residence and of making this state or the county to which he removes his actual home for a definite or an indefinite period of time.

Shaeffer v. Gilbert, 73 Md. 71.

The appellant must, therefore, show: (1) The existence of a bona fide intention on his part to abandon his former residence in the second legislative district; (2) the existence of a bona fide intention on his part to make the third legislative district his actual home, and that he has continued to reside therein with that intention for six months or more.

No facts could more strongly show a bona fide intention to abandon than those presented by the record in this case.

How can Jones possibly have any intention of returning to his room in a house, when that house has been vacant for two years?

If a person is residing at a particular place, and there is doubt as to whether he is residing there temporarily, and claiming another place as his home, if he claims and exercises the right to vote at the place where he is for the time residing, that fact ought to be regarded as evidence well nigh conclusive that he has abandoned his former residence, and determined to make his home where he claims his vote.

McCrary, Elections, § 34, p. 32.

"Residence" does not mean one's permanent place of abode, where he intends to live all his days, or for an indefinite or unlimited time; nor does it mean one's residence for a temporary purpose, with the intention of returning to his former residence when that purpose shall have been accomplished, but means one's actual home, in the sense of having no other home, whether he intends to reside there permanently or for a definite or indefinite length of time.

Shaeffer v. Gilbert, 73 Md. 71; Langhammer v. Munter, 80 Md. 518, 27 L. R. A. 330.

"Residence" does not of necessity mean living in a house.

Langhammer v. Munter, 80 Md. 526, 27 L. R. A. 330; Re Collins, 64 How. Pr. 63.

Messrs. John C. Rose and Harry W. Henderson for appellees.

Briscoe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The material facts of this case are almost identical with the case of Howard v. Skinner (decided at this term of court), post, 753, except in one particular, which will be briefly stated in this opinion. The appellant, Jones, testified that he moved to Baltimore city from St. Mary's county about seven years ago, and considers Baltimore his home; that he was employed by the Weems Steamboat Company as purser of the steamer Sue; that he first resided on Lexington street, near Gilmor (nineteenth ward, second legislative district); he then moved to 403 North Paca street (tenth ward, second legislative district); and from there he moved to the steamer Sue (Pier No. 9, Light Street wharf, the third legislative district), where he has been for two years, except the period of two months of the winter of 1896, when he resided at 416 West Fayette street (tenth ward, second legislative district); that he had never voted anywhere else except in the city of Baltimore, where he had voted four times; the first time he voted from Lexington street, and then twice from Paca street; and that he was now registered from the steamer Sue, Pier 9, Light Street wharf (third legislative district), and had voted at the previous election from there. He further testified that the steamer remained in Baltimore only two days in each week; that Baltimore is the home port of the steamer; that the schedule of the steamer was as follows: Leave Baltimore on Saturday at 5 P. M. for Washington, remaining at the terminus in that city from eight to sixteen hours, and returning to Baltimore on the following Wednesday; leave Baltimore on Wednesday night at 9 P. M. for the Patuxent river, arriving in Baltimore again on Saturday morning.

Now, it is conceded that the appellant possessed all the qualifications of a legal voter except that of residence, and there can be no question, it seems to us, that he has also acquired a legal residence in the city of Baltimore but not in the third legislative district of that city, as claimed by him. The fact that he resided upon the steamer Sue, while tied to its wharf or pier, does not, as held by this court in the recent case of Howard v. Skinner, fix or establish a voting residence. Nor does the fact that the appellant was improperly and erroneously registered and voted at a prior election in this district change or determine his residence. The sole ground relied upon by the appellant to establish residence, on the prior registration, was the fact that he resided upon the steamer while tied up in the district where he proposed to register; and this, we have distinctly held, is not sufficient to constitute a voting residence. If a person is clearly a resident of and legal voter in one place, and is improperly and illegally permitted to vote at another, that fact alone will not disqualify him from continuing to vote at the place of his actual residence. Lincoln v. Hapgood, 11 Mass. 350. The appellant did not acquire then such a residence in the first precinct of the fifteenth ward of the third legislative district as entitled him to be registered there, but, having acquired a residence in the city of Baltimore, he is entitled to be registered and to vote in the ward of the legislative district from which he removed, until he has acquired a residence elsewhere. For these reasons, the order of the court will be affirmed.

NOTE.—On the question of the domicile of a person for voting purposes, see also Langhammer v. Munter (Md.) 27 L. R. A. 330.

On the question how far the right to vote is absolute, see State, Allison, v. Blake (N. J.) 25 L. R. A. 430, and note; also State v. Old (Tenn.) 31 L. R. A. 337; see also the companion case of Howard v. Skinner (Md.) post, 753.

40 L. R. A.

Order affirmed with costs.

Wallace HOWARD, Appt.,

v.

T. Albert SKINNER et al.

(.....Md.....)

A voting residence at the home port of a steamer is not acquired by a clerk who sleeps in a room on the boat, and who has no other room or place to live, and is unmarried.

(May 12, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the Superior Court of Baltimore City striking his name from the registry list of qualified voters. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William S. Bryan, Jr., and George Weems Williams for appellant.

Messrs. John C. Rose and Harry W. Henderson for appellees.

Briscoe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 26th of October, 1897, Robert W. Perry, Jr., of Baltimore, filed a petition under act 1896, chap. 202, in the superior court of Baltimore city, wherein he alleged that the appellant, Wallace Howard, who professes to reside aboard the steamer Westmoreland, of the Weems Steamboat Company, at Pier 2, Light Street wharf, Baltimore, and who is registered as a qualified voter, in the first election precinct of the fifteenth ward (third legislative district), was not a qualified voter, entitled to be so registered; and, from an order of the court directing his name to be stricken from the list of registered voters for this precinct and ward, this appeal has been taken.

It appears from the record that, at the trial of the case, the appellant, Howard, who was the only witness examined, testified that he had been employed as clerk of the Weems Steamboat Company for over three years; that the steamer upon which he was employed was engaged in the transportation of passengers and merchandise between the city of Baltimore, the Kappahannock and Patuxent rivers, with its home port in the city of Baltimore; that he was unmarried, and had a room upon the steamer, where he slept; that he had never voted either in Baltimore or elsewhere. He also testified that he came to Baltimore from St. Mary's county, where he would return in the event of losing employment; that he had no room or other place to live except on the boat; that he had lived with his aunt on Preston street, in the second legislative district of Baltimore, about one or two weeks before he was employed by the steamboat company. There was other evidence tending to establish the qualification of the appellant as a voter; but, as it is conceded that he possessed all the necessary qualifications prescribed by the Constitution of the state except that of residence, it need not be more fully stated for the purposes of this case.

It is quite apparent, under the facts of the case, that the appellant never acquired a voting residence in the city of Baltimore, unless his alleged residence upon the steamer, while temporarily lying at her pier at Light Street wharf, in the city of Baltimore, gave him one. The appellant's domicile of origin was St. Mary's county, and this continued until he acquired another elsewhere. By the express terms of § 1 of article 1 of our Constitution, a person who shall have acquired a residence in a county or city of the state, entitling him to vote at an election there held, shall be entitled to vote in the election district from which he removed, until he shall have acquired a residence in the part of the county or city to which he has removed. McLane v. Hobbs, 74 Md. 171; Shaeffer v. Gilbert, 73 Md. 66. And in Turner v. Crosby, 85 Md. 180, this court said, in construing article 23 of chapter 202 of the Acts of 1896 (the present registration law of the state), that, in determining whether any person is or is not a resident of any voting precinct, it shall be presumed that, if a person is shown to have acquired a residence in one locality, he retains the same until it is affirmatively shown that he has acquired a residence in another locality.

The next question, then, is, Did the appellant acquire a voting residence in the city of Baltimore by residing upon the steamer, in the manner as stated by him? Now, the rule of law seems to be settled that a seaman or seagoing man retains his domicile of origin, although he is regularly employed on a steamer, unless, by actual residence, he acquires a domicile elsewhere. In Thorndike v. Boston, 1 Met. 245, Chief Justice Shaw states the rule thus: "If a seaman without family or property, sails from the place of his nativity, which may be considered his domicile of origin, although he may return only at long intervals, or even be absent for many years, yet if he does not, by some actual residence or other means, acquire a domicile elsewhere, he retains his domicile of origin." And to the like effect are the cases of Sherwood v. Judd, 3 Bradf.

NOTE.—See the preceding case of Jones v. Skinner (Md.) ante, 752, and footnote.

276; Bangs v. Brewster, 111 Mass. 885; Long v. Ryan, 80 Gratt. 718; Desobats v. Berquier, 1 Binn. 849, note a, 2 Am. Dec. 448; Re Bye, 2 Daly, 525; Fry's Case, 71 Pa. 302, 10 Am. Rep. 698; and also Cooley, Const. Lim. 755; Story, Confl. L. 55; Dacey, Domicil, 139; and Jacobs, Domicil, 395. And this, we think, is the safe rule to be adopted and applied in cases similar to the one now under consideration. The appellant's domicil of origin continued until another domicil was acquired, and, as he could acquire no new residence where the steamer happened to stop or to have her wharf, he did not lose his original residence. If a person could gain a voting residence by simply residing upon a steamboat, because it was temporarily fastened to a pier or wharf, while discharging its freight and taking on its cargo, then one might acquire any number of residences, and would have the right to register at either terminus of the steamer, or at any point where the steamer stops. "Residence," as contemplated by the framers of our Constitution, for political or voting purposes, means a place of fixed present domicil. The object in prescribing residence as a qualification for the exercise of the right of suffrage, says this court in Shaeffer v.

Gilbert, 73 Md. 70, is not merely for the purpose of identifying the voter, and as a protection against fraud, but also that he should become in fact a member of the community, and, as such, have a common interest in all matters pertaining to its government. Residence upon a steamer like that claimed by the appellant has none of the characteristics of a fixed or permanent abode, within the meaning of our Constitution as entitles a person to be registered as a qualified voter. If the contention of the appellant in this case was sustained, then a steamboat company could fix the legal residence of its employees, who reside upon its steamers, by simply changing its pier or wharf. The case of Re Collins, 64 How. Pr. 63, relied upon by the appellant, is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. It has no application to the residence of a voter, as prescribed by the Constitution of our state. It follows, then, the ruling of the court below that the name of the appellant, Wallace Howard, be stricken from the list of qualified and registered voters of the fifteenth ward of Baltimore, was correct, and its order will be affirmed.

Order affirmed, with costs.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Ellen M. BAKER et al., Trustees, etc.,
v.

Z. Adams WILLARD et al., Trustees, etc.

Harriet M. LOWELL

v.

SAME.

(.....Mass.....)

- 1. The easement or right in respect to light and air from an open space annexed to a mansion-house estate, created by will by providing that the establishment shall continue as much as possible unchanged, does not amount to a general right to have the space kept open for the whole extent of the court, but only to an ordinary easement of light and air for the windows and doors of existing buildings, where there was no communication or entrance to the court from the mansion-house estate, and its only use of the court was for light and air and for a drain.
- 2. The right to have a court kept open is not created by estoppel by bounding land thereon in a deed by an administrator selling land under a license of the probate court.
- 3. A tenant in common cannot create an easement over the premises without consent of his cotenants.
- 4. The doctrine that an easement appurtenant to a close is appurtenant to every parcel into which that close may be divided is not applicable to an easement of light and air which ordinarily is limited to windows and doors or other apertures in a building.

NOTE.—For American law as to easements of light and air, see notes to Case v. Minot (Mass.) 22 L. R. A. 526; and Jones v. Millsaps (Miss.) 23 L. R. A. 158.
40 L. R. A.

- 5. The right of a passage on foot over a space not less than 3½ feet in width does not include the right to have the passage kept open to the sky.

(May 20, 1898.)

RESERVATION by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the full bench of suits brought to enjoin defendants from closing a passageway. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. L. S. Dabney, F. V. Balch, F. Rackemann, L. I. Partridge, and Hutchins & Wheeler for plaintiffs.

Messrs. Solomon Lincoln, William A. Munroe, and Henry H. Sprague, for defendants.

The plaintiffs claim an easement of light and air in the whole of the court, and the right to have it kept open and unobstructed.

Such rights as are claimed, however they may be designated, must be acquired by express grant. They are in substance rights to light and air, and such rights cannot be established by implication or prescription.

Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80.

There were no easements over the Jeffries estate in favor of the mansion-house estate while Eliot lived. He acquired the mansion-house estate in 1784, and the Jeffries estate in 1799.

Carbrey v. Willis, 7 Allen, 364, 83 Am. Dec. 688; Johnson v. Jordan, 2 Met. 234, 37 Am. Dec. 85.

No easement of light and air can be created except by express grant.

Randall v. Sanderson, 111 Mass. 114; Keats

v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80; Christ Church v. Lavezolo, 156 Mass. 89.

There is nothing in the facts to justify such a construction of the will of Samuel Eliot as would make the easements claimed pass with the mansion-house estate, even if easements of light and air or open court could have been created by implication. Even then they could have been implied in Massachusetts only from necessity.

Carbrey v. Willis, 7 Allen, 364, 88 Am. Dec. 688; Randall v. McLaughlin, 10 Allen, 366; Buss v. Dyer, 125 Mass. 287.

Even in England a right of way, not of necessity, will not pass under a devise unless the testator by appropriate language shows an intention that it should pass.

Taus v. Knowles [1891] 2 Q. B. 564; Polden v. Bastard, L. R. 1 Q. B. 156.

There was no right of drainage. It was not mentioned. It could have been created by implication, if at all, only from necessity. The house was on a corner where there was ample opportunity to construct other drains.

Johnson v. Jordan, 2 Met. 234, 37 Am. Dec. 85.

Even if such easements had been created they would have been lost by a merger of title in William H. Eliot.

Riger v. Parker, 8 Cush. 145, 54 Am. Dec. 744; Atwater v. Bodfish, 11 Gray, 150.

William H. Eliot was but a tenant in common of the place, and whatever may have been the intent of his administrator he had not the power to encumber the place with easements to the prejudice of his cotenants.

Adam v. Briggs Iron Co. 7 Cush. 361; Crocker v. Cotting, 166 Mass. 183, 33 L. R. A. 245.

Whatever easements of light and air might have existed, under the English rule, in favor of the mansion house over Phillips place would have been confined to the windows of the mansion house as it then existed.

Aldin v. Clark [1894] 2 Ch. 487; Goddard, Easem. 5th ed. 1896, pp. 265, 368 et seq.

If the construction of a deed is doubtful, the practical construction put upon it by the parties and their successors may be looked at in connection with the deed itself, and the circumstances existing at the time of its execution.

Whittenton Mfg. Co. v. Staples, 164 Mass. 319, 29 L. R. A. 500; Haven v. Foster, 14 Pick. 534; Pomeroy v. Latting, 15 Gray, 435; Clark v. Brown, 3 Allen, 509; Brooks v. Whitmore, 139 Mass. 358; Winchester v. Glazier, 152 Mass. 316, 9 L. R. A. 424; Reynolds v. Boston Rubber Co. 160 Mass. 240; Humphreys v. Old Colony R. Co. 160 Mass. 323; Crocker v. Cotting, 166 Mass. 183, 33 L. R. A. 245.

The plaintiffs have seen the place occupied by the defendants and their predecessors for twenty years. They have taken no steps for enforcement of rights in the passageway, if any ever existed, or to prevent their extinguishment. If rights existed, laches prevents the maintenance of these proceedings.

Starkie v. Richmond, 155 Mass. 188.

The defendants claim and intend to exercise the right to build over the $\frac{3}{4}$ feet passageway not already built over, covering it with an arch at a height sufficient not to interfere with its use as a passageway for foot passengers. This they may do.

Atkins v. Bordman, 2 Met. 457, 37 Am. Dec. 100; Gerrish v. Shattuck, 132 Mass. 235; Burnham v. Nevins, 144 Mass. 88, 59 Am. Rep. 61; Perry v. Snow, 165 Mass. 23.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We will consider in the first place the nature and extent of the supposed original right which the plaintiffs respectively seek to establish. This right had its origin in the provisions of the will of Samuel Eliot, who died in 1820. He was the owner of the estate in Boston, on the corner of Beacon and Tremont streets, bounding south of Beacon street, and east on Tremont street. His mansion house faced on Tremont street, and the land immediately connected with it was bounded southerly by Beacon street, and northerly by an open court or space about 20 feet wide, and extended westerly to his boundary line. On the northerly side of the open court or space he had built three brick dwelling houses, which faced southerly, and were then occupied, respectively, by three of his daughters, with their husbands. Mr. Eliot's mansion house stood about 8 feet south of the southerly line of the court, having an L which extended westwardly on the same line with the mansion house. Five of the windows of the mansion house looked upon the court, and two rooms were entirely dependent on these windows for light; but there was no entrance or communication between the mansion-house estate and the court,—there being between them a fence 6 or 7 feet high, in which there was no opening. There was a drain through the court, which was used for all the four houses. Mr. Eliot, by his will, devised to the said three daughters, "severally and respectively, the brick dwelling houses, and their respective privileges and appurtenances, by them at the day of the signing of this will respectively occupied and improved; each to have and to hold their houses, and estates thereto belonging, now in their occupation; to them, their heirs and assigns forever." He devised the mansion-house estate as follows: "It is my will that my wife, Catharine Eliot, and my children who may reside with her, shall have the use of my present mansion house, and also the free use of all my plate, furniture, stores of every description in the house, and my horses and carriages, for their full enjoyment, without being responsible for any loss, consumption, or wear or injury to the same to my other children; it being my design that the family establishment shall continue, as much as possible, unchanged. The said devise of the mansion house to my wife for life is on the condition that she shall continue to reside therein personally as mistress thereof. . . . I give the reversion thereof to my son, William Harvard Eliot, his heirs and assigns, forever." After sundry other bequests and devises, not here material, he devised all the residue of his estate equally to his children, of whom there were seven. The will contained no specific devise of the land between the three dwelling houses and the mansion-house estate. At that time, as found by the master, the preservation of the space between the mansion house and the three new brick houses, as an open court, was important, if not indispensable, to the convenient and accustomed enjoyment of the mansion house, in respect of light and air, so long as the mansion house should be continued in the state and situation in which it then was. October 20, 1829, the widow of Samuel Eliot died; and William H. Eliot thereupon became, under his father's will, the owner in fee of the mansion-house estate, subject to the condition that he should personally occupy the same. By mesne conveyances, the title to the westerly brick dwelling house had come to Timothy H. Carter, who erected a building upon the westerly portion of the court; and William H. Eliot thereupon brought a writ of entry against him to recover one-seventh part of the land. This case went to the full court, and by the decision reported in 12 Pick. 436, it was held that the fee of the court did not pass to the testator's three daughters, under the devise of the three dwelling houses, but to his seven children, under the general residuary clause. This decision was given on April 6, 1832, as we infer from the date in the margin of the volume. In the opinion, the court, in speaking of the open space, says: "There are some considerations which have led us to the conclusion that it was the intention of the testator to devise an easement, and not a fee. He manifested in his will a great attachment to the mansion in which he had long lived, and a strong desire that it should be continued in the state and situation in which it then was. The preservation of the space between that and the three new brick houses, as an open court, was important, if not indispensable, to the convenient and accustomed enjoyment of the mansion house."

We cannot, by possibility, believe that the testator intended to devise the upper houses without a right of way to the street. . . . We are of opinion that it was the intention of the testator to preserve an open court there for the benefit and convenience of the adjoining houses, to give the respective owners thereof an easement in the court for various purposes." It was also then agreed (and the same fact is found and reported in the present case by the master) that the court was never used by the testator as a passageway to his mansion-house estate, nor in any other way in connection with it, except for light and air for the windows, and for the drain. The right of drainage is now immaterial. It is thus apparent that it was then considered that by the will of Samuel Eliot some easement or right in respect to light and air from the open space was annexed to the mansion-house estate, but the extent of it was not defined in that decision. The present plaintiffs contend that it was something more than the ordinary easement of light and air for the windows and doors of existing buildings, and that it amounted to a general right to have the space kept open for the whole extent of the court as it then was.

There is no doubt that, under some circumstances, provision may be made by owners of land for keeping certain spaces open generally for light, air, prospect, and other purposes of convenience and enjoyment, without attaching this right to particular buildings. Open squares may be dedicated to public purposes. Abbott v. Cottage City, 143 Mass. 522, 58 Am. Rep. 148. And, in making plans for the improvement and development of lands provision is often made for keeping certain spaces open, of which illustrations may be found in Brooks v. Reynolds, 106 Mass. 81; Salisbury v. Andrews, 128 Mass. 336, and in numerous other reported cases. So that the question is, What was the testator's intention in this case? Such a restriction is to be interpreted according to the apparent purpose of protection or advantage to the several estates concerned. Smith v. Bradley, 154 Mass. 227; Hano v. Bigelow, 155 Mass. 341. In the present case we find no satisfactory evidence to show that the testator sought to create any further protection or advantage to the mansion-house estate, in respect to light and air, than the ordinary easement of that kind. It does not appear that he had any further building scheme in mind, or that he contemplated the cutting up of his mansion-house estate into separate lots. What he had at heart was, as expressed in his will, "that the family establishment shall continue, as much as possible, unchanged." The court in Eliot v. Carter, 12 Pick. 436, mention, as significant, his strong desire that the mansion "should be continued in the state and situation in which it then was." No intention is manifested to provide for the benefit of additional buildings, to be thereafter erected. So far from making any provision for light, air, or prospect for future structures, he left the easement in favor of his existing dwelling to be gathered from implication. He speaks of his mansion house, but says nothing in express terms of the land connected with it, except, in one instance, he mentions the "house and land thereto properly belonging." His interest attached to the dwelling place as it was, and he made no provision looking to its division into separate building lots. The plaintiffs have failed to show an intention on the part of the testator to create any further easement, in respect to keeping the court above the surface of the ground open, than the ordinary easement of light and air for the benefit of the mansion-house estate as it then was. Leech v. Schuchert, L. R. 9 Ch. 463, 473. We have then to consider whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the benefit of such an easement, assuming for the present that the easement, in its original extent, has not been extinguished by merger or otherwise.

William H. Eliot having died, his administrator, under leave of the probate court, conveyed the mansion-house estate, in 1833, to Israel Thorndyke. In this deed the land conveyed was bounded northeasterly, "in part, by a court called 'Phillips Place.'" It is suggested in argument that these words created, by estoppel, a right to have the court kept open. But this deed was made by an administrator, who was selling land under a license of the probate court. He was not at that time selling the testator's interest in the open court, and perhaps he never would do so. We are not aware that it has ever been held that under such circumstances an administrator could impose an easement on other land, which he was not then selling; nor, under the circumstances do we think that an intention to create such a easement should be inferred. Moreover, even assuming that the administrator had all the powers of the testator, the latter at his death owned only one undivided seventh part of Phillips place; and he, being only a tenant in common, could not have created such an easement without the consent of his cotenants. Clark v. Parker, 106 Mass. 554. See also Jones, Easem. § 224, and cases there cited.

The estate was subdivided by Thorndyke, who in 1835 conveyed the lot now owned by Mrs. Lowell,—one of the present plaintiffs,—by deed, to Stowell. This lot is now No. 2 Beacon street, rectangular in shape, and has 26 feet front on Beacon street. The easterly boundary line is about 63 feet west of Tremont street at the front, and somewhat further at the rear. The lot now owned by the other plaintiffs is No. 4 Beacon street, lying westwardly from Mrs. Lowell's lot, and separated by an intervening lot; and this lot was also conveyed by Thorndyke, in 1835, to a different purchaser, Lovejoy. The L of the mansion house reached back at least nearly to the easterly line of what is now Mrs. Lowell's lot, and perhaps extended a very few feet over that line; it being impossible now to determine exactly where the westerly wall of the L stood. All the windows which looked upon the court were, however, east of the boundary of that lot. The stable and other outbuildings stood further back from the court, and it does not appear that they depended on the court for either light or air. Upon these facts, it is quite obvious that the easement of light and air was limited to the mansion house. This easement does not exist in favor of a vacant piece of ground, unless by virtue of provisions or circumstances clearly showing an intention to that effect. We need not now go nicely into the question of the exact rules for determining the measure of this right, in favor of new structures, in cases where the original building has been pulled down or altered (as to which see Scott v. Pape, L. R. 31 Ch. Div. 554, and Greenwood v. Hornsey, L. R. 33 Ch. Div. 471), because the easement created in this case did not extend so far as to include either of the lots of land now owned by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs contend that an easement appurtenant to a close is appurtenant to every parcel into which that close may be divided. This is usually so, in respect to a right of way. Whitney v. Lee, 1 Allen, 198, 79 Am. Dec. 727; Washb. Easem. *59. But the doctrine is not applicable to an easement of light and air, which ordinarily is limited to windows and doors or other apertures in a building. Gale, Easem. 6th ed. 289, 290, 298-300, 506, 507; Goddard, Easem. 5th ed. 51-53, 263-265, 289, 368; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. 362 et seq.; Washb. Easem. *493-501.

If all other points are assumed in favor of the plaintiffs, they fail to show that any easement of light or air was created, by the will of Samuel Eliot, or otherwise, in favor of those parts of his estate which they now own. No such easement was necessary for the enjoyment of those parts of the estate, and an implied grant of an easement is not to be extended by construction beyond what was necessary, or what is fairly shown to have been within the intention of the creator of it. Carbrey v. Willis, 7 Allen, 864, 869, 83 Am. Dec. 688; Parker v. Bennett, 11 Allen, 338, 392; Badger v. Boardman, 16 Gray, 559; Jewell v. Lee, 14 Allen, 145, 92 Am. Dec. 744; Sharp v. Ropes, 110 Mass. 381; Dalton v. Angus, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 740; Moore v. Hall, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 178; Scott v. Pape, L. R. 31 Ch. Div. 554; Harris v. DePinna, L. R. 33 Ch. Div. 238; Aldin v. Clark [1894] 2 Ch. 437.

Thorndyke's deeds to Stowell and Lovejoy each contained a grant of "the right of passage to and from the rear of said lot through Phillips place to Tremont street, which is guaranteed only for foot persons, and of a width of not less than 8½ feet." The defendants admit that the plaintiffs, respectively, are entitled to this easement, but the plaintiffs have failed to show that they are entitled to have the passage kept open to the sky. Burnham v. Nevins, 144 Mass. 86, 59 Am. Rep. 61, and cases there cited. This view of the case being decisive in favor of the defendants, we do not consider the other questions argued.

Bills dismissed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Emma S. BANDFIELD, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Charles A. BANDFIELD.

(.....Mich.....)

A tort committed upon a wife by her husband while they are living together as husband and wife gives her no right of action, in the absence of statutory provision.

(May 17, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ionia County to review a judgment in favor of NOTE.—As to the right of action between husband and wife under modern statutes, see note to McKendry v. McKendry (Pa.) 6 L. R. A. 506.

40 L. R. A.

defendant in an action by a divorced woman against her former husband to recover damages for communicating syphilis to her during the continuance of the marriage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. A. Hawley and W. E. Hawley, for plaintiff in error:

One of the absolute rights, to which every individual is entitled, is the right of personal security. "The right of personal security consists in the legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of life, limb, body, health, and reputation." An injury to either, together with the consequent damage, affords to the injured person a cause or right of action, and, at common law, the person so injured could sue in his own name to recover therefor; except in the case of a married woman or other person under disability.

It has been held, at common law, that the cause or right of action for such injury belonged to the married woman when such injury was committed by a third person, or, in other words, by a person not her husband; but that she had no remedy in her own name unless her husband joined with her.

Reeves, Dom. Rel. p. 87; Bishop, Married Women, § 705; Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 6 L. R. A. 553; Smith v. Smith, 98 Tenn. 101.

The contrary doctrine, however, has been held in several cases; and it has been laid down as the common-law doctrine that, inasmuch as she could not sue in her own name, and the damages, when recovered, did not belong to her, the right of action was not hers.

Duffes v. Duffes, 76 Wis. 374, 8 L. R. A. 420; Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 621, 32 Am. Rep. 397.

At common law, on account of the legal fiction of the unity of husband and wife, the wife has no cause of action for an injury committed upon her by her husband during coverture.

The harshness of this doctrine, by the gradual evolution of the common law, has been considerably modified, without the aid of any legislation whatever. So, the courts came to regard the alleged unity of husband and wife as an unreasonable fiction, and in many ways have sought to avoid its harshness when deemed desirable to do so.

Seater v. Adams, 66 N. H. 142; Foot v. Card, 58 Conn. 4, 6 L. R. A. 829; Haynes v. Nowlin, 129 Ind. 581, 14 L. R. A. 787; Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 123, 14 L. R. A. 545; Burdeno v. Amperæ, 14 Mich. 91, 90 Am. Dec. 225.

The real and personal estate of every female, acquired before marriage, and all property, real and personal, to which she may afterwards become entitled, by gift, grant, inheritance, devise, or in any other manner, shall be and remain the estate and property of such female.

2 How. Anno. Stat. § 6295.

Actions may be brought by and against a married woman in relation to her sole property, in the same manner as if she were unmarried.

2 How. Anno. Stat. § 6297.

Under this statute the wife could sue in her own name for injuries either to her person or her reputation, and the damages, when recovered, belong to her.

Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180; Berger v. Jacobs, 21 Mich. 215; Leonard v. Pope, 27 Mich. 145; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440; Hunt v. Euton, 55 Mich. 362; White v. White, 58 Mich. 546; Smith v. Smith, 73 Mich. 445, 3 L. R. A. 52; Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 123, 14 L. R. A. 545; Rice v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371.

It has been held by this court that a wife can sue another woman for alienating her husband's affections.

Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 123, 14 L. R. A. 545.

In Smith v. Smith, 73 Mich. 445, 3 L. R. A. 52, this court held that the wife could sue a third person for a libel written and signed by the husband, and which such third person published under the direction and at the request of the husband.

It has also been held by this court, in People v. Chapman, 62 Mich. 280, that a husband who stood by while a rape was committed upon his wife, and did not interfere to prevent the outrage, could be charged with and convicted of the crime of rape, as a principal.

The alimony allowed to the wife depends upon the property and means owned by the husband; and it is the policy of the courts, in granting alimony, to make the same in some degree proportionate to the property of the husband. In no case should the husband be divested of all his estate.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 120-123.

Mr. F. C. Miller, for defendant in error.

Under the married woman's statutes, the wife cannot maintain an action against her husband for a personal injury. Even after divorce, the wife cannot sue the husband for a personal tort committed by him upon her while the relation existed.

Cooley, Torts, p. 268; Schouler, Dom. Rel. 4th ed. § 52; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 795. Phillips v. Barnet, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 498. Abbott v. Abbott, 67 Me. 304, 24 Am. Rep. 27. Libby v. Berry, 74 Me. 286, 43 Am. Rep. 599. Freethy v. Freethy, 43 Barb. 641; Longendyke v. Longendyke, 44 Barb. 366; Walker v. Reay, 36 Pa. 410; Houston v. Houston, 4 Pa. Dist R. 248; Mink v. Mink, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 189; Peter v. Peters, 43 Iowa, 183; Schultz v. Schultz, 29 N. Y. 644; Nickerson v. Nickerson, 65 Tex. 281; Barton v. Barton, 32 Md. 214; Main v. Main, 46 Ill. App. 106.

A married woman cannot enter into a partnership with her husband, or conduct any business in connection with him for her own benefit, and charge her separate estate therefor.

Artman v. Ferguson, 73 Mich. 146, 3 L. R. A. 343; Edwards v. McEnhill, 51 Mich. 160.

A husband living with his wife and having joint possession with her of a dwelling house which she owns and both occupy is not guilty of arson in burning such dwelling.

Snyder v. People, 26 Mich. 106, 12 Am. Rep. 302.

Neither the husband nor wife is guilty of larceny in converting property of the other, either at common law or since the passage of the married woman's act.

Thomas v. Thomas, 51 Ill. 162a. See also Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 321; White v. Wik, 58 Mich. 546; Hovland v. Hovland, 20 Hun. 472; Ilgenfritz v. Ilgenfritz, 49 Mo. App. 127.

The husband cannot sue his wife to recover damages for deceit by which he was induced to marry her.

Kujek v. Goldman, 9 Misc. 34.

Grant, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The sole question is: Can a wife maintain suit against her husband for a personal tort committed upon her while they were living together as husband and wife? We answered this question in the negative in the case of Wagner v. Carpenter, Circuit Judge, decided November 17, 1897. In that case the husband had uttered a gross libel against his wife. She brought suit by capias ad respondendum, and the proceedings were quashed by the circuit judge, for the reason that the wife could not maintain the suit against her husband. The wife applied to this court for the writ of mandamus to compel the circuit judge to vacate that order. The writ was denied, and the order of the circuit judge sustained. No opinion was written. But the sole and identical question there involved is the same as is involved in this suit. The briefs there filed pursued the same line of argument and cited the same authorities as are now cited. Counsel cite the married woman's act of this state as conferring this right. This act is found in 2 How. Anno. Stat. §§ 6295, 6297, which read as follows: "The real and personal estate of every female, acquired before marriage, and all property, real and personal, to which she may afterwards become entitled, by gift, grant, inheritance, devise, or in any other manner, shall be and remain the estate and property of such female. . . . Actions may be brought by and against a married woman in relation to her sole property, in the same manner as if she were unmarried." In many decisions the courts of many of the states, notwithstanding the statutes conferring rights upon a married woman over her separate property not conferred by the common law, have thus far, without exception, denied the right of a wife to sue her husband for personal wrongs committed during coverture. No such right is conferred by our statute unless it be by implication. The legislature should speak in no uncertain manner when it seeks to abrogate the plain and long established rules of the common law. Courts should not be left to construction to sustain such bold innovations. The rule is thus stated in 9 Bacon, Abr. title Statutes, I. p. 245: "In alldoubtful matters, and where the expression is in general terms, statutes are to receive such a construction as may be agreeable to the rules of the common law in cases of that nature; for statutes are not presumed to make any alteration in the common law, farther or otherwise than the act expressly declares; therefore, in all general matters, the law presumes the act did not intend to make any alteration; for if the Parliament had had that design, they would have expressed it in the act."

The result of plaintiff's contention would be another step to destroy the sacred relation of man and wife, and to open the door to law-suits between them for every real and fancied wrong,—suits which the common law has refused on the ground of public policy. This court has gone no further than to support the wife, under the married woman's act, in protecting her in the management and control of her property. It has sustained her right to an action for assault and battery, for slander, and for alienation of her husband's affections against others than her husband. Berger v. Jacobs, 21 Mich. 215; Leonard v. Pope, 27 Mich. 145; Rice v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371. At the same time, it has held that the wife could not enter into a partnership or other business with her husband, and thus become responsible for the contracts and debts of her husband. Artman v. Ferguson, 78 Mich. 148, 2 L. R. A. 843; Edwards v. McEnhill, 51 Mich. 160. Personal wrongs inflicted upon her give her the right to a decree of separation or divorce from her husband, and our statutes have given the court of chancery exclusive jurisdiction over that subject. This court, clothed with the broad powers of equity, can do justice to her for the wrongs of her husband, so far as courts can do justice, and, in providing for her, will give her such amount of her husband's property as the circumstances of both will justify, and, in so doing, may take into account the cruel and outrageous conduct inflicted upon her by him, and its effect upon her health and ability to labor. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 120; 2 How. Anno. Stat. § 6245. In the absence of an express statute, there is no right to maintain an action at law for such wrong. We are cited to no authority holding the contrary. We cite a few sustaining the rule: Abbott v. Abbott, 67 Me. 304, 24 Am. Rep. 27; Freethy v. Freethy, 42 Barb. 641; Peters v. Peters, 42 Iowa, 182; Schultz v. Schultz, 89 N. Y. 644; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 268; Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 252; Newell, Defamation, p. 366; Townshend, Slander & Libel, 8d ed. p. 548.

Judgment affirmed.

The other Justices concur.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Julia SELKIRK, Appt.,
v.

P. O. STEVENS et al., Respts.

(.....Minn.....)

*The plaintiff is an Indian, and a licensed trader on White Earth reservation. She purchased on the reservation a quantity of game killed thereon by tribal Indians, and transported it by wagon off the reservation to the nearest railway station, and there delivered it to a carrier, to be shipped out of the state. It was seized and confiscated while in possession of the carrier by the defendants, acting as game warden and game and fish commissioners of the state. Held, that the defendants' acts were legal.

*Headnote by START, Ch. J.

(May 23, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Becker County sustaining

NOTE.—For game laws as affecting interstate commerce, see note to State v. Geer (Conn.), 13 L. R. A. 804, Affirmed 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 798. See also 40 L. R. A.

State v. Swett (Me.) 29 L. R. A. 714; People v. O'Neil (Mich.) 33 L. R. A. 696; and Dickhaut v. State (Md.) 36 L. R. A. 765.

ing a demurrer to the complaint in a suit brought to recover the value of certain game which defendants as state officers took out of the possession of the plaintiff's agent while it was being transported out of the state. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. M. L. Countryman for appellant.

Mr. T. E. Byrnes for respondents.

Start, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The material facts alleged in the complaint are: The plaintiff is an Indian and an actual inhabitant of White Earth Indian reservation, situated within the limits of this state, and a trader thereon under a license from the United States. Prior to November 19, 1896, as such trader, she purchased upon the reservation, from Indians residing thereon, and who were members of the tribes located thereon, a quantity of game birds which were killed thereon by such Indians, consisting of prairie chickens and partridges, of the value of $485. On the day named the plaintiff attempted to ship the birds out of the state, and did transport them from the reservation by wagon to Detroit, Minn., the nearest railway station, and there delivered them to the express company for carriage out of the state to eastern states, to be there sold by her agents for her account. After the birds had been delivered to the express company and while in its possession, and in process of shipment out of the state, the defendant as game warden of the state, acting under the authority of his codefendants, who constitute the board of game and fish commissioners of the state of Minnesota, seized the birds, and delivered them to the board, and thereupon the defendants, claiming to act as such officers, sold the birds, and paid the proceeds thereof into the treasury of the state. The defendants interposed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was sustained, and the plaintiff appealed from the order sustaining it.

At the time of this attempted shipment of the birds out of the state the statute of the state for the preservation of game contained, with other provisions, the following: "No person at any time shall catch, take or kill, or have in possession or under control any of the birds, animals, or fish caught, taken, or killed in this state . . . with intent to ship the same beyond the limits of this state, or with intent to allow or aid in their shipment out of this state, or shall ship or intentionally allow or aid in their shipment out of this state. . . ." Gen. Stat. 1894, § 2170. "It shall be the duty of all the members of the board of game and fish commissioners, all game wardens, sheriffs, and their deputies, constables, and police officers of this state, at any and all times, to seize and take possession of any and all birds, animals, or fish which have been caught, taken, or killed at a time, in a manner, or for a purpose, or had in possession or under control or have been shipped contrary to any provision of this act. Such seizure may be made without a warrant." Id. § 2177. This statute makes it unlawful to ship game out of the state at any time, and authorizes its seizure and confiscation if the statute is violated. The statute is constitutional. State v. Northern P. Exp. Co. 58 Minn. 403; 40 L. R. A.

Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 793.

It necessarily follows that the seizure in question was lawful, and that the complaint does not state facts constituting a cause of action, unless the fact that the game was killed on the reservation by Indians exempts it from seizure at a place within the state, and off the reservation, while it is in possession of a carrier for shipment out of the state. The question for our decision is not whether our game laws may be enforced against Indians, so that they may be prosecuted and personally punished for its violation on the reservation. Were this the question, it would have to be answered in favor of the Indians, for this court, in the case of State v. Campbell, 53 Minn. 354, 21 L. R. A. 169, rightly held that tribal Indians on this reservation are not subject to the criminal laws of the state. But the sole question here is the legal status of game found off the reservation, and in the hands of the carrier for shipment out of the state, which was killed on the reservation by Indians: The answer to this question involves a determination of the extent of the jurisdiction of the state over this reservation. The White Earth reservation is not unceded Indian country. It was such prior to 1855, but by an act of Congress approved December 19, 1854 (10 Stat. at L. [chap. 7] 598), the president of the United States was authorized to enter into negotiations with the Chippewa Indians for the extinguishment of their title to all lands owned and claimed by them in the territory of Minnesota; the treaties so to be made to contain a provision that "the laws of the United States and the territory of Minnesota shall be extended over the Chippewa territory in Minnesota whenever the same may be ceded, and the same shall cease to be 'Indian country' except that the land reserved to said Indians, or other property owned by them, shall be exempt from taxation and execution; and that the act passed 30th June, 1854, 'to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes,' etc., be inoperative over the said ceded territory, except the 20th section, which prohibits the introduction and sale of spirituous liquors to Indians." Such a treaty was made February 22, 1855, and proclaimed April 7, 1855, whereby the Indians ceded to the United States all right, title, and interest of whatsoever nature which they had in and to a large tract of land therein described, and which included all of the land now known as "White Earth Reservation." Rev. Indian Treaties (1873) 263. This treaty reserved a number of tracts of land which were set apart for the homes of the Indians, but there was no reservation of the right of the Indians to hunt and fish on and over the ceded territory. None of these reservations included any lands within the limits of White Earth reservation. A portion of the land now included in the last-named reservation was set apart for the future home of the Indians by treaty of May 7, 1864, proclaimed March 20, 1865; and by treaty of March 19, 1867, proclaimed April 18, 1867, there was set apart for the use of the Indians, in order to provide them with a suitable farming region, thirty-six townships of land, to include White Earth lake and Rice lake. Rev. Indian Treaties, 259, 271. Under the provisions of the treaty of 1867, what has since been known as White Earth reservation was established. The legal effect of the treaty of February 22, 1855, was that the lands now embraced within the limits of White Earth reservation became public lands of the United States, and that every right of the Indians therein became absolutely extinguished. The laws of the then territory of Minnesota became operative over the whole territorial limits of the present reservation. When the territory of Minnesota became a state in 1858, the jurisdiction of the state was just as complete and absolute over the lands now included in the reservation in question as it was over any other part of the state, except as to the sale of spirituous liquors to the Indians. The state has never ceded or relinquished any part of this jurisdiction. Such jurisdiction was modified by the subsequent setting apart the reservation for the use of the tribal Indians, under the control of the general government, to the extent only that the state cannot tax the property of the Indians, nor interfere with the control of such Indians while on this reservation, or punish them for acts committed thereon in violation of its laws. This limitation of the power of the state does not arise from the fact that the laws of the state are not operative upon this reservation, but it grows out of the personal relations of such Indians to the general government. They are its wards, and under its guardianship and control, and the state may not interfere with or impair the efficacy of such guardianship. Subject to this limitation, all of the general laws of the state, including its game laws, are in force in every part of White Earth reservation. A white man may be punished by the state for a crime committed thereon, but a tribal Indian may not be. State v. Campbell, 53 Minn. 354, 21 L. R. A. 169. After the Indian title to the land within this reservation was extinguished, and before it was set apart for the Indians in 1867, the state owned the game thereon in trust for the whole people of the state, with the right and duty to make and enforce such laws as it deemed necessary for its protection and beneficial use. The state has never parted with this ownership and trust. It is, therefore, not true, as a legal proposition, whatever may be the case ethically, that the Indians own the game on this reservation, for it belongs to the state, and its game laws are operative upon this reservation. But its remedies for enforcing them are imperfect, in that it cannot punish Indians for violating such laws on the reservation. A white man on the reservation may be so punished.

It is unnecessary to, and we do not, decide whether the state may or may not interfere with game which is unlawfully in the possession of the Indians on the reservation. But we do hold that when, as in this case, game is once off this reservation and in the possession of any person or corporation in violation of the law, it may be seized and confiscated by its proper officers, without reference to where or by whom it was killed.

It is immaterial whether the shipment of the game in question commenced on the reservation or off it, and at Detroit, for, if it commenced on the reservation, no question of interstate commerce can arise, for the reservation is a part of the state, and it has jurisdiction over it, except as we have stated.

Order affirmed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

DRUMMOND CARRIAGE COMPANY et al., Piffs. in Err.,
v.
George T. MILLS.
(.....Neb.....)

- *1. Upon the rendition of a judgment against appellant in the district court, that court has no such jurisdiction of the person of the surety in the appeal undertaking that it may render the same judgment against him that it may against the appellant.
2. By operation of the common law, in the absence of any specific agreement, every person who has bestowed labor and skill on a chattel bailed to him for the purpose, and has thereby increased its value, has a lien on such chattel, and may retain it until paid his reasonable charges for his services.
3. Such rule of the common law is in force in this state.
4. The common-law lien to which we have just referred may, by force of special facts or

*Headnotes by HARRISON, Ch. J.

NOTE.—On the question of the priority of a chattel mortgage and a subsequently acquired lien on the property, see also note to Wright v. Sherman (S. D.) 17 L. R. A. 792; also Chapman v. First Nat. Bank (Ala.) 22 L. R. A. 78.
40 L. R. A.

circumstances, override or be superior to prior contractual or statutory liens.

5. In this state the title to mortgaged chattels remains in the mortgagor until foreclosure of the mortgage.
6. A physician gave a mortgage on a buggy of which he retained possession and used it in his business. It was of the recitals of the mortgage that he should not so negligently or improperly use or care for the property as to subject it to probable loss or material depreciation in value, and the mortgagee had knowledge that the buggy at times needed repairing, and had seen it at one time left at the shop to be repaired. The mortgagor, without the knowledge of the mortgagee, left the buggy with a carriage company for needed repairs. The company repaired the buggy, and retained possession thereof to enforce a claimed lien for, or the payment of its reasonable charges for, such repairing. The mortgagee instituted an action of replevin against the carriage company to obtain possession of the buggy, asserting right thereto under and by virtue of his mortgage lien. Held, that the mortgage lien was subordinate to the common-law lien, since the recitals of the mortgage and the facts and circumstances disclosed that the mortgagor had at least implied authority from the mortgagee to have the repairs made.

(Ragan, C., dissents.)

((April 8, 1898.))

ERROR to the District Court for Douglas County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of a buggy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. B. N. Robertson, for plaintiffs in error:

The mortgagor in this case being rightfully in possession of the chattel at the time the repairs were contracted for, was the owner thereof.

Randall v. Persons, 42 Neb. 607.

The Drummond Carriage Company was lawfully in possession of, and had a lien upon, the property in controversy at the commencement of this action.

6 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 149, and cases cited; Lord v. Jones, 24 Me. 489, 41 Am. Dec. 391; Arians v. Brickley, 65 Wis. 26, 56 Am. Rep. 611.

Nor is the existence of a special agreement between the parties for the payment of a fixed sum for labor inconsistent with a claim of lien for services.

Mathias v. Sellers, 86 Pa. 486, 27 Am. Rep. 723; Pickett v. Bullock, 52 N. H. 354; Morgan v. Congdon, 4 N. Y. 552.

A lien which arises by operation of the common law overrides all prior existing contract or statutory liens on the property to which it attaches.

1 Jones, Liens, § 8; Herman, Chat. Mortg. p. 308; Darlington, Pera. Prop. p. 48; Jessup v. Atlantic & G. R. Co. 3 Woods, 441; Williams v. Alleup, 10 C. B. N. S. 417; Hammond v. Danielson, 126 Mass. 294; Kirtley v. Morris, 48 Mo. App. 144; Scott v. Delahunt, 65 N. Y. 128; Watts v. Sweeney, 127 Ind. 116; White v. Smith, 44 N. J. L. 105, 43 Am. Rep. 347; Smith v. Stevens, 36 Minn. 308; Corning v. Ashley, 51 Hun, 483; Sullivan v. Clifton, 55 N. J. L. 324, 20 L. R. A. 719; Lynde v. Parker, 155 Mass. 481; Lawson, Presumptive Ev. 1886, p. 175; McKenzie v. Stevens, 19 Ala. 692; Ryan v. Sams, 12 Q. B. 460.

Public policy demands that the lien of the plaintiff in this case be enforced as against the mortgage.

Jones, Chat. Mortg. 4th ed. § 478; Ingalls v. Green, 62 Vt. 436.

The owner is not permitted to appropriate to his own use the labor and skill of the innocent party who wrought the change.

Wetherbee v. Green, 23 Mich. 311, 7 Am. Rep. 653; Carpenter v. Lingenfelter, 43 Neb. 728, 32 L. R. A. 432.

Where one by mistake in good faith has expended labor upon the property of another, if he has by his labor greatly increased the value of the property he will become the owner.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 53; 3 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. §1317; Baker v. Meisch, 29 Neb. 227.

Mr. W. H. De France for defendant in error.

Harrison, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This, an action of replevin, was instituted by defendant in error, March 22, 1894, before a justice of the peace in Douglas county, to recover the possession of a "Breton Buggy," and in a trial he was given judgment for the relief demanded. An appeal was perfected to the district court, wherein the defendant in error was again successful. He there obtained judgment against the carriage company, and also against the surety on the appeal undertaking. The carriage company and the surety on the appeal bond present the case to this court for review.

It is contended for the party who signed the appeal undertaking that the district court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment it did against him. The question presented was discussed and determined in the case of Selby v. McQuillan, reported in 45 Neb. 512; and it was stated that the district court, on the rendition of a judgment against an appellant, had no jurisdiction to render a like judgment against the surety in the appeal bond; and, following the doctrine there announced, we must hold that the judgment against the surety in this case was without the jurisdiction of the court, and cannot stand. The trial in the district court was without a jury, and on an agreed statement of the facts, as follows: "That W. P. Wilcox was on and prior to July 1, 1891, a physician engaged in the actual practice of his profession in the city of Omaha, Nebraska. That on September 12, 1889, said Wilcox purchased a physician's phaeton or carriage from the defendant, and that from the date of its purchase until on or about the 13th day of May, 1892, the said Dr. Wilcox used the said carriage in his professional business as a physician and surgeon. That on July 1, 1891, said Dr. W. P. Wilcox made, executed, and delivered, for a valuable consideration, being money actually loaned, his certain promissory note to the plaintiff for $350, due one year after date. That no payments have been made on said note, and the same is due. To secure said note, the said Dr. W. P. Wilcox made and delivered a chattel mortgage to plaintiff covering the said physician's phaeton or carriage, a horse, and harness. The said mortgage was filed in the office of the county clerk of Douglas county, Nebraska, in accordance with law, on the 3d day of August, 1891, a copy of which is hereto attached and made a part of this stipulation, marked 'Exhibit A.' The plaintiff was well acquainted with the buggy in controversy, and knew at the time he took the mortgage that it was used by Dr. Wilcox in his business as a physician. Dr. Wilcox and the plaintiff rode out in the buggy quite frequently in the evenings. The plaintiff was with Dr. Wilcox at the office of the Drummond Carriage Works, defendant, at one time previous to May, 1892, after his mortgage was given, and when Dr. Wilcox run the buggy in there for repairs, which bill of repairs was paid by Dr. Wilcox. About the 13th of May, 1892, said Dr. Wilcox took the buggy mentioned in the mortgage, and in controversy herein, to the defendant for repairs; and, pursuant to agreement between the defendant and Dr. Wilcox, the buggy was to be repaired. The bill for the same agreed upon was $60, to be paid in cash when the work was done. A copy of the memorandum of repairs to be done, and which were actually done, on the carriage, is hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit B,' and made a part of this stipulation. The original was on or about

May 13, 1892, mailed by defendant to Dr. Wilcox. The repairs done on the buggy* were reasonably necessary for the careful preservation of the carriage, and the bill for the same is well and reasonably worth $60, no part of which has been paid. The buggy was completed, and the bill was due, on the 1st day of July, 1892. The plaintiff is a resident of Omaha, Nebraska, and has resided therein ever since the 12th day of September, 1889. About the 1st of June, 1892, said Dr. W. P. Wilcox left the city of Omaha for Colorado, to be gone an indefinite period of time. Said Dr. Wilcox was absent from the city from about the 1st of June, 1892, until about the 15th of March, 1894. During the time of said Wilcox's absence from the city, as aforesaid, the plaintiff supposed the buggy was in the barn of the father of said Wilcox, and did not know different until about the 21st of March, 1894, when he was notified by said Wilcox that the said buggy was in the possession of the defendant. In the meantime the plaintiff had made no inquiries about the whereabouts of the buggy, neither had he made any inquiries about the horse and harness, and when this action was commenced the plaintiff did not know where the horse and harness were. Plaintiff never has pressed the said Wilcox for the money secured by the note and chattel mortgage, and never calculated to do so. While Dr. Wilcox was using the buggy in his professional business, he had all his repairing done at the carriage works of the defendant, and the buggy was in the defendant's shop for repairs, and the defendant did small repair work on the buggy twelve different times between the date of its purchase, September 12, 1889, and May 1, 1891. The first actual knowledge that the plaintiff had of the buggy being in the possession of the defendant was obtained from the said Dr. Wilcox on or about March 21, 1894. Immediately after said notification, plaintiff demanded possession of said buggy from defendant, and, upon refusal of defendant to deliver up the possession of said buggy to plaintiff, plaintiff commenced this cause of action. The defendant made no inquiries of Wilcox, when he took the buggy to its place of business for repairs, as to whether the buggy was encumbered or not, nor did the said Wilcox say anything about it to the defendant. The buggy has been in the continuous possession of the defendant from the spring of 1892. The defendant is a corporation duly organized under the laws of Nebraska, and engaged in the manufacture and sale and general repair work of wagons, carriages, and other kinds of vehicles. The defendant, when demand was made on it for the possession of the buggy, refused to deliver the same to the plaintiff until its bill for repairs, as above stated, was paid, and then and there notified the plaintiff that it claimed a lien upon said buggy for the work and labor and material performed and used in repairing said buggy. The value of the buggy was $75 at the commencement of this action. The defendant, and all the officers thereof at the times when said repairs were agreed upon and made, had no actual knowledge of said mortgage, nor were they aware of the existence of such a mortgage until the month of March, 1894."

It is urged by counsel for plaintiff in error that it had a lien, by force of law, on the buggy for the amount of its bill of charges for repairing the buggy, which continued so long as it retained possession of the buggy under a claim of lien for such services. The principle invoked is: If property is delivered to a person, to be by his skill and labor, or by adding thereto property of his, enhanced in value, and he performs the labor or adds his own property to that delivered, and thereby increases the value of the latter, he may retain possession of it until paid for his labor or materials. This is a doctrine of the common law, and the right is usually denominated a "common-law lien," and it exists under a state of facts such as we have just detailed, unless there is a contract inconsistent with such lien, or some modifying circumstances which are in conflict with any such right, or disclose an intent not to claim the right. "A mechanic of any kind has a lien upon all personal property, for manufacture or repairs, while it remains in his possession; . . . a carriage maker, for repairs upon a carriage." See 6 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 149, and cases cited. Persons have by common law the right to detain goods on which they have bestowed labor until the reasonable charges therefor are paid. 2 Kent, Com. p. 685. In the absence of specific agreement, if a party has bestowed labor and skill on a chattel bailed to him for such purpose, and thereby improved it, he has by general law a lien on it for the reasonable value of his labor, or the right to retain it until paid for such skill and labor. Bevan v. Waters, 3 Car. & P. 520; Seafre v. Morgan, 4 Mees. & W. 270; Lord v. Jones, 24 Me. 439, 41 Am. Dec. 391; Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 491, 38 Am. Dec. 663. This right rests on principles of natural equity and commercial necessity. 2 Kent, Com. p. 634. No lien exists at common law for the agistment of cattle (Chapman v. Allen, Cro. Car. 271; Jackson v. Cummins, 5 Mees. & W. 342; Wallace v. Woodgate, 1 Car. & P. 575); nor in favor of one to whom a horse has been delivered to be stabled, taken care of, fed, and kept (Judson v. Etheridge, 1 Crompt. & M. 742). In such cases, a lien for the charges will only arise by virtue of a statute or special agreement in the nature of a pledge. . . . The case of an agistment does not fall within that principle, inasmuch as the agister does not confer any additional value on the article, either by the exertion of any skill of his own or indirectly, by means of any instrument in his possession." White v. Smith, 44 N. J. L. 105, 43 Am. Rep. 347; Jackson v. Cummins, 5 Mees. & W. 342.

We refer to the agister's lien for the purposes of directing attention to the fact that it is not a lien which has been recognized as arising by force of the general or common law, or as having any existence at common law, but has its origin in, or is the creature of, statutory provision, and that the reasoning employed and rules announced by this court in reference to agister's liens are not forceful, or applicable herein in regard to the lien claimed. The legislature of the territory when the state was a territory passed the following act: "So much of the common law of England as is applicable and not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, with the organic law of this territory, or with any law passed or to be passed by the legislature of this territory, is adopted and declared to be law within said territory." Comp. Stat. chap. 15, § 1. The right to the common-law lien would exist in this state unless inconsistent, without statutory law, and we cannot discover wherein it is inconsistent with, or has been abrogated by, statute; hence must determine it in force.

In regard to the recognition and enforcement of common-law rules, it is said by this court in the opinion in the case of Wilson v. Burnstead, 12 Neb. 1, that, "in the application of the principles of the common law, where the precedents are unanimous in the support of a proposition, there is no safety but in a strict adherence to such precedents. If the court will not follow established rules, rights are sacrificed, and lawyers and litigants are left in doubt and uncertainty, while there is no certainty in regard to what, upon a given state of facts, the decision of the court will be." We must conclude that a common-law lien existed in favor of the carriage company for the amount due it for the repair of the buggy; and it remains further to determine whether it took precedence of the lien of defendant in error's chattel mortgage. The lien of the mortgage was created and perfected by the filing prescribed by law, long prior to the services, etc., of the carriage company in repairing the buggy, and there is no dispute in regard to the time of attachment of either lien.

It now becomes necessary to allude again to some of the facts which appeared of evidence in the cause, more especially to bring out distinctly the position occupied by defendant in error relative to any repairs which became necessary to the useful existence of the buggy, and its possible future appropriation to the satisfaction of the indebtedness, the payment of which was secured by the chattel mortgage. The mortgage provided, in terms, that, until default by the mortgagor in the performance of specified conditions or until the happening of certain indicated events, he should keep possession of the mortgaged property, and one of the enumerated events, by the occurrence of which the mortgagee should, at his option, be entitled to take possession thereof, was this: "If the said party of the first part [the mortgagor] shall so negligently or improperly use or care for said property as to subject the same to probable loss or material depreciation of the value thereof,"—from which it seems probable that it was in contemplation of the parties that the mortgagor would, of course, at his own proper cost and charge, have the buggy repaired, if necessary, during the time of its use by him and the existence of the mortgage. It was also of the evidence that defendant in error saw the buggy and rode in it frequently, and had knowledge of its being repaired by plaintiff in error at least once when he was present and it was run into the carriage company's place of business to be by it repaired.

We may now turn to the rules of law which we deem applicable to the state of facts developed in evidence herein. The legal title to the buggy was in the mortgagor. He was the owner thereof; the mortgagee had but a lien thereon. Musser v. King, 40 Neb. 892; Raddall v. Persons, 42 Neb. 607; Camp v. Pollock, 45 Neb. 771; Gould v. Armagost, 46 Neb. 897. It may be said that a lien which arises by force of the common law may be, under special circumstances, superior to prior existing contractual or statutory liens on the same property. In Darlington, Pers. Prop. p. 48, it is stated on this subject: "And though, in general, a lien cannot be created without authority of the owner, liens for repairs take precedence of prior mortgages, where such repairs were necessary for purposes within the intention of the mortgage, e. g., repairs on vessels or carriages, which the mortgagor was to continue to use." A lien on property, by operation of the common law, may have precedence of an existing mortgage. Jones, Chat. Mortg. § 47; Herman, Chat. Mortg. p. 308. In the case of White v. Smith, 44 N. J. L. 105, 43 Am. Rep. 847, it was said: "Williams v. Allsup, 10 C. B. N. S. 417, is the leading case on this subject. In that case the plaintiff, a shipwright, detained a vessel for his charges for repairs, as against a mortgagee under a prior mortgage. The mortgage had been recorded pursuant to the merchants' shipping act. The vessel was left in the mortgagor's possession and control for use, and was condemned as unseaworthy. The shipwright's charges were for necessary repairs, made by the mortgagor's direction, without the knowledge of the mortgagee. The court sustained the shipwright's lien for repairs against the claim of the mortgagee. The course of reasoning which led to this result, as expressed in the opinions of the judges, is as follows: Erle, Ch. J., said: 'I put my decision on the ground that the mortgagee, having allowed the mortgagor to continue in the apparent ownership of the vessel, making it a source of profit and a means of earning wherewithal to pay off the mortgage debt, the relation so created by implication entitles the mortgagor to do all that may be necessary to keep her in an efficient state for that purpose. The case states that the vessel had been condemned as unseaworthy by the government surveyor, and so was in a condition to be utterly unable to earn freight or be an available security or any source of profit at all. Under these circumstances, the mortgagor did that which was obviously for the advantage of all parties interested: he put her into the hands of the defendant to be repaired; and, according to all ordinary usage, the defendant ought to have a right of lien on the ship so that those who are interested in the ship, and who will be benefited by the repairs, should not be allowed to take her out of his hands without paying for them. . . . It is to be observed that the money expended in repairs adds to the value of the ship; and, looking to the rights and interests of the parties generally, it cannot be doubted that it is much to the advantage of the mortgagee that the mortgagor should be held to have power to confer a right of lien on the ship for repairs necessary to keep her seaworthy.' Willes, J., said: 'By the permission of the mortgagees, the mortgagor has the use of the vessel. He has therefore a right to use her in the way in which vessels are ordinarily used. Upon the facts which appear on this case, this vessel could not be so used unless these repairs had been done to her. The state of the things, therefore, seems to involve the right of the mortgagor to get the vessel repaired, not on the credit of the mortgagees, but upon the ordinary terms, subject to the shipwright's lien. It seems to me that the case is the same as if the mortgagees had been present when the order for the repairs was given.' Byles, J., said: 'As it is obvious that every ship will, from time to time, require repairs, it seems but reasonable, under circumstances like these, to infer that the mortgagor had authority from the mortgagees to cause such repairs as should become necessary to be done, upon the usual and ordinary terms. Now, what are the usual and ordinary terms? Why, that the person by whom the repairs are ordered should alone be liable personally, but that the shipwright should have a lien upon the ship for the work and labor he has exended on her; nor are the mortgagees at all prejudicially affected thereby. They have the property augmented in value by the amount of the repairs.' See also Scott v. Delahunt, 5 Lans. 372; Hammond v. Danielson, 126 Mass. 294; Tucker v. Werner, 3 Misc. 193; Corning v. Ashley, 51 Hun, 483, Affirmed 121 N. Y. 700, mem.

We are not holding that in all cases, or generally, the common-law lien will override and be superior to the prior chattel mortgage lien, but that in cases where the mortgagor can be said to have expressed or implied authority from the mortgagee to procure repairs to be made on the mortgaged property it will be so. The carriage company was entitled to its lien, and it was superior to the lien of the chattel mortgage; hence the judgment of the district court was wrong, and must be reversed.

Reversed and remanded.

Ragan, C., dissents.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Abner G. TISDELL, Respt.,

v.

NEW HAMPSHIRE FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(155 N. Y. 163.)

1. A return or tender of unearned premiums is necessary in order to effect a cancellation of an insurance policy providing that it may be canceled "by giving five days' notice," and also that "the unearned premium shall be returned on surrender of this policy."

2. Notice that an unearned premium will be returned, and holding the amount subject to the call of the insured, does not satisfy the obligation of an insurer to return the premium as a condition of canceling the policy.

(Parker, Ch. J., and O'Brien, J., dissent.)

(March 1, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the General Term of the Superior Court of the City of New York reversing a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Michael H. Cardoso and Edgar J. Nathan, for appellant:

The state, by the adoption of the standard policy (§ 121 of the insurance law, chap. 690, Laws 1892), has set its seal of approval upon the form of the underwriter's contract.

Crown Point Iron Co. v. Etna Ins. Co. 127 N. Y. 608, 14 L. R. A. 147.

The agreement, which is the subject-matter of litigation in this action, was carefully prepared by astute counsel, and the contracting parties themselves were intelligent, shrewd, and practical business men of large experience, and no injustice, therefore, will be done to either by interpreting the instrument and every part of it by the ordinary rules for the interpretation of written instruments.

Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Pennsylvania Coal Co. 50 N. Y. 250.

Where the language of a statute or a contract, read in the order of its clauses, presents no ambiguity, courts will not attempt by transposition of clauses and from what it can be ingeniously argued was the general intent, to qualify by construction the meaning.

Doe, Poor, v. Considine, 6 Wall. 458, 18 L. ed. 869; Morgan v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 96 U. S. 716, 24 L. ed. 743.

If the notice of cancellation contains an offer to return the unearned premium, it is sufficient, and no personal tender of the unearned premium is necessary.

Walthear v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 2 App. Div. 328; Backus v. Exchange F. Ins. Co. Supreme Court Trial Term, N. Y. June, 1897, on appeal, 26 App. Div. 91.

Messrs. Potter, Baldwin, & Miner, for respondent:

The cancellation clause of the standard policy requires that the company shall, as a condition precedent to the cancellation of the policy, serve a five days' notice, and actually pay or tender to the insured a pro rata amount of the unearned premium.

Mr. Justice Bartlett, in the case of Nitch v. American Cent. Ins. Co., has, in a very able and exhaustive opinion, construed the cancellation clause in the standard policy consonant with the principles contended herein, and, as we claim, with those of equity and justice. Affirmed, 83 Hun, 614, mem., 152 N. Y. 685, mem.

The cancellation clause in the contract of insurance would be invalid unless it provided for a restoration of the premium.

NOTE.—For conditions of cancellation of insurance policy, see also Clark v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (Me.) 35 L. R. A. 276.

40 L. R. A.

Marshall v. Reading F. Ins. Co. 78 Hun, 86, 149 N. Y. 617.

One who has a payment to make is bound to seek his creditor, and when found to tender to him the debt due. It is not the duty of the creditor to seek the debtor and demand money.

Van Valkenburgh v. Lenox F. Ins. Co. 51 N. Y. 465.

In the interpretation of a contract of insurance that construction will be given which is most favorable to the insured.

Rickerson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 818.

Bartlett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented on this appeal is no longer an open one in this court. It was decided in the case of Nitsch v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 152 N. Y. 635, mem., Affirmed in this court without an opinion. In that case, as in this one, the question presented was whether the provision of the New York standard policy of fire insurance, relating to the cancellation of a policy at the instance of the company, requires that, in addition to giving the five days' notice, the company must return or tender the unearned premiums in order to effect a cancellation. The answer was in the affirmative. The only question presented for consideration in this case, therefore, is whether the defendant returned or tendered the unearned premium. The record contains an admission made by the defendant upon the trial, which is as follows: "It was thereupon admitted by the defendant herein that neither the premium, nor a pro rata amount of the premium of the policy herein, had been returned, paid, or tendered to the plaintiff or his agents, or to the firm of Tisdell & Whittlesey or their agents, by the defendant or its agents." It being the law, as we have observed, that, in addition to the notice of cancellation, there must be a return or tender of the unearned premiums in order to effectuate a cancellation of a policy, this admission of the defendant seems to be broad enough, not only to support the judgment under review, but to cut off all opportunity for controversy on the subject. It is urged, however, that this admission must be read in connection with an admission by the plaintiff that T. Y. Brown, defendant's agent, served upon the firm of Tisdell & Whittlesey a paper, of which the following is a copy:

New York, August 7, 1891.

Tisdell & Whittlesey: You are hereby notified, in accordance with conditions of its policy, that the New Hampshire Fire Insurance Company, of Manchester, N. H., desires to terminate its liability, and cancel policy No. 548,107, issued to you on the 15th day of November, 1890, by T. J. Temple, at 155 Broadway, New York City, insuring stk. and mchy., 128 Fulton St. Therefore, in pursuance of conditions on which said policy was issued, the said company shall without further notice cancel said policy at noon on the 12th day of August, 1891, and the pro rata unearned premium will be returned by T. Y. Brown, agent, 26 Pine street, New York, as provided by conditions of said policy.

Yours, truly, New Hampshire Fire Insurance Co. T. Y. Brown, Agent.

40 L. R. A.

If it be conceded that the contents of this notice should govern, rather than the specific admission of defendant, whenever they come in conflict, the defendant's contention would not be aided, for the notice is not in disagreement with the admission. It need not be argued that, to notify an assured that the "unearned premium will be returned by T. Y. Brown, agent," does not amount to a return of it. No more does the assertion that the notice does not constitute a tender of the unearned premium require support by way of discussion of the elements which go to make up a legal tender. It has been passed upon by this court in Van Valkenburgh v. Lenox F. Ins. Co. 51 N. Y. 465. In that case it was necessary for the defendant, under its contract of insurance with the plaintiff, either to refund or tender the unearned premiums, in addition to giving a notice of cancellation in order to terminate the policy. It claimed before the court that its notice that the unearned premium would be returned to him satisfied its obligation in that respect, but the court held that holding the amount of the premium subject to the call of the insured was insufficient. The company was bound to seek him out, and tender to him the whole amount due.

The order should be affirmed, with costs.

Haight, Martin, and Vann, JJ., concur.

Parker, Ch. J., dissenting:

The plaintiff has recovered a judgment against the defendant upon a policy of fire insurance, which the latter insists was not in force at the time of the fire, its claim being that the policy was canceled long before the fire occurred by the giving of notice that the defendant would cancel the policy on a day therein specified. Whether this notice of itself operated to cancel the policy is the question presented. The plaintiff insists that, in order to effect the cancellation, in addition to the notice it was necessary for the defendant to return or tender the unearned premiums. On the other hand, the defendant asserts that it was only required to give five days' notice of cancellation to accomplish that result. This controversy must be settled by the contract between the parties. That part of it which relates to the subject of the cancellation of the contract reads as follows: "This policy shall be canceled at any time at the request of the insured, or by the company, by giving five days' notice of such cancellation. If this policy shall be canceled, as hereinbefore provided, or become void or cease, the premium having been actually paid, the unearned portion shall be returned on surrender of this policy or last renewal, this company retaining the customary short rates, except that, when this policy is canceled by this company by giving notice, it shall retain only the pro rata premium." The standard policy, of which this forms a part, has been prepared under authority of law by men experienced in insurance contracts, and it is therefore fair to assume that the agreement may be treated as one prepared by men competent to use language adequate to convey clearly and distinctly the views of the parties. In such case it is the rule that, if the language of a statute or contract, read in the order of its clauses, presents no ambiguity, courts will not attempt, through transposition of clauses or ingenious argument as to the general intent, to qualify by construction its meaning. Doe, Poor, v. Considine, 6 Wall. 458, 18 L. ed. 869.

The first sentence provides for the cancellation of a policy. It declares that "it shall be canceled . . . by the company by giving five days' notice of such cancellation," in other words, the underwriter, by its contract, reserved to itself the right to cancel the contract of insurance by a notice of five days. Nothing else is provided to be done. Notice alone shall be sufficient, says the contract. The language is unambiguous. It admits of no debate, and requires no construction. Words more apt to accomplish the cancellation of a policy by the giving of the five days' notice cannot well be imagined. Having provided for a cancellation of the policy, either by the request of the insured or upon notice given by the company, the next clause of the agreement proceeds to make disposition of the unearned premiums, in the event of the exercise of the option to cancel by either of the parties. The opening phrase of the clause shows that what follows proceeds upon the assumption that the policy shall have been canceled before occasion arises for acting under its provisions. It reads: "If this policy shall be canceled as hereinbefore provided [referring necessarily to the company's five days' notice] the unearned portions of the premiums shall be returned." When? At the time of the giving of the five days' notice of cancellation? Not at all; "on the surrender of the policy" is the occasion fixed by the contract for its return. The scheme of this portion of the contract, then, is to provide, first, for the cancellation of the policy; that is to be accomplished by the simple request of the insured, if he desires to cancel it, or by a five days' notice on the part of the company if it desires to terminate its obligation under the policy. The policy having been put an end to by cancellation, at the insistence of one party or the other, then the situation of the parties is such that the company has in its possession certain premiums which it has not earned, and which it does not desire to earn, and the other party has in his possession the policy of insurance, no longer, of course, of use to him, and of no particular value to the company, except that when it finally comes into the company's possession it of itself furnishes evidence that the unearned premiums have been paid to the insured. With this situation, then, the agreement undertakes to deal, and it provides that upon the surrender of the policy the unearned premium, whether at short rate or pro rata premium, depending upon which party brought about the cancellation, shall be returned to the insured. Practically, it says to the insured: "You return the policy to the place where you got it from, and the company will at once turn over the unearned premium to which you are entitled under this contract." This agreement is so clearly expressed that there does not seem to be opportunity for insisting that the language means something quite different from what is suggested to the mind upon the first reading. And still other readings will not prompt the thought that there is possibly any ambiguity.

It is suggested in the opinion of the learned trial judge in the case of Nitsch v. American Cent. Ins. Co. subsequently affirmed in this court without an opinion (152 N. Y. 635, mem.), that, under such a reading of the contract as on its face it is apparent it should have, "a man might pay $1,000 for insurance to-day, receive a notice from the insurance company to-morrow, which would have the effect to cancel his policy in five days, and at the end of the week have no remedy except an action at law against the company." Such a case could happen, undoubtedly, but it is not likely to. Courts cannot assume that insurance companies will act arbitrarily, or that they are so lacking in business prudence as to be willing to acquire a reputation for practicing a wrong of that character upon customers. On the contrary, we must assume that corporations, as well as individuals, intend faithfully to keep their contracts. But, were it our duty to indulge in a totally different presumption, the situation would not be changed, for the court is without authority to make contracts for the parties. The law-making power of the state—the legislature—has undertaken to provide for the creation of a standard policy of fire insurance for the protection alike of the insured and the insurer, and, if the standard policy needs further amendment, relief must be sought from that source.

Prior to the passage of chapter 488 of the Laws of 1886, providing for a uniform contract of fire insurance to be used by fire underwriters within the state, there were two cases in this court, namely, Van Valkenburgh v. Lenox F. Ins. Co. 51 N. Y. 465, and Griffey v. New York Cent. Ins. Co. 100 N. Y. 417, 53 Am. Rep. 202, holding that the cancellation clause was not operative unless the company should tender or return to the insured the amount of the unearned premium. The cancellation clause in those contracts differs very materially from the one in question. It read as follows: "This insurance may be terminated at any time at the request of the assured, in which case the company shall retain only the customary short rates for the time the policy has been in force. The insurance may also be terminated at any time at the option of the company on giving notice to that effect, and refunding a ratable proportion of the premium for the unexpired time of this policy." Now, clearly, that agreement did provide, as the courts held, that two things were required to terminate the policy: First, the giving of the notice; and, second, the refunding of the unearned premium. Now, after these decisions were made, the cancellation clause of the present policy was prepared, and it does not seem to be an intemperate use of the imagination to draw the inference that it was prepared in view of the decisions to which I have referred, and to meet them by establishing a contract which should make cancellation by the company less difficult. It is certainly difficult to see how they could have used language more appropriate to accomplish that result.

Counsel for the respondent insists that this question is no longer an open one in this court, but was put at rest by the affirmance in the Nitech Case, 152 N. Y. 635, mem. It is true that at special term judgment went in favor of the plaintiff upon the ground, as appears from the opinion of the learned trial judge, that, in order to effect a cancellation of the policy, it was necessary to give the five days' notice, and, in addition, to return or tender the unearned premiums to the insured. But there was another ground upon which the affirmance of the judgment was required at the general term and in this court, namely, that after the insured had received the five days' notice of cancellation from the general agent of the insurance company, which was a foreign corporation, he addressed to the corporation at its home office, a letter of inquiry about it, and received such a reply as constituted a waiver of the notice which had been just sent out by the general agent, and thus it happened that the judgment of the circuit rested upon a sure foundation, and required affirmance. The order should be reversed, and a new trial granted, with costs to abide the event.

O'Brien, J., concurs. Gray, J., absent.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

Joseph TURCOTT, Appt.,

v.

YAZOO & MISSISSIPPI VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

(.....Tenn.)

1. A foreign corporation is not "out of the state" within the meaning of Shannon's Code, § 4455, so as to preclude the defense of the statute of limitations, when the corporation has officers and agents in the state on whom service can be made at any time.
2. The failure of a foreign corporation to file and register its charter in compliance with the statute when doing business in the state, until after action is brought against it, will not prevent it from pleading the statute of limitations.

(May 4, 1898.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Shelby County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence.

Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carroll, Chalmers, & McKellar for appellant.

Messrs. Fentress & Cooper for appellee.

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages, for personal injuries inflicted in the shops of the defendant company at Vicksburg, Mississippi. The action was brought at Memphis, Tennessee, on the 25th of May, 1895, about one and one half years after the injury was suffered. Demurrers were filed, and the declaration was amended. To the declaration as amended pleas of not guilty, contributory negligence, and the Tennessee statute of limitation of one year for injuries to persons were filed. The latter plea states in detail that the defendant company had been operating its road through the state of Mississippi into and in the state of Tennessee for fourteen years; that it had an office and agents in the city of Memphis; and on these agents service at any time could have been had; and that at no time had there been any impediment or hindrance to the bringing of this or any other suit against it, or to the service of legal process upon it. To this plea there was a replication, in substance, that the defendant is a foreign corporation organized and existing under the laws of Mississippi, and that at the time of the accrual of this cause of action it had no corporate or legal existence in Tennessee, because it had not complied with the requirements of the Acts of 1891 (chap. 122) as to the filing and registration of its charter, and, not having so complied until after the bringing of this suit, it cannot plead the statute of limitations of one year in bar of the suit. There was a demurrer to this replication, and the demurrer was sustained.

The exact questions presented are whether foreign corporations can plead and rely upon this Tennessee statute of limitation when they have offices and agents in the state subject to continuous service of process, and whether the failure to file and register its charter will deprive it of that right if otherwise it would be held to have it. Under the statutes of Tennessee (Shannon's Code, § 4469) it is provided, among other things, that actions for injuries to the person must be commenced within one year after the cause of action accrues, or be barred. Section 4455, Shannon's Code, provides: "If at any time any cause of action shall accrue against any person who shall be out of this state, the action may be commenced within the time limited therefor after such person shall have come into the state and after any cause of action shall have accrued. If the person against whom it has accrued shall be absent from or reside out of the state, the time of his absence or residence out of the state shall not be taken as any part of the time limited for the commencement of the action." The word "person" includes a "corporation." Id. § 62. The exception made in this statute does not apply to a natural person unless his absence from the state is such as to prevent service of process. Taylor v. McGill, 6 Lea, 294, 301. The statutes relating to service of process upon corporations are as follows: "Service of process on the president or other head of a corporation, or, in his absence, on the cashier, treasurer, or secretary, or, in the absence of such officers, on any director of such corporation shall be sufficient." Shannon's Code, § 4839. "If neither the president, cashier, or secretary resides within the state service on the chief agent of the corporation residing at the time in the county where the action is brought shall be deemed sufficient." Id. § 4540. No question is made but that there was ample opportunity to obtain service of process at any time on the defendant, through its officers and agents, nor that foreign corporations are liable to service under these sections. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Turner, 88 Tenn. 266. But the contention is that a foreign corporation is out of the state, and resides out of the state, and so falls within the exception before stated; and that, while process may be made upon it, still it is optional with a party aggrieved whether and when he will commence his suit, and the bar of the statute cannot be set up if the suit is not brought within one year, and that it does not come within the state, in legal contemplation, till it files and registers its charter. It appears that there is some conflict of decision upon the first question. The reason of the rule of law is that no person who is not, and has not been, subject to service of process within the year, shall avail himself of its exemption. Taylor v. McGill, 6 Lea, 294. Unquestionably, the residence of a corporation is the state of its creation. Young v. South Tredgar Iron Co. 85 Tenn. 189. And, if we should give the statute a strict literal construction, it might be held that a foreign corporation was not entitled to the benefit of the limitation. Still the courts will not permit the literalism of the statute to thwart its obvious purpose, intent, and meaning. A thing may be within the letter of the statute, yet not within its operation, if not so intended. State, Dolan, v. Clarksville & R. Turnp. Co. 2 Sneed, 88; Taylor v. McGill, 6 Lea, 294. We think the true rule is laid down in Murfree on Foreign Corporations, and that the rule as thus laid down is based on sound reason and principle. In speaking of such foreign corporation pleading the statute of limitations (§ 247) it is said: "As to the second question, whether a foreign company, when sued, can plead the bar of the statute in defense, it may be said that the great weight of authority is in favor of the conclusion suggested above, that the true test of the running of the statute is the liability of the party, invoking its bar, to the service of process during the whole of the period prescribed, that if the operations of the company within the jurisdiction were such as to render it liable to suit, then it may plead the statute. The principles upon which this doctrine rests have nowhere been more effectively expressed than in the decision of the Illinois appellate court, in Pennsylvania Co. v. Sloan, 1 Ill. App. 364. Said Pleasants, J. (who delivered the opinion of the court), after referring to a number of cases holding that a corporation must be considered an inhabitant of the state by which it is created: 'We should have no hesitation in approving these applications of the doctrine, if there were no other element in the cases bearing on the question than the origin and nature of the corporation. For it is true that a positive law can never, of its own force, and ordinarily does not otherwise, operate beyond the territorial limits of the power by which it is enacted; and hence, unless otherwise enabled, a corporation must, indeed, 'dwell in the place of its creation, and cannot migrate into another sovereignty.' But the law of one state may have operation for certain purposes in another, by the comity or permission of the latter; and we see no insuperable difficulty in the way of such migration, provided the former does not positively forbid, and the latter does positively consent. It is conceded that with such consent they lawfully may, as they often actually do, remove their officers, agents, offices, and effects into another sovereignty, and there exercise their functions and franchises. In such a case, where is the corporation? If it be said that it still dwells in the place of its creation, and is acting elsewhere only by agents, the answer is, no more by agents elsewhere than in the place of its creation. It can do nothing anywhere, nor manifest its presence or being at all, except through its agents, its property, or its operation. Where these are, then, it seems most accordant with substantial fact and reason to say, there is the corporation. Where these are not, we know of no means by which process can be served upon it; and, if there be none, that fact would seem to be conclusive upon the question of residence for the time being, at least for purposes of judicial jurisdiction.' In Montana it was held that the fact that a foreign company had subjected itself to a penalty, by failing to file its charter or act of incorporation as required by the statute, though such failure did not disqualify it from being sued, did not thereby lose the right to plead the statute." See King v. National Min. & Exploring Co. 4 Mont. 1. In support of the text the author cites the following authorities: Bank of United States v. McKenzie, 2 Brock. 393. Compare Clarke v. Bank of Mississippi, 10 Ark. 516, 52 Am. Dec. 248; Church of Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 86 L. ed. 227; Russ v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 66 Ala. 472; Laurence v. Bal-lou, 50 Cal. 258; United States Exp. Co. v. Ware, 20 Wall. 543, 22 L. ed. 422; Hall v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 28 Vt. 401; Pennsylvania Co. v. Sloan, 1 Ill. App. 364; King v. National Min. & Exploring Co. 4 Mont. 1; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Duerson, 28 Gratt. 680; Wall v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 498; McCabe v. Illinois C. R. Co. 4 McCrary, 492, 13 Fed. Rep. 827; Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co. (Iowa) 50 N. W. 565. See also Koons v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 23 Iowa 493. Compare Abell v. Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. 18 W. Va. 400; North Missouri R. Co. v. Akers, 4 Kan. 453, 16 Am. Dec. 183; Waterman v. A. & W. Sprague Mfg. Co. 55 Conn. 554; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 608, 87 L. ed. 301.

NOTE.—As to the right of a foreign corporation to plead the statute of limitations, see Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co. (Iowa) 18 L. R. A. 524, 40 L. R. A.

We are aware that New York, Nevada, Kansas, and possibly other states do not follow this rule. It is said that such holding raises a discrimination against individuals and in favor of corporations. The argument is that individuals cannot claim the exemption when they are out of the state or are nonresidents, and it would be inequitable to allow corporations out of the state or nonresidents to claim it. But this apparent difference arises out of the fact that individuals out of the state, or residing out of it, cannot be reached by process against a resident agent while a corporation can, so that in the one case suit cannot be brought and in the other it may. Absence from the state and residence out of the state, in the sense of the statute, means such absence and such nonresidence as renders it impracticable at all times to obtain service of process; so that, while a corporation's technical legal residence may be where it was created, its residence and status for purposes of suit will be where it can, through its officers and agents, be reached with process. While a corporation may reside beyond the state and be out of the state, still it may, through its officers and agents, subject itself to the jurisdiction of courts of the state. It may sue and be sued in a jurisdiction foreign to its technical residence. Nor do we think the failure to comply with the act of 1891 (chap. 122) will preclude this foreign corporation from setting up the statute. It would not be a proper construction of that statute to hold that a corporation actually doing business in the state without complying with the statute could not be sued for a tort committed; and, having been impleaded upon the ground of a tort, it cannot be that the failure to comply with that statute must preclude it from making any defense, for it logically follows that, if it cannot make this defense, because of its failure it can make no other. The scope and purpose of that act were to require corporations to file and register their charters in order that they might do business, own or acquire property, and be enabled to sue; but it was never intended to exempt them from suit if they disregarded the statute, nor to estop them from making defense, if so sued; otherwise their property might be taken from them, and they estopped to defend. This company was in the state, owning property and doing business, before the act was passed; and while this did not exempt it from a compliance with the act in order that it might have all the rights of a domestic corporation, at the same time it was not the purpose nor the proper construction of that act that its property should be taken from it, or its right to defend actions brought against it should be cut off by its failure to comply with it.

Let the judgment be affirmed, with costs.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois, ex rel.
William MOONEY,

v.

William F. HUTCHINSON.

(172 Ill. 466.)

1. A legislative interpretation of the Constitution, long established and acquiesced in, is of great force in determining the true construction.
2. A constitutional provision fixing the time and mode of exercising a particular power contains a necessary implication against anything contrary to it.
3. One exercise of the legislative power to make an apportionment of the state based on the last Federal census, under Const. art. 4, § 8, providing that the general assembly shall apportion the state every ten years by dividing the population as ascertained by the Federal census, exhausts the power, and precludes the change of the apportionment until the conditions provided for in the Constitution shall again exist.

(Wuktn, J., dissents.)

(April 29, 1898.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to receive and file a certificate of nomination of the relator for the office of state senator. Writ granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Moloney & Scofield, for petitioner:

Section 6 of article 4 of the Constitution of 1870 is as follows: "Sec. 6. The general assembly shall apportion the state every ten years, beginning with the year 1871, by dividing the population of the state, as ascertained by the Federal census, by the number 51, and the quotient shall be the ratio of representation in the senate, etc."

It appears from the 1st section of each of the apportionment acts enacted since the adoption of the Constitution of 1848, that the legislature which adopted the respective acts construed the sections of the Constitution relating to the apportionment of the state into senatorial districts to restrict them to an apportionment once in ten years.

Webster v. French, 12 Ill. 304; Abel v. Alexander, 45 Ind. 523, 15 Am. Rep. 270; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 698, note 4; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 73.

The intention of the statute must be sought in the words, and courts have no right to suppose that the legislature intended anything different from their natural import.

Way v. Way, 64 Ill. 406; Stuart v. Hamilton, 66 Ill. 258.

The act of May 16, 1898, was never law, and the repealing clause of the act of June 15, 1898, so far as it related to said act, might have been omitted. Its provision did not cover the entire state of Illinois, and it was therefore unconstitutional.

Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 442, 30 L. ed. 186.

If the general assembly has no authority to apportion the state at any other time than after the taking of each Federal census, then it is without authority to amend an apportionment, when once constitutionally enacted, because such an amendment, in effect, is a second apportionment.

NOTE.—For apportionment acts, see also Denny v. State, Basler (Ind.) 31 L. R. A. 726, and other cases there cited.

40 L. R. A.

What a court is to do is to declare the law as written, leaving it to the people themselves to make such changes as new circumstances may require.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 68; Hills v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 90; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 188, 6 L. ed. 68; Beardstown v. Virginia, 76 Ill. 40.

It is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation.

McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 601; Newell v. People, Phelps, 7 N. Y. 97; State, Lewis, v. Doron, 5 Nev. 899; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 612, 10 L. ed. 1088; Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 581, 20 L. ed. 306; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 188, 6 L. ed. 68; People v. New York C. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 487; Smith v. Thursty, 28 Md. 289.

The power was delegated by the people to the legislature to redistrict the state after each Federal census has been taken, and the districts so created are to be based upon such census, and the districts thus created shall constitute the senatorial districts until the succeeding Federal census has been taken, and new districts created in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution.

Denny v. State, Baster, 144 Ind. 503, 31 L. R. A. 726; Slauson v. Racine, 13 Wis. 898; State, Atty. Gen., v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 15 L. R. A. 561; State, Lamb, v. Cunningham, 83 Wis. 90, 17 L. R. A. 145.

Messrs. Joseph W. Fifer and John M. Palmer for respondent.

Cartwright, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator, William Mooney, of Joliet, in Will county, in pursuance of leave of the court granted for that purpose, has filed his petition for a writ of mandamus, directed to the defendant, William F. Hutchinson, county clerk of said Will county, commanding him to receive and file a certificate of nomination of the relator for the office of state senator from the twenty-fifth senatorial district. The petition alleges that relator has been duly nominated by a convention held at Joliet, in said county, March 12, 1898, as the candidate of the Democratic party for senator from said senatorial district, consisting of said county of Will, as created by the act of the legislature approved June 15, 1898, in force July 1, 1898, apportioning the state into senatorial districts; that a certificate of said nomination has been duly made and presented to said defendant, and that defendant refuses to receive and file the same, for the reason that said senatorial district has been changed by the addition of Dupage county, by an act of the legislature approved January 11, 1898, entitled "An Act to Amend §§ 1 and 2 of an Act Entitled 'An Act to Apportion the State of Illinois into Senatorial Districts and to Repeal Certain Acts Therein Named,' Approved June 15, 1898, in force July 1, 1898," and that defendant claims that by virtue of said act of January 11, 1898, said twenty-fifth senatorial district now consists of Will and Dupage counties. The defendant has entered his appearance, waiving service of process, and the parties have each waived all formalities, and submit the cause for decision upon a stipulation that the facts stated in the petition are true. The question thus raised is whether the election for senators and representatives to be held in November, 1898, is to be held in the districts as created by the law approved June 15, 1898, in force July 1, 1898, or in the districts as fixed by said amendatory act approved January 11, 1898, and which, if valid, will go into effect July 1, 1898. The latter act was passed with all the formalities required by law, and was duly approved, and the decision depends upon the question whether its enactment was within the power of the legislature. It is agreed that we shall make a final order dismissing the petition or granting a peremptory writ of mandamus, according as we shall find the one or the other of these acts in force.

The duty of passing upon the constitutionality of an act of the legislature has always been regarded as a delicate one, to be entered upon with hesitation and caution, and to call for most deliberate and careful attention. The legislative and executive branches of the government have necessarily construed the Constitution, and determined that they may rightfully exercise the power assumed by the passage of the act, and their decision is entitled to the highest respect. In the consideration of the question involved, the presumption is in favor of the constitutionality of the act, and it will only be set aside in case of a clear infringement of the Constitution. It is to be assumed that the legislature has not only considered the question of power, but has also acted from patriotic motives, and that in this case the amendatory act was prompted by a sense of duty and justice towards the people in an attempt to secure for them a nearer approach to equality of representation in making the laws by which they are governed. It so happens that this twenty-fifth district selected for the settlement of the controversy was one of those used in the case of People, Woodyatt, v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, to illustrate the difference of population of different districts, and the want of equality under the act of June 15, 1898. This district was made to consist of Will county alone, with a population 24,876 less than the adjoining twenty-ninth district, composed of the four counties of Lee, Dekalb, Kendall, and Grundy. The presumption is that it was for the purpose of a better adjustment of rights of representation that Dupage county was added, and that the amendatory act was passed with a view to make the legislative branch of the government more nearly representative of the people in their sovereign capacity. This, however, cannot influence the determination of the case if there was a want of power to make the change, for it has always been held, as it was in People, Woodyatt, v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, that the court cannot declare a statute unconstitutional and void on the ground of unjust differences not prohibited by the Constitution, and within the legislative discretion, and neither can the court sustain a law where there is a want of power to enact it, merely because it is wise in policy or just in its provisions. The parties have properly raised and presented the question of the validity of the act of 1898, and, however grave we may regard the responsibility, we cannot decline the duty imposed upon us; and, if the act is found to be in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution, we cannot hesitate to so declare.

The Constitution divides the powers of the government into three distinct departments, and for the exercise of legislative power creates a legislative department, to be elected by the people in senatorial districts. The provision authorizing the apportionment of the state into such senatorial districts is § 6 of article 4, which provides as follows: "The general assembly shall apportion the state every ten years, beginning with the year 1871, by dividing the population of the state, as ascertained by the Federal census, by the number 51, and the quotient shall be the ratio of representation in the senate. The state shall be divided into fifty-one senatorial districts," etc. Acting under the provisions of said section, the legislature, by the act of June 15, 1898, divided the state, according to the last Federal census, into fifty-one senatorial districts, and by that act the county of Will was made the twenty-fifth district. The act of January 11, 1898, was in form an amendment, which re-modeled and changed forty-three of these senatorial districts, and in the case of the twenty-fifth district added to Will county the county of Dupage. Section 1 of the same article of the Constitution is as follows: "The legislative power shall be vested in a general assembly which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives, both to be elected by the people," and there are further provisions of the Constitution that three representatives and one senator shall be elected in each district, and they constitute the two houses.

The passage of an apportionment act is the exercise of a legislative power (State, Morris, v. Wrightson, 58 N. J. L. 126, 22 L. R. A. 548; State, Atty. Gen. v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 15 L. R. A. 561), and, if there were no other provisions relating to apportionment than the general legislative authority conferred by § 1, the legislature might apportion the state at its pleasure, at any time. There is no express denial in the Constitution of the right to exercise this power whenever the legislature may see fit, and it is therefore argued for the defendant that it may be exercised at any time, and that the legislature may make an apportionment whenever they choose. This does not follow, however, and it is not essential, in order that the Constitution may operate as a prohibition, that it shall contain a specific provision that apportionments shall not be made otherwise than according to its provisions. The general principles governing the construction of Constitutions are the same as those that apply to statutes. Potter's Dwarrr. Stat. 654; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 921. The use of negative words would be conclusive of an intent to impose a limitation, and they are used in some instances in the Constitution, but their absence is not conclusive of the opposite. Where there are provisions inserted by the people as to the time when a power shall be exercised, there is at least a strong presumption that they design it should be exercised at that time, and in the designated mode only; and such provisions must be regarded as limitations upon the power. Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 94. If legislative power is given in general terms, and is not regulated, it may be exercised in any manner chosen by the legislature; but where the Constitution fixes the time and mode of exercising a particular power it contains a necessary implication against anything contrary to it, and by setting a particular time for its exercise it also sets a boundary to the legislative power. If a power is given, and the mode of its exercise is prescribed, all other modes are excluded. Sedgw. Stat. & Const. Law, 81. The legislature must keep within the legislative powers granted to it, and observe the directions of the Constitution. Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 26. This doctrine was applied in State, Morris, v. Wrightson, 58 N. J. L. 126, 22 L. R. A. 548, where an apportionment of assembly districts in New Jersey was in question, and it was said: "In the construction of statutes it is a cardinal rule, which applies as well to constitutional provisions, that when the law is in the affirmative that a thing shall be done by certain persons or in a certain manner, this affirmative matter contains a negative that it shall not be done by other persons or in another manner, upon the maxim, Expressio unius est exclusio alterius."

In Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 333, 98 Am. Dec. 272, which involved the constitutionality of the registry law of that state, it was held that the inhibitions of the Constitution as to legislation are to be regarded as well when they arise by implication as by expression, and that the expression of one thing in the Constitution is the exclusion of things not expressed. It is here admitted, as it necessarily must be, that the provisions for apportionment are all exclusive except the particular one as to time. It is not denied that the basis for apportionment must be the population of the state as ascertained by the last Federal census, that the population can only be divided by the number 51, and that the quotient must be the ratio of representation in the senate. The only claim is that the provision as to time is not exclusive, and we cannot see any substantial ground for establishing a different rule respecting the time than the mode of doing the act. In Wisconsin the Constitution provided for an apportionment and organization of assembly districts once in five years, but contained no express prohibition against their alteration between the periods fixed for apportionment, and in Stauson v. Racine, 13 Wis. 398, it was said that, whatever limitation existed upon the power of the legislature in that respect was to be derived from the general scope and object of the provisions of the Constitution concerning the apportionment of senators and representatives, but that it might well be said that this furnished such limitation, and it was held that the provision implied that apportionments should not be made at any other time than that fixed by the Constitution. The Constitution of Indiana fixes the time once in six years when an enumeration of the voters of the state shall be taken, and an apportionment shall be made by law. In Denney v. State, Basler, 144 Ind. 508, 31 L. R. A. 726, an apportionment act passed in 1895 was in question, and the main dispute was whether, under the Constitution, any apportionment act could be passed at that time. It was insisted, in support of the act, that the Constitution committed to the legislative department, by a general grant of legislative power, the authority to make apportionments, and that the provision requiring the enactment of an apportionment law at the beginning of each period of six years was not intended as a prohibition upon the legislature from making other apportionments whenever that body might think best. This question was determined against the claim made, and it was held that if there were no particular provisions in regard to the subject of legislative apportionment, the legislature might, under the full and unrestricted vesting of legislative power, enact apportionment laws at their pleasure, but that the fixing by the Constitution of a time and mode for the doing of such act was, by necessary implication, a forbidding of any other time or mode, and a prohibition of the exercise of the power in any other way.

The eminent counsel who have argued this case for the defendant with great learning and ability have failed to find any decisions contrary to the foregoing, or any authorities conflicting with those given, but insist that there is a difference between the Constitutions of Indiana and this state, which makes the decision in Denney v. State, Basler, 144 Ind. 503, 31 L. R. A. 726, inapplicable here. The distinction attempted to be shown we are compelled to regard as unsubstantial, and cannot consider it a ground of difference that the enumeration which was made the basis of the apportionment in Indiana is taken by the state once in six years, while the census which is made a like basis in this state is taken by the United States, and once in ten years. The Federal Constitution, which was adopted in 1787, provides in § 2 of article 1 for an enumeration within three years after the first meeting of Congress; and within every subsequent term of ten years, as a basis for the apportionment of representatives and direct taxes. Under that Constitution a census has been taken in every period of ten years, commencing with 1790, and under it there will be, at every period of ten years provided for by the Constitution of this state, a census taken as a basis for division of the state into senatorial districts.

The decisions are also criticised by counsel for defendant under the rule that what is expressed is exclusive only where it is creative, and that the maxim applies only to a provision which grants originally a power, but does not limit or destroy a pre-existing right. It is contended that the power to apportion does not originate with the provision of the Constitution, but is a pre-existing right independent of the provision, and that, therefore, the rule is not to be applied. To this we cannot assent. The legislature is the creature of the Constitution, and the provisions in respect to the two houses, the division of the state into senatorial districts by a particular plan, and the membership of each of the houses, are creative in their nature. They relate to the framework—the membership and the organization—of the legislative department of the government created by the Constitution for the exercise of legislative powers. They prescribe the manner in which districts shall be created, that a senator and three representatives shall be elected in each district, and provide for the constitution and organization of the department which shall exercise legislative power. The conditions for the exercise of this power of apportionment are particularly prescribed, and we think that those acting under it cannot vary the conditions. Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 533. Another rule is that, where there is a general provision which would include a particular subject, and there is a special provision relating to that subject, the special provision controls, and the particular subject is not governed by the general provision. In this rule we found, as we conceived, a substantial ground for holding the judicial apportionment act of 1897 in force from its passage, and not included in the general provision as to when laws shall take effect. People, Herdman, v. Rose, 166 Ill. 422. Here there is a general delegation of legislative power, with subsequent provisions giving specific and precise directions to make the apportionment at a particular time and in a designated way, and these, we think, manifest an intention to impose a negative upon the exercise of the power at any other time.

We have already said that, if there were no further provision than the general grant of legislative power, the legislature might apportion the state at its will; and this was the situation under the Constitution of 1818, which contained no restriction except the single one in § 8 of the schedule to that instrument, fixing the apportionment until the first enumeration directed to be taken in 1820 and every five years thereafter. The apportionment after the first census was not made to depend upon any subsequent enumeration or event, and after the first enumeration the legislature not only apportioned the state every five years, but made changes during intervals. A change in the practice commenced with the adoption of the Constitution in force April 1, 1848. In that Constitution was first introduced a provision for reapportionment at particular times, according to the number of white inhabitants at the first regular session after returns were made. Under that Constitution the legislature made its first reapportionment in 1854, based on the census of 1850. This apportionment continued in force until the Federal census was taken in 1860, and then a new apportionment was made in 1861. The present Constitution was adopted in 1870, containing a similar provision now under consideration. After that time the legislature apportioned the state in the years 1872, 1882, and 1898. From the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848 for a period of fifty years, up to the act of January 11, 1898, apportionments were made at the intervals stated, based upon the census taken by the United States, and there was no change made between such periods. This practical construction of the Constitution reinforces the conclusion at which we have arrived. Such a legislative interpretation, long established and acquiesced in, is regarded as of great force in determining the true construction, and raises a strong presumption that it is correct. Sedgw. Stat. & Const. Law, 412; Bruce v. Schuyler, 9 Ill. 221, 46 Am. Dec. 447;

Mathews v. Shores, 24 Ill. 27; People, Dunham v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 558; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 82.

Attention has been called by counsel to the fact that the legislature of 1898 passed an apportionment act which was approved May 16, 1898, and also passed the subsequent act of June 15, 1898, repealing the same and apportioning the state. This act of May 16, 1898, is conceded to have been an unconstitutional and void act, which never became a law for the reason that it omitted the town of Riverside, a populous town in Cook county, which was not included in any of the senatorial districts, and was deprived of representation. The validity of the act of June 15, 1898, was therefore not affected by it, since the power to apportion the state was not thereby exercised. The validity of the act of June 15 passed beyond the field of controversy by the decision in People, Woodgatt, v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, and is now conceded. The act of May 16, 1898, has no force as affecting the question of construction by the legislative body of the legislative power, because it was incomplete and void. Its passage and repeal do not in any manner weaken the force of the construction of the Constitution given by the legislature and acquiesced in for a period of about fifty years.

It is also argued that a fair construction of the provision in question is that it was to secure to the people a reapportionment at least once in ten years, rather than to fix the time for the exercise of the power or to operate as an exclusion of apportionments at other times. The same argument was insisted upon in Denney v. State, Basler, 144 Ind. 508, 81 L. R. A. 726, but did not prevail, and it was held that the apportionment could only be made after the taking of an enumeration, and that, when a valid apportionment was once made, it must stand until after the making of the next enumeration. If the purpose had been as contended, it is probable that the Constitution would have expressed that intent, which is lacking. Furthermore, it does not seem, from the history of legislative apportionments prior to the adoption of the provision, that there was any occasion to provide for securing apportionments as often as such periods, or that a neglect to apportion was regarded as an evil to be provided against. The legislatures during the thirty years under the Constitution of 1818 had been in the habit of making frequent apportionments. The courts may always look to ascertain the evil intended to be remedied, but this provision could not have been aimed at an evil which did not exist, and it would rather seem that the object was to establish definite periods for reapportionments. When the legislature of 1893 made the apportionment of that year, the conditions existed which authorized the exercise of the power, and the legislative discretion was exercised based upon the Federal census of 1890,—a division of the population by 51, and the resulting quotient as the ratio of representation. That power and discretion, when fully exercised, were exhausted, and the power will not again arise until the conditions provided for in the Constitution shall again exist. The power and discretion are to be exercised at stated intervals, and in certain modes, and that legislature, upon a consideration of the facts, exercised the power and the discretion. A subsequent reapportionment, based upon the same census, the same division, and the same quotient, which it is admitted must be used, would be nothing but reversing the judgment and discretion of that legislature, exercised upon the same facts at the time expressly authorized by the Constitution; and we cannot think that it was in the contemplation of those who adopted the Constitution that succeeding legislatures should set aside the action of the first by changing and remodeling districts, where no new condition contemplated by the Constitution exists. The power to make apportionments has not always been exercised at exact periods of ten years, but the power conferred by the Constitution is a continuing one from the time it is constitutionally devolved upon the legislature until it is performed. People, Woodgatt, v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451; State, Atty. Gen., v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 15 L. R. A. 561. Twelve states, having a general plan of apportionment similar to our own, have, by their Constitutions, forbidden a change between the periods fixed in such Constitutions. These prohibitions are conclusive of that which, in our case, must be the subject of construction, and which has been practically construed by the legislature for a long period of time, as we have already seen. The absence of such an express prohibition in our Constitution is not, as before stated, at all conclusive that the prohibition was not intended.

40 L. R. A.

Plausible reasons may be given for sustaining the power,—and especially in this particular instance,—which would naturally appeal with force to those who believe that the apportionment of 1898 was prompted by some other motive than the public good, or a desire to secure to the people, as near as possible, equality of representation; but this consideration cannot have force as against the provisions of the Constitution, and it is to be remembered that the same rule which would permit a correction of inequality would also permit the setting aside of a just and fair apportionment made at the time fixed by the Constitution, and the substitution of unjust and oppressive conditions within the latitude allowed by the Constitution to the legislature. We are convinced that the construction we have given to the Constitution is the correct one, and we feel ourselves under the necessity of declaring the apportionment act of 1898 unconstitutional and invalid.

A peremptory writ of mandamus is awarded according to the prayer of the petition.

Wilkin, J., dissenting:

In the limited time at my disposal, I can only state in a general way why I think the foregoing opinion and conclusion unsound. The proposition, "The provision authorizing the apportionment of the state into such senatorial districts is § 6 of article 4," is in my opinion a misconception, and forms the basis of the wrong conclusion reached. That section does not empower the general assembly to make apportionment laws, nor does its language purport to do so. It only declares how the power already existing in the legislature shall be exercised. Nor can I see how the fact that the legislative body of the state is provided for in the Constitution—"is the creature of the Constitution"—in any way gives support to the assertion that § 6 is creative of the power in that body to apportion the state. It is admitted that the power to pass such laws is a legislative power. It is inherent in the general assembly, and can be exercised by it at such times and in such manner as it may deem wise and proper, except in so far as it is limited by the Constitution. It has often been said by this court: "No proposition is better settled than that a state Constitution is a limitation upon the power of the legislature, and that the legislature possesses every power not delegated to some other department or expressly denied to it by the Constitution." The rule is nowhere more clearly stated than by Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations, quoted with approval in People, Woodgett, v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, as follows: "Whatever the people might do the courts cannot prevent their representatives from doing unless the people have positively and expressly forbidden it. Such restrictions and limitations ought to be clear and explicit. Where the power which is exercised is legislative in its character, the courts can enforce only those limitations which the Constitution imposes, and not those implied restrictions which, resting in theory only, the people have been satisfied to leave to the judgment, patriotism, and sense of justice of their representatives." The question here, is, Does the language "the general assembly shall apportion the state every ten years, beginning with the year 1871, by dividing the population," etc., prohibit the passage of such statutes oftener than once in each period of ten years? The language as to when an apportionment shall be made, it will be seen is very general and indefinite, and does not warrant the assumption throughout the majority opinion that it fixes the time when it shall be done. It does not require the first apportionment to be made in the year 1871, or at the first session after the Federal census of 1870, and every ten years thereafter; and in this respect is peculiar. It is unlike our Constitution of 1848, or that of the states of Indiana and Wisconsin, referred to in the cases cited from those states. They expressly provide for apportionments at fixed intervals, but no such requirement is found in our present Constitution. It does no more than fix decennial periods, beginning with the year 1871, and require an apportionment to be made within each of those periods. Any session of the legislature during the period can lawfully divide the state into senatorial districts, if it has not been done at a prior session in the period,—and this, not because it was the duty of a prior session to do so, and the duty a continuing one, but because the duty devolves upon one session as much as another. It could not be claimed that the act in question is unconstitutional because passed in the year 1898. The contention must be that power is only given to make one apportionment in the period, beginning with the year 1891, and ending with the year 1901; and that the legislature of 1898, by the passage of the act at that session, had exhausted that power. Is it true that the authority of the general assembly is by this indefinite language limited to the passage of a single act during each ten years? That there is no express language to that effect is admitted. But the theory of the foregoing opinion is that the prohibition arises by necessary implication. I do not so understand the language. The power to apportion the state every ten years is not, in my opinion, so incompatible or inconsistent with the right to do so oftener as to amount to an implied prohibition. The assertion that there is no substantial ground for establishing a different rule respecting the time when apportionments may be made than that which applies to the mode of doing the act, is certainly unwarranted. It is conceded by the respondent that an apportionment must be made every ten years; but the insistence is that consistently with that duty, it may be done oftener, and this raises the question of construction. It is impossible, however, that a mode other than that prescribed, can be followed consistently with the provision in question: that is, the population must be divided by 51, the quotient to be the ratio of representation. Certainly the ratio cannot be obtained consistently with that express requirement by using any other number as a divisor, and hence there is no room whatever for construction in that regard. And so as to the other requirements in the mode prescribed. The holding here is that, because the Constitution says the general assembly shall apportion the state every ten years, it cannot do so more than once in any period of ten years, no matter what may be the emergency therefor. It seems to me no such conclusion can be reasonably drawn, much less arise by necessary implication. It is the duty of courts to so construe constitutional provisions and acts of the legislature as to harmonize the two, and sustain the law, if it is possible to do so. The rule is: "Language restricting the legislative power of the general assembly must be construed strictly (People, Burgess, v. Wilson, 15 Ill. 392), and, unless it shall then clearly appear that the legislation in question is within the terms of the restriction, it must be sustained. If it be doubtful only, whether it is or not, the doubt must go in favor of the validity of the action of the general assembly." Wilson v. Sanitary District, 133 Ill. 459. "If doubt exists as to the constitutionality of the statute, the benefit of the doubt is to be given to the law. The doubt upon which the court is to act may arise either from an endeavor to arrive at a true interpretation of the Constitution, or from a consideration of the law after the meaning of the Constitution has been judicially determined." 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 351, and cases cited in note. The Constitution, considered as a whole, shows that its framers did not intend the effect given to the language of § 6 by this decision. If the purpose had been to prohibit apportionments oftener than once every ten years it is reasonable to suppose that language would have been used clearly expressing that intention, as is done in § 9 of article 4, fixing the sessions of the general assembly at the time named "and at no other time;" and in § 5 of article 6, providing for the division of the state into districts for the election of supreme judges, wherein it is said: "The boundaries of the districts may be changed at the session of the general assembly next preceding the election for judges therein, and at no other time;" and again in § 13 of the same article, authorizing the apportionment of the state into judicial circuits, the language being, "New circuits may be formed and the boundaries of circuits changed by the general assembly, at its session next preceding the election for circuit judges, but at no other time." It is also a significant fact that no less than twelve other states of the Union in the frame of their Constitutions have deemed it necessary, by the use of different terms of expression, to provide that apportionments should be made at fixed periods, and at no other time.

There is, to my mind, no force in the argument attempted to be drawn from what is said to be the construction placed upon the Constitution by the legislature in making apportionments of the state every ten years, and not oftener. In dividing the state into senatorial districts once in each period of ten years, the legislature did so, not under a construction of the Constitution thereby placed upon it, but by simply following its plain requirement. That it did not do so oftener cannot be said to amount to a construction by it that no power existed to do so. It cannot be assumed that it refrained from exercising the power, because it understood it did not possess it, rather than because it found no occasion for its exercise. The only necessity for a reapportionment more than once in a decennial period which is here shown arose at the session of 1898, as stated in the foregoing majority opinion, and that legislature did not hesitate to make it. The attempt to weaken the force of that action, as indicating the construction placed upon the Constitution by the legislature, upon the ground that the first act was unconstitutional, is, I think, futile. Without reference to the question as to the power of the legislature to pass upon the constitutionality of statutes enacted by it, it is illogical to say that the legislature could review its own acts by repealing the former statute at the same session, or, as I suppose would be admitted, at the next session of the legislature, on the ground that it was unconstitutional because some small part of the territory was attached to no district, but would have no power to do so upon a discovery that the apportionment was grossly unjust to the people of one or many portions of the state by reason of a disregard of the requirement that the districts shall be formed of compact and contiguous territory, etc., and as nearly as practicable containing an equal number of inhabitants.

No good purpose will be served by a review of the authorities cited in the majority opinion. Unless it must be held that the power of the general assembly to apportion the state is derived from § 6, supra, of the Constitution, or rather unless there is no reasonable ground for holding otherwise, none of them, properly understood, support the conclusion announced. The Wisconsin case does not decide the question here involved, nor pretend to do so. And the Indiana decision does so only incidentally, the question not being of controlling importance in that case. But, as already said, the constitutional provisions of these states and those of our own are materially different, and 40 L. R. A.

the decisions for that reason should not be given the force of authority here. The fact that counsel for the defendant have been able to cite no decisions in conflict with them signifies nothing. As already said, the language of our Constitution is peculiar, and so far as I have been able to discover, is found in no other state Constitution. It is before this court for the first time to be construed, and it is not strange that decided cases are not to be found bearing on the issues here. It is not for the defendant to show that the act in question is constitutional, but for those who challenge its validity to point out and make clear its invalidity. For the reason already stated, that the power to make apportionments is inherent in the legislature, and not created by the Constitution, the maxim, Expressio unius est exclusio alterius, is not properly applicable in the construction of § 6. It is a rule only to be applied where the intention of the lawmaker is not otherwise manifest; and, as said by Mr. Sutherland, in his work on Statutory Construction, § 825: "Under these conditions it leads to safe and satisfactory conclusions; but otherwise the expression of one or more things is not a negation or exclusion of other things;" and he adds, "What is expressed is exclusive only when it is creative, or in derogation of some existing law, or of some provisions in the particular act." In my opinion, the apportionment act of January 11, 1898, entitled "An Act to Amend §§ 1 and 2 of an Act to Apportion the State of Illinois into Senatorial Districts," and to repeal certain acts therein named, approved June 15, 1898, is a valid and constitutional enactment, and that the writ in this case should be denied.

Bernard P. GAVIN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Susanna CURTIN.

(171 Ill. 640.)

1. Equity may take jurisdiction to protect an unproductive life estate and remainder of great value which is liable to be lost through inability of the life tenant to pay the taxes.
2. Absence of precedent is not a sufficient reason for denying the existence of equitable jurisdiction.
3. Equity will take jurisdiction in all cases where a right recognized by municipal law exists, and courts of law do not provide an adequate remedy for the enforcement, maintenance, and protection of that right.
4. The testator's intention that real estate should not be alienated will not prevent a court of equity from ordering its sale if necessary, to preserve the benefit of it to the beneficiary.
5. Land left to a life tenant and remainderman may be sold by a court of equity if it is necessary to prevent its loss through inability of the life tenant to pay the taxes.

NOTE.—On the question of the power of courts to cut off the interests of persons not in caw, see also Kent v. Church of St. Michael (N. Y.) 18 L. R. A. 331.

6. Possible afterborn children will be bound by a decree directing its sale to preserve the interest of remaindermen under a devise of land from loss for nonpayment of taxes where the parties in being and before the court have the same incentive to accomplish the same purpose as would move and possess the parties not in case if they were in being.

(February 14, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cook County to review a decree in favor of complainant in a proceeding to preserve for a life tenant and remaindermen property devised to them in the form of real estate which was about to be lost for nonpayment of taxes. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward W. Cullen, for plaintiff in error:

Where the facts alleged, although showing a right, do not bring the case under some one or other of the well-recognized heads of chancery jurisdiction, the maxim, Equity will not suffer a right to be without a remedy, is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction.

See Rees v. Watertown, 19 Wall. 121, 22 L. ed. 76; Heine v. Levee Comrs. 19 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 223.

No person having an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and who is not before the court, can be bound by the decree.

Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 78, 91, 99, 144-146.

Mr. John W. Walsh, for defendant in error:

In every case in which there is a right recognized by the municipal law, and there is no remedy at law, equity will take jurisdiction and afford whatever relief is appropriate under the circumstances of the case.

Blapham, Eq. 4th ed. § 37; Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. §§ 423, 424; Story, Eq. Jur. 12th ed. §§ 83, 25; Mitford, Ch. Pl. by Jeremy, pp. 111, 112; Prof. Park in Am. Jurist, pp. 227-235; Britton v. Supreme Council of R. A. 46 N. J. Eq. 102; Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 74-80, 18 L. ed. 580-583; Dodge v. Cole, 97 Ill. 353, 37 Am. Rep. 111; Boren v. Smith, 47 Ill. 482.

A court of chancery has jurisdiction to sell real estate which, under the limitations in the conveyance to those who own it, cannot be alienated, and invest the proceeds when it is necessary to protect the real estate from loss to those who are interested in it.

Curtiss v. Brown, 29 Ill. 201; Voris v. Sloan, 63 Ill. 588; Dodge v. Cole, 97 Ill. 338, 37 Am. Rep. 111; Hale v. Hale, 146 Ill. 227, 20 L. R. A. 247; Stein v. Stein, 79 Md. 464.

The decree is binding on the unborn issue of defendant in error.

Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 76, 77; Calvert, Parties to Suits in Equity, pp. 12-51; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 730; Monarque v. Monarque, 80 N. Y. 320; Mead v. Mitchell, 17 N. Y. 210, 72 Am. Dec. 455; Brevoort v. Brevoort, 70 N. Y. 186; Freeman v. Freeman, 9 Heisk. 301; Cheesman v. Thorne, 1 Edw. Ch. 629; Finch v. Finch, 2 Ves. Sr. 491; Wills v. Slade, 6 Ves. Jr. 498; McCampbell v. Mason, 151 Ill. 500; Hale v. Hale, 146 Ill. 227, 20 L. R. A. 247; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 840, 28 L. ed. 1015; Willis v. Henderson, 5 Ill. 13, 38 Am. Dec. 120; Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. 152-40 L. R. A.

166, 6 L. ed. 289-294; Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Gratt. 684, 98 Am. Dec. 698.

A court of chancery has jurisdiction to appoint trustees, and create a trust, when it is the most convenient means, and best adapted to work out the equities of the complainant and preserve the interest of all persons interested in the property.

Blakley v. Marshall, 174 Pa. 425.

Boggs, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

John Gavin died testate on the 25th day of April, 1892. He left surviving him three sons, Bernard P. Gavin (the plaintiff in error), John F. and James C. Gavin, and a daughter, Susanna Curtin (the defendant in error), wife of William D. Curtin. The deceased, at the time of his death, owned two parcels of real estate in the city of Chicago, described as follows: The N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 18, township 88 N., range 14 E. of the third principal meridian (except the east 424.87 feet, and also except the park way and boulevard), and sublots 3 and 4 of lot 4, block 58, original town of Chicago. The parcel first above described contains about 20 acres of land, and is, for sake of convenience, denominated by the parties in the briefs, and will be hereinafter referred to by us, as the "Fifty-Fifth Street Property." The other parcel, for the like reason, is referred to in the briefs as the "Market Street Property," and will be so called by us.

The will of the deceased is as follows:

I, John Gavin, of the city of Chicago, in the county of Cook, and state of Illinois, being of sound mind and memory, do make, publish, and declare this my last will and testament, hereby revoking all former wills by me at any time made: First, I direct that my funeral expenses and just debts be first paid. Second, I give and bequeath the following sums to the following persons, and charge my real estate with the payment of the same, viz.: To my friend Eliza Farrel, five hundred dollars ($500); to my friend Patrick Farrell, five hundred dollars ($500); to the directress of St. Joseph's Academy, conducted by the Sisters of Charity, near Emmetsburg, Frederick county, Maryland, one thousand dollars ($1,000), to be expended or invested by her in such manner as she may deem for the best interest of said academy; to the president of St. Mary's College, situated near said Emmetsburg, five hundred dollars ($500), to be expended or invested by him in such manner as he may deem for the best interest of said college. Third, To each of my sons, John F. Gavin, Bernard P. Gavin, and James C. Gavin, their heirs and assigns, forever, I give, devise, and bequeath one fourth of all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, real, personal, and mixed. The remaining one fourth thereof I give, devise, and bequeath unto my daughter, Susanna Curtin, for life, with remainder in fee to the children of said Susanna Curtin; and if any child of said Susanna Curtin shall die in her lifetime leaving issue, any of whom shall be living at the time of her death, such issue shall take equally amongst them the share which their respective parents would have taken if living at her death; and in case said Susanna Curtin die leaving no children and no descendants of any deceased child, then said one fourth shall vest in my sons, John F. Gavin, Bernard P. Gavin, and James C. Gavin, in fee. Fourth. All the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, real and personal, I devise and bequeath to my three sons, John F. Gavin, Bernard P. Gavin, and James C. Gavin, in fee. Fifth. I hereby appoint James Hoyne and Thomas J. Walsh executors of this my last will and testament. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 26th day of March, A. D. 1891.

John Gavin. [Seal.]

The defendant in error, on the 9th day of January, 1895, filed in the circuit court of Cook county a bill in chancery, to which she made parties defendant her said three brothers. The bill alleged the execution of the will, the death of the said John Gavin, and that he died seised of the title to the real estate hereinbefore described, and left no other kind of property of any kind or character; that the complainant was not at the date of the death of her said father, and has not been since, and is not now, possessed of any property whatever, except as devisee under the will; that her said brothers, the defendants in the bill, had paid the legacies and bequests mentioned in the second clause of the will, and the costs of administration, amounting in the aggregate to $4,000, under an agreement with her that she would reimburse them for her proportionate part thereof; that prior to his death the testator, her father, executed a mortgage upon the Market street property to secure an indebtedness due from him, in the sum of $22,000, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable annually, and that the same remains unpaid; that the said Fifty-Fifth street property is vacant acre property, and has been partitioned by decree of the superior court of Cook county, and a part thereof, consisting of 5.151 acres, set off in severalty to the complainant; that it produces not to exceed $5 per year annual income, and that the annual taxes thereon are about the sum of $250; that said premises are not susceptible of being made income producing, and will be exposed to danger of being lost to the complainant and the remaindermen by reason of the nonpayment of taxes, and will be subject to special assessments soon, in all probability, to be levied for various improvements, for the purpose of paving streets, sidewalks, etc., which, if not paid, will result in the sale of the premises and the loss thereof to all interested therein; that said Market street property is reasonably worth the sum of $100,000; that the improvements thereon consist of an old-fashioned four-story building of little value and not considered in the said valuation of $100,000; that the said improvement is wholly inadequate to secure a fair return upon the value of the property, and that the largest annual income derived from this property has not, since the death of the said testator, exceeded the sum of $2,500, and that a larger income cannot be secured or that income maintained without the expenditure of considerable sums of money; that the annual taxes thereon are about the sum of $700, and the annual interest charge on the said mortgage $1,320, making a total outlay of $2,020, not including insurance, repairs, and other incidental current expenses, so that, at most, the income of complainant from said Market street property does not exceed $150 per annum, and that in fact she has received only the sum of $100 per annum since the death of her said father; that the income from the two parcels of property will not discharge the taxes upon the Fifty-Fifth street property by the sum of $150 per annum, and in their present condition the property imposes an annual burden of that amount upon the complainant, and in addition she is still indebted to her brothers on her obligation to repay to them her proportionate part of the amount advanced by them to discharge the legacies provided for by the second clause of the will; that complainant intermarried with said William D. Curtin in 1888, some four years before the death of her father, and has since lived and cohabited with her said husband, is thirty-seven years of age, and has never borne a child; that she can only convey a life estate, which, under the circumstances, would not benefit but only impose burdens on the buyer, and would be valueless, and that, owing to the fact the remainder in fee is contingent, the fee cannot be conveyed; that she cannot, and in justice and equity ought not, be required to pay the taxes and assessments and preserve the property from loss by sale to pay the same, and that unless a remedy is provided by the courts the fee must inevitably be lost to the remaindermen. The prayer of the bill is that a trustee be appointed and vested with the title in fee to the two parcels of real estate, to hold to the use of complainant (defendant in error) during her life, and to her children (if any be born to her), and to the descendants of any deceased child, if any there be, in fee, and, in default of issue born to her, to her said brothers in fee, and that said trustee be invested with power to sell said premises, and invest the proceeds for the benefit of those entitled, etc.

40 L. R. A.

The defendants to the bill were duly summoned, but did not appear, and were defaulted. The cause was referred to the master to take and report the proof, with his conclusions of fact. The evidence was taken by the master, and, together with his conclusion of fact thereon, reported to the court. The master's conclusions fully supported the allegations of the bill, and are amply and abundantly sustained by the proofs. The court approved the report and entered a decree appointing the said John F. and James C. Gavin trustees, and invested them with the title in fee to the undivided one-fourth of the Market street property, and the said 5.151 acres of the Fifty-Fifth street property, to hold for the use of the said Susanna Curtin for life, remainder to her child or children and children of any deceased child in fee, and in case she should die without children or descendants of child or children, remainder in fee to the said John F., Bernard P., and James C. Gavin, in fee. The decree also invested the trustees with power, subject to the approval of the court, to sell and dispose of the said premises, or any part thereof, or to exchange the same for some species of income bearing property, and invest the proceeds in safe securities or productive real estate, and to pay the annual income to the said Susanna Curtin, after first paying and discharging all liens by way of taxes, assessments, encumbrances, interest, cost of insurance, and necessary repairs, or to mortgage the premises, if necessary to discharge the existing mortgage on the Market street property. The decree further provided the trustees should execute a bond, with securities to be approved by the court, in the sum of $25,000, conditioned for the faithful performance of the trust, and that the trustees should, from time to time, report to the court. This is a writ of error to bring the proceedings into review in this court.

Two questions are presented by this record. The first is whether it is within the jurisdiction and power of a court of equity to grant the relief asked by the bill and awarded by the decree; and the other is, Does the decree bind children who may hereafter be born to the said Susanna Curtin?

The record discloses the defendant in error is possessed of a right, recognized by the general principles of municipal law, to enjoy during her lifetime an estate in the premises involved in the proceeding, and that her children, if any are born to her, will be legally entitled to receive and possess in fee the remainder in said property, and that the circumstances are such that the life estate and the remainder in fee will be destroyed and lost to all who are or may be interested therein unless jurisdiction to provide a remedy and power to avert such destruction are vested in some judicial tribunal. It is beyond discussion that courts of law are powerless to render relief. It remains to be determined whether a court of equity may assert and exercise the necessary jurisdiction and power. If not, it would seem we have an instance of the existence of a legal right which cannot be protected and maintained because of a lack of an appropriate tribunal having adequate judicial power to render the necessary relief. We think our institutions are not subject to this reproach, but that our court in equity has full jurisdiction and power to meet the emergency. There are certain general precepts or principles, denominated maxims, which a learned author declares "are in the strictest sense the principia," the beginnings out of which have developed the entire system of truth known as "equity jurisprudence." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 890. Another author of equal learning says: "There are in equity several of these maxims in which the general principles of chancery jurisdiction and the methods by which they are applied, are succinctly expressed. The first of these maxims is that equity will not suffer a right to be without a remedy. The principle expressed by this maxim is, indeed, the foundation of equitable jurisdiction, because, as we have seen, that jurisdiction had its rise in the inability of the common-law courts to meet the requirements of justice." Bispham, Eq. 3d ed. p. 53.

It is to be observed that the rights, to protect and preserve which these learned authors declare courts of equity will provide a remedy, are not mere abstract moral rights, but rights recognized by the existing municipal law. 40 L. R. A.

The right possessed by the defendant in error in this case is one which belongs to the purview of municipal law, and comes within the scope of juridical action, but the power of the courts of law, or their modes of procedure, are inadequate to furnish a complete remedy. It may be that an instance cannot be cited where a court of equity has been called upon to take jurisdiction and render relief in a case in all its aspects precisely the same as the case at bar, but that does not furnish a sufficient reason for declaring the jurisdiction does not exist. The expressions of this court in the case of Dodge v. Cole, 97 Ill. 388, 37 Am. Rep. 111, are here in point. It was there said (p. 384, 37 Am. Rep. 122): "The jurisdiction of a court of equity does not depend upon the mere accident whether the court has, in some previous case or at some distant period of time, granted relief under similar circumstances, but rather, upon the necessities of mankind, and the great principles of natural justice, which are recognized by the courts as a part of the law of the land, and which are applicable alike to all conditions of society, all ages, and all people. . . . Where it is clear the circumstances of the case in hand require an application of those principles, the fact that no precedent can be found in which relief has been granted under a similar state of facts is no reason for refusing it."

We think it may be laid down as an unfailing rule that equity will take jurisdiction in all cases where a right recognized by municipal law exists, and courts of law do not provide an adequate remedy for the enforcement, maintenance, and protection of that right; hence we think the court had jurisdiction to entertain the bill. Was it lacking in power to award relief? It is suggested that in the case at bar it was the intention of the testator, to be gathered from the will, that the real estate here involved should not be alienated, but that the estate should be preserved intact, and should so descend and vest in the remainderman, and that in such case a court of equity is without power to break in upon the will and sell the land. There is no express denial of the right of alienation of the will, but it is manifest it was the expectation of the testator, even if he had not formed a deliberate intention to that effect, that the property should be preserved intact, and so descend to and vest in the remainderman. But we think it well settled that a court of equity, if it has jurisdiction in a given cause, cannot be deemed lacking in power to order the sale of real estate which is the subject of a trust on the ground alone that the limitations of the instrument creating the trust expressly deny the power of alienation. It is true the exercise of that power can only be justified by some exigency which makes the action of the court, in a sense, indispensable to the preservation of the interests of the parties in the subject-matter of the trust, or, possibly, in case of some other necessity of the most urgent character. The jurisdiction and power of a court of chancery in this respect were the subject of discussion in this court in Curtis v. Brown, 29 Ill. 201; Voris v. Sloan, 68 Ill. 588, and Hale v. Hale, 146 Ill. 227, 20 L. R. A. 247, and the conclusion reached in each of such cases is in harmony with the view hereinbefore expressed, that courts in s finished. The paddle, which grows hot while in use, is cooled in a long water trough, known as the "bosh." Ordinarily, the heater has a helper, who assists him in taking the paddle out of the "bosh" and putting it into the furnace. Plaintiff had such a helper, but, either on account of his inexperience or a dislike of the plaintiff towards him, or for some other reason, immaterial, Mann, on the day in question, attempted to perform his duties without the assistance of this helper. The floor in front of the furnace where he was required to work was made of cast-iron plates 1 inch in thickness and about 26 by 20 inches in size. These plates, when first put down, are straight and level, but in a short time, from exposure to the great heat of the furnace above, and through counter exposure to dampness of the ground beneath, soon become warped, so that they are higher in some places than others. Such was the condition of the iron floor in front of the furnace where plaintiff was required to do his work, and also around the "bosh" or trough where the paddle was cooled. These higher places, from more frequent contact of those using the floor, become very smooth, as the evidence shows, "smooth as glass." The floor around the "bosh" was more particularly subjected to the exposure of the dampness underneath from the fact that the water was frequently thrown from this trough upon the floor as the paddle was pulled out of the "bosh." The record shows the floor at that place was, most of the time, wet from this cause. The plaintiff, while attempting, without the assistance of his helper, to pull the

Brewing Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 303; Roux v. Blodgett & L. Lumber Co. (1891) 82 Mich. 513. 13 L. R. A. 728.

Those who are curious to see the extent to which this misuse of words pervades the opinions of the courts are referred to an article by the present writer in the American Law Review for September, 1897.

The effect thus ascribed to a promise to remove a specific cause of danger is analogous to that ascribed to a direct order, which, under appropriate circumstances, operates as an implied assurance that there is no present danger, and relieves the servant of the imputation of contributory negligence, except in cases in which no prudent man would have obeyed the order. See Patterson v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. (1874) 76 Pa. 380, 18 Am. Rep. 412; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Hayfield (1877) 37 Mich. 205; Keegan v. Kavanaugh (1876) 62 Mo. 230; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888) 96 Mo. 207.

Not infrequently the evidence in cases of this description shows that the servant relied both on an assurance of present safety, either given in specific words or implied from an express command to perform a certain piece of work, and on a promise to remove the cause of danger. Hawley v. Northern C. R. Co. (1880) 82 N. Y. 370; Flynn v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1883) 78 Mo. 195, 47 Am. Rep. 99; Senzikowski v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. (1895) 58 Ill. App. 418.

The difference between an assurance relating to present safety, and an assurance relating to future safety, is, however, sometimes important, inasmuch as a servant may be legally justified in relying on the former kind of assurance under circumstances which would tend to charge him with contributory negligence if he engaged in certain work merely on the faith of the fulfillment of the latter kind of assurance. Thus, an instruction to the effect that the giving of an express promise to repair will not enable the servant to recover where the danger of using the appliance is so great that no man of ordinary prudence would continue to use it, is rightly refused where the evidence is that the plaintiff went to work because he relied, not on a promise to repair, but because he was told that the appliance had been repaired since he last used it. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McKee (1887) 37 Kan. 592.

II. General rule stated.

The general rule, based upon the above considerations, has been thus formally enunciated in words following very closely those used in a recent case: A servant who complains to the master of the employment by him of an habitually careless and neglectful fellow servant may, where the master promises that the danger due to his neglect will be remedied, continue in the employment a reasonable time thereafter in expectation that it will be so remedied, without assuming the risk therefrom or being guilty of contributory negligence, unless the danger is so apparent, imminent, and immediate that a man of ordinary prudence would refuse so to remain; and what is such a reasonable time is ordinarily a question for the jury. Smith v. E. W. Backus Lumber Co. (1896) 64 Minn. 447.

The proviso appended to this statement is merely one way of stating the principle that the giving of the promise is not a circumstance which entitles the servant to recover as a matter of law.

The proviso appended to the statement embodies one feature of the principle which precludes the servant from alleging the promise to be a circumstance which, ipso facto, entitles him to recover, as a matter of law. This principle appears in its most comprehensive form in the following passage: "If machinery upon which a servant is employed has become dangerous, and the servant has complained of it, and has been promised that it shall be repaired, but is injured before the defect is remedied, and while he is reasonably expecting the promise to be performed, the promise is a circumstance to be considered by the jury in determining whether he has assumed the risk in the meantime, and whether he was using due care in working when he knew there was danger." Counsell v. Hall (1888) 145 Mass. 468. Compare Greene v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1883) 31 Minn. 248, 47 Am. Rep. 785; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Donnelly (1888) 70 Tex. 371.

The doctrine may also be expressed in language which emphasizes the consideration that it is an exception ingrafted upon a general principle, as where it was said that the rule that a servant accepts the ordinary risks of his employment, and of defects in machinery and appliances of which he knows, does not apply to one who has informed his employer of such defects, and only continues in the employment for a reasonable time on the employer's promise to remedy the evils. Lyttle v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. (1890) 84 Mich. 289.

So, in another case we find the court remarking that the general rule that the servant assumes, not only the ordinary risks of the employment, but also those superadded by the negligent omissions of the master, where they are known to the servant, is modified where the servant, upon his discovery of a danger paddle out of the "bosh," and while walking backward over the iron plates, slipped on one of the smooth places of the floor and fell, receiving the injuries complained of. His own statement as to this injury is as follows: "I had just about completed pulling the paddle out of the 'bosh,' when, just at the instant I stopped, I pulled the paddle like this, and went to lay it on the rail, and my feet went out like that. I stopped walking, and, as I stood there, tried to pull the paddle back, and my feet went out."

Q. And very likely it was the pull that you gave the paddle that started your feet, was it not?

A. Well, I don't know about that. I don't know about that. That I couldn't say. I know I fell, and the paddle fell on me. I know both my feet went out at once.

It appears from the record in this case that the uneven, smooth, and slippery condition of the floor had existed for at least a year prior to this accident, and the condition was fully known to the plaintiff. He had on several occasions during the year notified his foreman of the dangerous condition of this floor; and, while it is not disputed he was fully aware of such dangerous condition, it is urged the defendant had promised to repair the floor, and, relying upon this promise, the plaintiff had continued in its employ. A jury in the circuit court of Cook county rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $5,000. This judgment was by the appellate court of arising from such an omission, complains to the master and receives such promises or assurances as to make it reasonable for him to assume that the deficiency will be supplied before he is exposed to injury from it. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Turner (1893) 3 Tex. Civ. App. 487.

See also the following passage, where the standpoint is the same: "Employees on entering into a hazardous employment take the ordinary risks attending that service; but when servants complain of what appears to them to be an impending peril in a position to which they have been ordered, and they notify the master of the danger, and ask to be relieved, the master cannot refuse to relieve them, insist upon their continuing the work in that position, and, where they remain at his direction, waiting for an inspection which he has promised but neglected to make, relying upon his promise and superior judgment, and fearing the consequences of disobedience, and are injured, be then allowed to say: 'You were guilty of contributory negligence in doing what I directed you to do,' or, 'You assumed that risk when you entered my employment.' Under such circumstances, employees cannot be said to have either heedlessly or voluntarily assumed the risk." Schlacker v. Ashland Iron Min. Co. (1891) 89 Mich. 282.

In this class of cases the attention of the master will usually have been called to the existence of the danger by the servant whose safety is menaced by it, and formal statements of the general rule commonly refer to the circumstance that the servant has notified the master of the dangerous conditions which he desires to have remedied. See, for example, Woodward Iron Co. v. Jones (1885) 80 Ala. 123, Union Mfg. Co. v. Morrissey (1883) 40 Ohio St. 148, 48 Am. Rep. 669; Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend (1883) 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425; Greene v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1883) 31 Minn. 248, 47 Am. Rep. 785.

But it is clear, upon principle, that positive action of this kind on the servant's part is by no means necessary to fix his rights. A promise given by the master proprio motu must evidently possess the same virtue and efficacy as one given in response to a complaint by the servant.

III. Rationale of the relation between the parties after the giving of the promise.

From the authorities cited above, it is apparent that the situation contemplated by the cases in which the rule is applied is that the 40 L. R. A.

servant has been exposed, through the failure of the master to keep the instrumentalities of his business in proper condition, to some danger from which, under the implied terms of the contract of service, the master was bound to protect him; and that the fact of the master's having promised to remove that danger suspends, for a certain period, the operation of the principle which, either on the ground of an assumption of the risk, or of contributory negligence, precludes a servant from recovering damages for an injury caused by a hazard which he was aware of and properly appreciated. The opinions of the judges, however, disclose a difference of view as to the precise effect of the promise. To us the most satisfactory theory seems to be that indicated by the remark which Byles, J., interjected during the argument of counsel in the leading case of Clarke v. Holmes (1862) 7 Hurlst. & N. 937, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 356, 8 Jur. N. S. 992, 10 Week. Rep. 405, where the servant was injured by machinery left unfenced in contravention of the provisions of a statute: "While the machinery was fenced, was not this the contract of the plaintiff: 'I will work with fenced machinery'; after the fencing was broken, was not the contract: 'I will continue to work, if you will restore the fencing.'"

That the true rationale of the situation existing after the promise is that a new conditional contract comes into force is indicated very strongly by those cases in which the promise to remove a specific cause of danger is given before the servant enters the employment. Hyatt v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 19 Mo. App. 294 (master liable for exposing servant to extreme cold, against which he has been assured that he will be protected); Cheaney v. Ocean S. S. Co. (1893) 92 Ga. 726 (master liable for injuries resulting from his violation of a promise to station a man at the hatch of a ship in order to protect laborers in the hold while the loading is going on).

It must be admitted, however, that the courts have usually preferred to describe the results of the promise in other ways.

In Greene v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1883) 31 Minn. 248, 47 Am. Rep. 785, the court, after mentioning the various reasons assigned for the rule, favors the one which would place it on "the ground of a contract on the part of the employer . . . that if the servant continues in the service in the meantime, and until the defects are remedied, the employer, and not the servant, will assume the risks;" and observes that "if the emergencies of a master's business require him temporarily to use defective machinery, we fail to see what right he has, the first district affirmed, and on appeal comes to this court.

Mr. E. Parmalee Prentice, for appellant:

A promise to repair does not relieve an employee from the assumption of hazard, where the danger arises from the ordinary use of familiar agencies.

District of Columbia v. McElligott, 117 U. S. 621, 29 L. ed. 946; Bailey, Personal Injuries Relating to Master & Servant, 209-211; Marsh v. Chickering, 101 N. Y. 400; Corcoran v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 81 Wis. 193; Gowen v. Harley, 12 U. S. App. 574, 56 Fed. Rep. 974, 6 C. C. A. 190; Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 122 U. S. 189, 30 L. ed. 1114; Hayden in law or natural justice, to insist that it shall be done at the risk of the servant, and not his own, when, notwithstanding the servant's objection to the condition of the machinery, he has requested or induced him to continue its use, under a promise thereafter to repair it."

But it is not easy to say from this statement whether it is referable to the idea of a substituted contract, or of the continuance of the original one. That the latter is the view finally adopted by this court, see Schlitz v. Pabst Brewing Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 303.

Perhaps the most generally received view is that the inference which would normally be drawn, that the servant intended to assume the new risk, or was guilty of contributory negligence in remaining in a service in which that risk must be constantly incurred, is rebutted by evidence that the promise was relied on. In other words, that waiver of a certain right of action which, apart from the promise, would be imputed to the servant, as a consequence of his continuance of work, will not be implied, where a promise has been given. Thus, in the leading case of Clarke v. Holmes (1862) 7 Hurlst. & N. 937, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 356, 8 Jur. N. S. 992, 10 Week. Rep. 405, we find Chief Justice Cockburn arguing as follows: "It was, indeed, strongly urged upon us, on the part of the defendant, that as the plaintiff, upon becoming aware that the machinery was no longer properly fenced, instead of refusing to go on, as he might have done, continued to perform his service with a knowledge of the increased risk to which he was exposed, he must be taken to have voluntarily incurred the danger, and is, therefore, in the same position as if he had originally accepted the service as one to be performed on unfenced machinery. I am, however, of opinion that there is a sound distinction between the case of a servant who knowingly enters into a contract to work on defective machinery, and that of one who, on a temporary defect arising, is induced by the master, after the defect has been brought to the knowledge of the latter, to continue to perform his service under a promise that the defect shall be remedied. In the latter case, it seems to me that the servant by no means waives his right to hold the master responsible for any injury which may arise to him from the omission of his master to fulfil his obligation."

Similar language is found in Pleart v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1891) 82 Iowa, 148; Union Mfg. Co. v. Morrissey (1883) 40 Ohio St. 148, 43 Am. Rep. 669.

As a waiver involves the conception that a pre-existing right has been relinquished, the necessary implication is that the position here taken is the same as that which has been taken 40 L. R. A.

v. Smithville Mfg. Co. 29 Conn. 548; Richards v. Rough, 58 Mich. 212.

If there had been a sufficiently definite promise, nevertheless plaintiff did not rely upon it.

Taylor v. Felsing, 164 Ill. 331; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1148; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr, 84 Ind. 50; Counsell v. Hall, 145 Mass. 468; Burlington & C. R. Co. v. Liehe, 17 Colo. 280.

A servant has no right to rely upon the master's promise to repair, beyond a reasonable time.

Swift & Co. v. Madden, 165 Ill. 41; Taylor v. Felsing, 164 Ill. 331; Chicago Drop Forge & Foundry Co. v. Van Dam, 149 Ill. 337; Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak, 142 Ill. 578; Stafford v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co.

with greater distinctness in other decisions in which the legal situation has been defined by enunciating the principle that, in consequence of the giving of the promise, the responsibility for any injuries that may occur from the defective condition of the agency to which it relates remains with the master, instead of being shifted to the servant, as would be the case if the latter's continuance of work had not been induced by the promise. "The most logical reason of the rule is that, under such circumstances, it must be taken as understood between them that the continued use in the then condition of the instrumentality, being for the convenience and purposes of the master, is to be at his risk and not at the risk of the servant. Schlitz v. Pabst Brewing Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 303.

"The reason why such a promise modifies the rule which charges the servant with risks resulting from defects of which he has knowledge is, that the objection and promise to repair leave the risk where the duty is, upon the master." Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bingle (1895) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 322.

"The assurances of the employer that the danger shall be removed is an agreement by him that he will assume the risk incident to the danger for a reasonable time." Eureka Co. v. Bass (1896) 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152.

"If the servant, having a right to abandon the service because it is dangerous, refrains from doing so in consequence of assurances that the danger shall be removed, the duty to remove the danger is manifest and imperative, and the master is not in the exercise of ordinary care unless or until he makes his assurances good. Moreover, the assurances remove all ground for the argument that the servant by continuing the employment engages to assume the risk." Cooley, Torts, p. 559. Quoted with approval in Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1879) 100 U. S. 225, 25 L. ed. 617.

In cases of this type "the presumption of an assumption of risk arising from a continuance in the service is said to be rebutted." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Turner (1893) 3 Tex. Civ. App. 487. To the same effect, see Woodward Iron Co. v. Jones (1885) 90 Ala. 125; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Drew (1883) 59 Tex. 10, 46 Am. Rep. 261.

The most obvious objection to the theory enunciated in these cases is that, if we are to suppose the original contract to have been kept alive by the promise, it is difficult to offer any adequate reason for the distinction thus assumed to exist between the effect of an express promise as to the condition of the appliances, and the effect of the implied promise which the original contract conveys, as to the same sub-114 Ill. 244; Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Watson, 114 Ind. 20; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Drew, 59 Tex. 10, 46 Am. Rep. 261; Stephenson v. Duncan, 78 Wis. 404; Kroy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 82 Iowa, 357; Greenleaf v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. 88 Iowa, 52; Muldorney v. Illinois C. R. Co. 89 Iowa, 615; Lumley v. Caswell, 47 Iowa, 159; Way v. Illinois C. R. Co. 40 Iowa, 841; Russell v. Tillotson, 140 Mass. 201; Linch v. Sagamore Mfg. Co. 143 Mass. 206; Hatt v. Nay, 144 Mass. 186; Buzzell v. Laconia Mfg. Co. 48 Me. 118, 77 Am. Dec. 212; Sweeney v. Berlin & J. Envelope Co. 101 N. Y. 520, 54 Am. Rep. 722.

A definite promise by the master to repair defects, relied on for a reasonable time, does not absolutely relieve the servant from the assumption of hazard as a matter of law, but raises a question for the jury.

Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak, 148 Ill. 573; Counsell v. Hall, 145 Mass. 468; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 872, note 3; District of Columbia v. McElligott, 117 U. S. 621, 29 L. ed. 946; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Donnelly, 70 Tex. 371.

Mr. George B. Finch, for appellee:

If the servant notifies the master of defects, and the master promises to make the needed repairs, the master thereby takes on himself the responsibility of any accident caused by such defect, happening within such time as the servant may reasonably rely on such promise.

Holmes v. Clarke, 6 Hurlst. & N. 349; Mis- ject-matter. This aspect of the question is thus discussed in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brentford (1891) 79 Tex. 619, 627: "It would be difficult to find a principle on which to base a rule relieving a servant from obligation to use proper care for his own safety because the master had promised to repair a known defect which exposed him to danger, and had requested him to remain in a service known to be dangerous. It cannot be placed logically on the unequal situation of master and servant in a country in which all men are free to serve or not to serve any particular employer. If it be placed on the ground that the promise to repair and request to continue in the service rebut the ordinary presumption that the servant assumes the known risk incident to the given employment, it will be difficult to maintain it in a case in which the servant continues in the service with a knowledge that the defect has not been repaired, and that he is in constant danger from the use of the defective thing. If it be placed on the broad, but very indefinite, ground that justice and policy require such a rule, it will be difficult to give a reason why the same rule should not exist in all cases in which injuries result from the use of defective appliances or implements known by employer and employee to be defective, and their use dangerous; for the law implies an undertaking on the part of the employer to furnish reasonably safe machinery, implements, and appliances, and to repair them when out of order; and it implies a request to continue in the service, and to use them until notified that this is no longer desired, unless the employment is for a definite period. When there is no express promise to repair, or request to continue in the service, the employee assumes the risks incident to a service conducted with machinery, implements, or appliances known by himself as well as the employer to be defective and dangerous. This being true, it is difficult to perceive that there should be a difference, on grounds of policy or justice, between the liability of the employer based on an implied promise or obligation and request, and that based upon an express promise to repair, and request to continue in the service in any case in which the employee knows that the defect has not been repaired, but continues to use the defective thing, or to work without something known to him to be necessary to his safety. . . . When the cause of the injury is the direct act of the master or his representative, it cannot be said that the servant remaining in the employment is the proximate cause of the injury, even though the servant may have known that the master or his representative had frequently done the same or similar acts which imperilled his safety; for the act which in such case causes the injury is the wrongful act of the master or of his representative, the result of the exercise of the will of the one or the other, and hence the proximate cause of the effect, from which the master ought not to be permitted to go free from liability on the ground that the servant knew he had, before the happening of the injury, done acts such as that from which the injury resulted, but still remained in his service."

The force of this reasoning is very much impaired by the assumption with which the court sets out, that the issue to be determined is whether the promise tends to exempt the servant from the charge of contributory negligence in exposing himself to danger; whereas the actual controversy is whether, by virtue of a new contract, or the continuance of the original one, the responsibility remains with the master. The error of this assumption is thus pointed out in a recent decision of the Texas court of civil appeals, though scarcely with as much point and clearness as might be desired: "In this state the assumption of risk and contributory negligence are treated as distinct defenses. The servant may remain in the service when he knows of a defective condition of the appliances, without having negligence imputed to him by law. He nevertheless assumes the risk, unless the facts take his case out of the general rule, and bring it within the exception noted. On the other hand, a protest and promise to repair may be shown, and the servant may yet be guilty of contributory negligence in using a defective and dangerous machine. Green v. Cross (1890) 79 Tex. 132; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Somers (1890) 78 Tex. 443; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bryant (1894) 8 Tex. Civ. App. 134. It would seem to follow that a promise of the master to repair, upon complaint by the servant, relieves the servant, in continuing in the service, not merely of the imputation of contributory negligence, for no such imputation arises as matter of law, but of any assumption of the risk, and hence imposes such risks upon the master. . . . As the risks to be incurred by the servant, under such circumstances, are not assumed by him, but by the master, the loss must fall upon the latter, unless the danger to the servant is so great that the policy of the law will forbid persons, even under such a promise, to take it, and then seek compensation in the courts, or unless, having taken it, the servant, by his own carelessness in performing his work has increased the risk and contributed to his own injury. Although the promise may be given, the law does not relieve the servant of the duty resting upon men generally of using reasouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425; Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak, 148 Ill. 573; Weber Wagon Co. v. Kehl, 139 Ill. 644.

Phillips, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Of the assignments of error made on this record and argued by appellant there is only one proper for this court to consider. The question of the negligence of appellant, with some other questions argued by counsel for appellant, are those of fact, which have been settled by the judgment of the appellate court.

Error is assigned by the appellant on the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury, on the trial of this cause, the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that an employee who continues in the service of his employer after notice of a defect increasing the danger of the service assumes the risk as increased by the defect, unless the master promised to remedy the defect; and, in the event that the master does so promise, the servant may, while relying upon such promise, remain in the service of the master only for such a time thereafter as would be reasonably sufficient to enable the master to remedy the defect; and that, if the master does not, within a reasonable time after such promise, remedy the defect, then, and in such event, if the servant continues still in the employ of the master, he assumes the risk as increased by the defect; and the court therefore instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence in this case that the standing upon which the plaintiff sonable care for his safety. But, in determining whether or not due care has been observed in a given case, the promise and its natural effect upon a man of ordinary prudence are to be taken into consideration. This view of the question is not thoroughly sustained by our decisions, and considerable doubt is thrown upon the doctrine under consideration by the opinion in the Brentford Case (1891) 79 Tex. 619. It is intimated there, that the servant cannot hold the master responsible for an injury resulting from such a risk, if he knew when he exposed himself, that the promise had not been complied with." Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bingle (1895) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 322.

But the views of the Texas supreme court, though false in this one respect, seem to be based on sound principles in so far as they emphasize the logical difficulties of ascribing any greater efficacy to an express, than to an implied, promise, where both promises are given by the same contracting parties, and the express promise binds him to do precisely the same thing as the implied promise in regard to the same subject-matter. Upon the whole, therefore, it would appear to be better to avoid the dilemma which this position creates by falling back on Mr. Justice Byles' view that the giving of the express promise creates an entirely new contract which imposes an additional duty on the master concerning the safety of the servant, and confers a corresponding right of action upon the servant. Under this theory a supplementary agreement supersedes the original one so far as regards the particular instrumentality to which the promise relates, and remains in force as long as it may reasonably be supposed that the servants' continuance of work is induced by the promise. The extreme difficulty, however, of obtaining any standard by which to ascertain the precise duration of this temporary contract is manifest, and it is perhaps for this reason that the rights of the servant are usually determined in cases of this type by considering them from the alternative point of view suggested by every case in which the servant goes on working with knowledge of an extraordinary risk,—that is to say, by considering whether his conduct was prudent under the circumstances. The position of the employer is, then, simply that, although he may have violated one of his contractual duties, the servant is precluded from taking advantage of this breach for the reason that he was himself guilty of contributory negligence. The remainder of the note, therefore, will necessarily take the form of a review of the rulings of the courts upon this aspect of the relations of the parties after the promise is given.

40 L. R. A.

IV. Continuance of work after promise not contributory negligence as matter of law.

a. Generally.

The question whether a servant was guilty of contributory negligence in view of the testimony which is commonly produced in cases of the kind under review will be found to depend upon two considerations, viz., whether the election to take the risk was prudent, and if so, whether due care was exercised by the servant in view of the fact that the employment involved an unusual amount of danger. These two points are manifestly quite distinct and are properly differentiated in Counsell v. Hai (1888) 145 Mass. 468. But some cases seem to disclose a confusion of thought upon the subject. See, for example, Corcoran v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. (1892) 81 Wis. 191, where the court appears to waver between a theory which would deprive the servant of a right to recover on the ground of negligence in continuing to work, and the theory that he did not take appropriate precautions in view of the dangers of the situation. Contributory negligence of the latter description merely involves a special application of the general principle that everyone is bound to use that degree of care which the circumstances require, and as the danger covered by the promise is, ex hypothesi, greater than that which the servant would ordinarily be called upon to incur, the inquiry in cases dealing with this aspect of his conduct is merely whether he has exercised the increased degree of care demanded by the increased peril. These cases will be reviewed in a later subdivision (VIII.), and our attention will first be given to those which exemplify the more special and characteristic effects of the promise, and illustrate that form of contributory negligence which consists in staying in a position which necessitates exposure to a continuous risk greater than a prudent man would consent to incur.

Bearing in mind the doctrine that, quite apart from the question, What may be the effect of a promise? the knowledge of the servant is only a fact to be taken into consideration in determining whether a servant was guilty of negligence in continuing to work with a defective appliance (see Clarke v. Holmes (1865) 7 Hurlst. & N. 937, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 356, 5 Jur. N. S. 992, 10 Week. Rep. 405, per Cockburn, Ch. J., and Crompton and Byles, J.J.), we note that the general principle underlying the decisions is that the giving of the promise is merely to strengthen the servant's position in respect to the inference that might be drawn as to his want of care in exposing himself to the particular danger to which the promise reworked while in the employ of the defendant was defective; that the defendant promised to remedy the same, but failed to do so within a reasonable time after such promise, and that the plaintiff continued thereafter to work for the defendant knowing that the defendant had failed to remedy the defect within a reasonable time after such promise, then, and in such event, the court instructs the jury that the plaintiff assumed the additional risk of the defect in the condition of the floor, and, if the jury so finds, they will return their verdict for the defendant." This instruction was refused by the trial court, and it is practically admitted that no other instruction involving the same principle was given to the jury. For the reason, as counsel for appellee insists, that it does not contain a correct expression of the law of this state. It is urged as an objection to this instruction that it would inform the jury that the servant may, while relying upon the promises of the master to repair a defect, remain in the service of the master only for such time thereafter as would be reasonable and sufficient to enable the master to remedy the defect; and that, if the master does not, within a reasonable time after such promise, remedy the defect, then, and in such event, if the servant still continues in the employ of the master, he assumes the risk as increased by the defect of which he himself had knowledge. The trial court not only refused this instruction, but by another instruction, requested by the plaintiff, told the jury that, if the defendant promised to repair the defect, and he was led to believe and expect that the floor would soon be relates. The promise does not, ipso facto, entitle the servant to recover.

"It has ever been held that the promise of a master to repair a defective machine or implement used in his business, and known by . . . him and the servant to be dangerous, will relieve the servant from the ordinary result of contributory negligence on his own part, though cases may be found in which stress was laid on the fact that such a promise was made." Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brentford (1891) 79 Tex. 619, Disapproving an instruction which permitted the plaintiff to recover merely by reason of his having continued to work in reliance on the promise, and without regard to the question whether he may not have been negligent in the premises. Compare, to the same effect, International & G. N. R. Co. v. Williams (1891) 32 Tex. 342.

The position is simply this: As the servant's exposure to a known risk would not necessarily charge him with contributory negligence, as a matter of law, even if no promise had been given, the introduction of the new element of the promise diminishes the number of cases in which the court is entitled to say that this defense is available to the master.

Thus, in a leading case, where the court declared that, apart from the promise, the servant's continuance of work would have been negligence per se, the following language was used. "We may add that it was for the jury to say whether the defect in the cowcatcher or pilot was such that none but a reckless engineer, utterly careless of his safety, would have used the engine without it being removed. If, under all the circumstances, and in view of the promises to remedy the defect, the engineer was not wanting in due care in continuing to use the engine, then the company will not be excused for the omission to supply proper machinery, upon the ground of contributory negligence. That the engineer knew of the alleged defect was not, under the circumstances, and as matter of law, absolutely conclusive of want of due care on his part." Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1879) 100 U. S. 213, 225, 25 L. ed. 612, 617.

So, a servant who has been promised by the master that an incompetent and unsafe fellow servant shall be removed, may remain for a time in the service, without being conclusively chargeable, as a matter of law, with contributory negligence, even though, without such promise, he would have been so chargeable. Lyberg v. Northern P. R. Co. (1888) 39 Minn. 15.

The principle as generally stated, however, takes the absolute and not entirely correct form,—justified in some measure by the rarity of the cases in which the servant can be held guilty of negligence, as a matter of law, when a promise has been given, that the question of the servant's contributory negligence is for the jury. Union Mfg. Co. v. Morrissey (1883) 40 Ohio St. 148, 48 Am. Rep. 669; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock (1894) 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958; Kane v. Northern C. R. Co. (1888) 128 U. S. 91, 32 L. ed. 339; New Jersey & N. Y. R. Co. v. Young (1892) 1 U. S. App. 96, 49 Fed. Rep. 723, 1 C. C. A. 428; Wust v. Erie City Iron Works (1892) 149 Pa. 263; Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend (1888) 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425; Greene v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1883) 31 Minn. 249, 47 Am. Rep. 785; St. Clair Nail Co. v. Smith (1892) 43 Ill. App. 105; McKelvey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 500; Gibson v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. (1893) 55 Minn. 177; Lanling v. New York C. R. Co. (1872) 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Roux v. Blodgett & D. Lumber Co. (1891) 85 Mich. 519, 13 L. R. A. 728; Lytle v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. (1890) 84 Mich. 289; Schlitz v. Pabst Brewing Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 303; Woodward Iron Co. v. Jones (1885) 80 Ala. 123.
40 L. R. A.

"No doubt, a defect thus arising in machinery may be such that no man of ordinary prudence would run the hazard of working on it. If a jury should find that a party complaining had materially contributed to the injury by his own rashness, the action could not be maintained, inasmuch as it is well established that a plaintiff who has materially contributed to his own injury, by his own negligence, cannot recover, although he may show negligence in the opposite party. But the question whether the injury of which a plaintiff complains is to be ascribed wholly to the negligence of the defendant, or whether the plaintiff has had any share in bringing it about, is one wholly for the jury. In the present case, the jury have determined this question in favor of the plaintiff, and we are bound by their decision." Clarke v. Holmes (1862) 7 Hurlst. & N. 937, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 356, 8 Jur. N. S. 992, 10 Week. Rep. 405.

"It would be simply inhuman to hold that if an employee, thinking the machinery he is using is to some degree unsafe, reports its condition to his employer and is then told to continue to use it for a short time, and that it will be immediately repaired, and then, in obedience to instructions, continues his work cautiously, believing that he can by great care avoid an accident until the evil is remedied, and is injured in spite of all these precautions, his master is not guilty of negligence, but that the servant is, and that therefore there can be no recovery. Such a rule, too, would be as bad for the master as it is for the servant. It cer-paired, and that he continued to remain in the employment of the defendant up to the time he was injured, irrespective of whether or not such time was a reasonable one in which the defect might have been remedied, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. It is a recognized rule that it is the duty of the master to furnish to the servant reasonably safe machinery and appliances with which to perform his work; but when the servant discovers that the service has become more dangerous than he anticipated when he entered the employment of the master, or when he discovers defects in the machinery or appliances which make it unsafe for him to longer continue in the employ of the master, or from any other cause he concludes there is danger in continuing further in the service, it is his duty to notify the master of such danger, or of such defects in the machinery or appliances connected with his work; and, upon the master being notified, the servant has the right to continue in the employ of the master for a reasonable time, awaiting the remedy of such defect. He has the right to rely for a reasonable time upon the promise of the master that such defect in the machinery, appliances, or other surroundings connected with his work will be repaired and the machinery made safe, and the right to expect that such promise so made by the master will be fulfilled. If such expectation on the part of the servant, however, is not fulfilled, and the defect remedied by the master within a reasonable time, and the servant has full knowledge of the dangerous condition of his machinery, appliances, or surroundings, and that he tainly is not the law." Conroy v. Vulcan Iron Works (1878) 6 Mo. App. 105.

In Holmes v. Worthington (1861) 2 Fost. & F. 533, Willes, J., charged the jury as follows: "If the defendants knew of the defect, and undertook to repair it, and the plaintiff went on working, relying on their repairing it, then they may be liable. If the plaintiff complained of the defect, and the defendants promised that it should be remedied, he is not to be deprived of his remedy, merely because, relying on their promise, he remained in their employment."

To preclude the servant, therefore, from maintaining an action where he has been assured that a defect will be remedied, it must be assured that a defect will be remedied, it must be was, for some special reason, imprudent under the circumstances. Whether there was such a reason in any given case is a question which involves a consideration of the two elements which indicate what may be termed the aggregate amount of the danger to which the servant has exposed himself by continuing work, viz., the imminence and greatness of the peril and the length of time during which the exposure to it has continued. On the one hand, the more serious the peril, the more rapidly will the permissible period of continuance run out. On the other hand, the fact that under the doctrine of probabilities some accident will sooner or later occur as a result of exposure to an even moderate peril, when it is constantly incurred, for a considerable period, justifies the argument that, the longer the time that has elapsed without a fulfillment of the promise to remedy a defect, the more certainly has the servant been guilty of negligence in continuing in the employment.

"The probability of suffering injury is measured in some degree by the length of the period of exposure. One may be especially watchful to avoid danger for a time, while the same degree of watchfulness would not be so likely to be exercised continuously. . . . Reasonably prudent men may expose themselves, for a brief period of time, to possible risks, not of the gravest kind, when they would refuse to do so continuously." Lyberg v. Northern P. R. Co. (1888) 39 Minn. 15.

It is obvious that both these factors must necessarily be considered to some extent in every case, and that the rights of the servant may therefore be said, in mathematical language, to depend upon the sum of two variable quantities. But, as the principal stress must usually be laid upon one or other of the factors, it will be convenient to adopt a classification of the cases according to the greater or less prominence which may have been assigned to one or other of them.

40 L. R. A.

b. Contributory negligence predicated from the gravity of the risk incurred.

The general rule has been thus laid down: "If the nature of the defects in the machine is such as to create an open, imminent danger such as no prudent man, careful of his life and limb, and none but a reckless man, would risk, then the injury results from his own negligence, . . . but if the nature of the defect is not such as to impress a prudent man with a feeling or consciousness of imminent danger, then the master is liable." McKelvey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 500.

The first half of this statement expresses the rule in the form which it would naturally take in cases in which the servant's right of recovery is denied. It implies that the mere giving of a promise will not of itself suspend the operation of the principle that a servant cannot recover for an injury of which his own negligence was an efficient cause, and that he will, therefore, be unable to maintain an action where the danger to which he was exposed after receiving the promise is such that no man of ordinary prudence would have run the hazard of remaining in the employment.

"Where an employee knows that the danger is great and immediate, such as a reasonably prudent man would not assume, he cannot recover for an injury, even though he remained in the employer's service in reliance upon the latter's promise to remedy the defects which produced the danger." Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Watson (1857) 114 Ind. 20.

Similar language is used in Clarke v. Holmes (1862) 7 Hurlst. & N. 937, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 356, 8 Jur. N. S. 992, 10 Week. Rep. 405; District of Columbia v. McElligott (1886) 117 U. S. 621, 20 L. ed. 946; Kane v. Northern C. R. Co. (1888) 12 U. S. 91, 32 L. ed. 339; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Kelton (1892) 55 Ark. 483; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bingle (1895) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 322; McAndrews v. Montana Union R. Co. (1895) 15 Mont. 290; Harvey v. Aituras Gold Min. Co. (1893, Idaho) 31 Pac. 819.

An instruction is erroneous which in effect declares, as a conclusion of law, that, if the master promised repairs he is liable without regard to the character of the defects, or the probability or improbability of danger, or whether, all things considered, the plaintiff was or was not so negligent in continuing to work that he ought not to recover. McKelvey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 500. Compare Counsell v. Hall (1888) 145 Mass. 468; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brentford (1891) 79 Tex. 619; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Williams (1891) 82 Tex. 342.

The second half of the statement expresses the rule in the language which is appropriate is subjected at all times to prospective injury, it is his duty to quit the service of the master, and not subject himself to further danger.

In the case of District of Columbia v. McElligott, 117 U. S. 621, 29 L. ed. 946, the cause arose out of personal injuries received by a laborer while at work upon a bank of gravel. The evidence tended to show he discovered the bank was in an unsafe condition, and asked the supervisor for a man to watch it, whereupon he received assurance such would be done. No such assistance however was given, but the laborer continued to work for a half day thereafter, knowing the danger, when the bank fell, and severely injured him. It was held by the court in that case that it was the duty of the laborer, having knowledge of the dangerous condition of the bank, to exercise diligence and care in protecting himself, without regard to any assurance which he might have received from his employer. The rule in the above case is stronger than the rule in this state. As a general rule, the courts will consider that the master who employs a servant has a better and more comprehensive knowledge of the machinery and materials to be used than the employee. The servant has a right to presume that the materials and appliances which are furnished to him in the performance of his duty are sufficient therefor. This rule, however, is not applicable to all cases, and, where the servant has equal knowledge with the master, and a full knowledge of all existing defects, and more especially in the performance of ordinary labor, in which no intricate machinery is involved, the rule is not applied to cases in which the servant's right of recovery is conceded. It affirms the principle that the master's promise will entitle the servant to recover for any injury received within a reasonable time after the promise was given, unless the danger which the master agreed to remove was such that no prudent man would have exposed himself to it. Brownfield v. Hughes (1889) 128 Pa. 194; Patterson v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. (1874) 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412; Conroy v. Vulcan Iron Works (1876) 62 Mo. 35; Rothenberg v. Northwestern Consol. Mill. Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 461; Greene v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1883) 31 Minn. 249, 47 Am. Rep. 785; Harris v. Hewitt (1896) 64 Minn. 54; Smith v. E. W. Backus Lumber Co. (1896) 64 Minn. 447; Homestake Min. Co. v. Fullerton (1895) 69 Fed. Rep. 923, 36 U. S. App. 22, 16 C. C. A. 545; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Midgett (1895) 1 Kan. App. 138; Stout City & P. R. Co. v. Finlayson (1884) 16 Neb. 578, 49 Am. Rep. 724; South-ern Kansas R. Co. v. Croker (1889) 41 Kan. 747.

Usually, of course, it is a question of fact for the jury whether the defect was such that only an imprudent man would have continued to use the defective appliance. Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1879) 100 U. S. 225, 25 L. ed. 617, Clarke v. Holmes (1862) 7 Hurlst. & N. 937, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 356, 8 Jur. N. S. 992, 10 Week. Rep. 405; Smith v. E. W. Backus Lumber Co. (1896) 64 Minn. 447; Schlitz v. Pabst Brewing Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 303.

But sometimes a court will undertake to declare, as a matter of law, that the continuance of work was negligence, as where the servant drove a vicious horse with an old and rotten harness, although the employer had promised to fix the harness or give a new one, especially where a new harness had been furnished. Levesque v. Jansen (1895) 165 Mass. 16.

The mere fact that the servant was aware that the danger to which he would be exposed was serious is not necessarily conclusive against him. The promise, and its natural effect upon a man of ordinary prudence, are to be taken into consideration. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bingle (1895) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 322.

So, it has been held that, where a promise does not designate any time at which an incompetent fellow servant will be removed, the plaintiff may reasonably infer that he will be removed at once, or as soon as possible, and the jury, in determining whether he was guilty of negligence in continuing to work, may justifiably consider that such an inference will naturally influence his conduct. Lyberg v. Northern P. R. Co. (1888) 39 Minn. 15.

It has been very truly remarked that, relying upon the promises of a master to remove the cause of danger, "the most prudent work men will often take risks, not merely on account of their own necessities, but in consideration of their employer's, whose interests require their continued service." Union Mfg. Co. v. Morrissey (1883) 40 Ohio St. 148, 48 Am. Rep. 660.

Hence a finding, in answer to a special interrogatory, that the danger of using a defective appliance was great, apparent, and continuous, will not overcome the effect of a general verdict for the plaintiff, where there is no finding that an ordinarily prudent man would not have used it under the circumstances. Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Ott (1894) 11 Ind. App. 564 and 579.

When the imminence of the danger is relied upon as a circumstance which precludes the servant from recovery, it is necessary to show that the injury was caused by an event which might reasonably have been expected to occur in consequence of the existence of that particular danger to which the master's promise related. Thus, an engineer is not, as a matter of law, negligent in taking out a locomotive with the "chafing-irons" in a defective condition, where he has reported the defect, and the foreman of the roundhouse has promised to repair it, when the trip is finished; the only probable imminent danger in such a case being that the engine may part from the tender, and that is not a personal danger but one merely affecting the property of the railroad. A collision which causes the engine to override the tender, and thus cuts off the escape of the engineer, is not an event which is expected to be anticipated. Greene v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1883) 31 Minn. 248, 47 Am. Rep. 785.

c. Contributory negligence predicated from the length of time the servant has worked after the promise was given.

The allowable period of continuance in the employment is commonly described by the epithet "reasonable." Lyttle v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. (1890) 34 Mich. 289; Woodward Iron Co. v. Jones (1895) 80 Ala. 123; Swift & Co. v. Madden (1897) 165 Ill. 41; Ferriss v. Berlin Mach. Works (1895) 90 Wis. 541; Breckenridge Co. v. Hicks (1893) 94 Ky. 362; Conroy v. Vulcan Iron Works (1876) 62 Mo. 35, Followed in S. C. (1878) 6 Mo. App. 102; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Midgett (1895) 1 Kan. App. 138.

The use of this expression necessarily implies that the question whether the servant has exceeded the limits of the allowable period is ordinarily one for the jury. Joliet, A. & N. R. Co. v. Velle (1891, Ill.) 26 N. E. 1086; Union Mfg. Co. v. Morrissey (1883) 40 Ohio St. 148, 48 Am. Rep. 660; Smith v. E. W. Backus Lumber plicable. In Marsh v. Chickering, 101 N. Y. 400, this exception is recognized, and it is said that the facts that a laborer using ordinary tools and appliances notified the master of a defect of which the servant himself had full knowledge, and asked it to be remedied, and the master promised so to do, do not render the master responsible. The rule in this state is more liberal, however, and permits the servant to remain in the employ of the master for a reasonable time, awaiting the remedy of such defects. In Corcoran v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 81 Wis. 181, the plaintiff had been employed by the defendant in making general repairs about its building, and had occasionally been required to use a ladder. Upon his statement that the ladder was not safe, the foreman had promised to have a safe ladder provided. Relying upon such promise, the plaintiff continued in the employ of the defendant, but the foreman failed to provide such safe ladder. The plaintiff was ordered by the foreman to ascend the ladder, and make certain repairs, and, the ladder being unsafe, and the floor on which it rested being slippery, the plaintiff was injured by the falling of the ladder while ascending it. The court in that case held no liability, saying it has been held by it that in a proper case the servant may rely upon such assurance to remedy defects for a reasonable time, but, if he remains in such service after the expiration of such reasonable time, he

Co. (1896) 64 Minn. 447; Belair v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1876) 43 Iowa, 662; Ferriss v. Berlin Mach. Works (1895) 90 Wis. 541.

The opinions of the appellate courts, therefore, upon this question usually reach us in the shape of an answer to a request to set aside a verdict for one of the parties, or to revise the action of trial judges in taking the issue from, or leaving it to, the jury, and this fact renders many of the decisions rather unsatisfactory as precedents.

In view of the fact that the determination of the question, What is a "reasonable time?" must, in almost every instance, be left to the jury, several attempts have been made to impart a greater definiteness to that expression by stating the circumstances proper to be considered in cases where its meaning is material.

Some authorities interpret the phrase "reasonable time" as meaning such a time as would reasonably be allowed for the performance of the promise. Rothenberger v. Northwestern Consol. Mill. Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 461; Parody v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1882) 15 Fed. Rep. 205.

Others as the time within which the defect might reasonably have been remedied. Harris v. Hewitt (1896) 64 Minn. 54.

Others as the time which may elapse while the servant is reasonably expecting the promise to be performed. Counsell v. Hall (1888) 145 Mass. 468.

Others amplify this statement by declaring that the servant can recover for an injury caused by the defect "within such a period of time after the promise as it would be reasonable to allow for its performance, and, as we think, for an injury suffered within any period which would not preclude all reasonable expectation that the promise might be kept." Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 98, quoted with approval in Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1879) 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612.

In Stephenson v. Duncan (1889) 73 Wis. 404, the declaration was held fatally defective for the reason that it averred that the defendant had ample time to put the appliance in safe condition between the time when the plaintiff informed him of the defect and the time of the injury. This allegation was held to imply that the plaintiff continued in his employment beyond the time within which he might reasonably expect the defendant would keep his promise and remedy the defect.

The view of the dissentient minority in Illinois Steel Co. v. Mann appears to be more in harmony with the general principles which determine the servants' rights under the circumstances, and is substantially the same as that adopted in the decision in the cases cited above.

Some courts have adopted the reasoning of 40 L. R. A.

the following passage from Wharton on Negligence, § 221, where, after laying down the rule as to the effect of a promise in modifying the general principle referred to at the beginning of this note, the learned author proceeds thus: "The only ground on which this exception can be justified is, that in the ordinary course of events the employee, supposing the employer would right matters, would remain in the employer's service; and that it would be reasonable to expect such continuance. But this reasoning does not apply to cases where the employee sees that the defect has not been remedied, and yet exposes himself to it. In such case, on the principles heretofore announced, the employer's liability in this form of action ceases. He may be liable for breach of promise; but the causal connection between his negligence and the injury is broken by the intermediate voluntary assumption of the risk by the employee." See Woodward Iron Co. v. Jones (1885) 80 Ala. 123. In a later case the same court again defined its position as follows: "A promise already broken can afford no reasonable guaranty of the fulfillment of any expectation based on its disappointed assurances. For a servant or employee to persist in exposing himself to danger on the faith of such a promise may often be a want of that ordinary prudence which the law exacts of him at every stage of his employment, according to the degree and nature of the danger. Eureka Co. v. Bass (1886) 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152.

To the same effect, see Bridges v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. (1895) 109 Ala. 287.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brentford (1891) 79 Tex. 619, the court strongly intimated its preference for the same view, but it has been expressly repudiated in Greene v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1883) 31 Minn. 248, 47 Am. Rep. 785, and thus combated with great cogency in Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bingle (1896) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 322. "It seems to us that such a view, unless it be limited to cases in which the servant has been guilty of negligence, disregards the effect of the promise of the master, as taking upon himself the risk incurred by the servant in doing the work. If the servant, by the promise, is at first justified in remaining in the service, and does not in so doing take upon himself responsibility of the danger incurred, how can it be said that he makes it his own when he continues to work with the defective appliance at the time he receives his hurt? Such a doctrine would entirely destroy the force of the promise as an assumption of responsibility by the master, and force the servant to stop working with the imperfect appliance, notwithstanding such promise, until the repair had been made. Of course, in supposable cases the servant may not be warranted is thereby deemed to waive his objection, and assume the risk. To the same effect, also, is Gowen v. Harley, 12 U. S. App. 574, 56 Fed. Rep. 974, 6 C. C. A. 199. In that case the court says: "The rule that the master is responsible for damages resulting to a servant from defects in machinery and appliances, of which the servant has notified him, and which he has promised to repair, governs cases in which machinery or tools that are used in the work are discovered to be dangerously defective while in use, and to cases in which tools or machinery are necessary for the same performance of the work. It has no application to a case where the service required is simple manual labor without tools or machinery, and where no such tools or appliances are necessary to the performance of the work with a reasonable degree of safety." In Stephenson v. Duncan, 73 Wis. 404, it was held that the servant has the right to abandon the service because it is dangerous, but that he may refrain for a reasonable time in so doing, in consequence of assurance by the master that the danger shall be remedied; and he will not be held to thereby assume the risk. But, if he continues in the service for a longer time than is reasonable to allow for the performance of the master's promise, he will be deemed to have waived his objection, and assumed the risk. In the case of Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425, this court said: "It is in continuing to use the machinery, though a promise to repair be made, for the danger may be so great and patent that no prudent man would incur it; or the servant may, by subsequent carelessness of his own, add to the risk assumed by the master,—in either of which cases the promise to supply the defect could not avail him. But, in our own opinion the mere fact that the servant, acting under such a promise, knows at the time he receives his injury from the defective condition that it has not been removed, does not impose upon him the risk, any more than did his continuance in the service with knowledge of the defect at the time the promise was made. The opinion in the Brentford Case deals mainly with the defense of contributory negligence, rather than with that of assumption of risk, and is not a decision of the point now under consideration, though there are expressions in the opinion which seem to controvert the exception to the general rule, arising from a promise to repair. A limitation, generally recognized, upon the doctrine that the promise to repair places the risk upon the master is, that the servant can rely upon the promise only for a reasonable time for the master to comply with it; and must not himself be guilty of a want of due care contributing to his injury."

The essential objection to any such rigid presumption as that for which Mr. Wharton stands sponsor is that it seems to be wholly inconsistent with a reasonable construction of the general principle which dominates cases of this type, viz., that the question whether the plaintiff was negligent in being in the service when he was injured is one of fact to be decided with due reference to all the testimony produced. Common sense, in fact, rejects the idea that a servant is necessarily imprudent because he puts confidence in a master who has failed to keep his promise. Reliance on the promise only ceases to be justifiable when the employer has obviously no intention of removing the danger, and whether that time has arrived must, in all but the very clearest cases, remain a question for the jury. So far as this particular aspect of the question is concerned the correct theory would rather seem to be that the servants continuance of work with knowledge that the promised repairs have not been made within the time stipulated merely affords "a very strong argument that the servant is no longer relying upon the promise, but has decided to take the risk." Counsell v. Hall (1888) 145 Mass. 470.

Material facts to be considered in connection with the length of the period which has elapsed since the giving of the promise are, the frequency with which the servant was called upon to handle the defective appliance after the promise was received, the opportunities he may have had to examine it, and the necessity for making that examination, in view of his complaint as to its condition, and the right he had to suppose it had been repaired in pursuance of the promise. Belair v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1876) 43 Iowa, 662.

In determining whether the danger from continuing to work with an incompetent subordinate, for a certain period, was such that a prudent man would not have exposed himself to it, even on the faith of the master's promise to remove him, the circumstances to be considered are, "the general nature of the employment, the nature and extent of the danger necessarily and generally incident to it when carried on in company with an incompetent subordinate, as well as the particular nature of the work being done during the period . . . [covered by the promise] and the opportunities which the plaintiff's position presented for self-protection during a brief period by watchfulness, or by so ordering the employment . . . as to lessen the risk from his want of skill." Lyberg v. Northern P. R. Co. (1888) 39 Minn. 15.

In Swift & Co. v. Madden (1897) 165 Ill. 41, it was held that, as a promise to repair which makes no mention of the time at which the repairs are to be completed amounts to a promise to repair in a reasonable time, and as a servant to whom such a promise is made can remain in the service a reasonable time to permit the fulfillment of the promise, it is not error to refuse an instruction which would disable the servant from recovering if the jury found that the promise was indefinite as to the time when the defect should be repaired, and the servant continued to work from day to day with the knowledge that no repairs had been made.

d. Illustrative cases.

In any case where a prudent man would be justified in remaining in the service at all after the discovery of the danger covered by the promise, the servant cannot be regarded as negligent where he continues to work under a well-founded belief that steps to secure his safety will be taken almost immediately. Fairbank v. Haentzsch (1874) 73 Ill. 236 (danger from moving machinery,—no specific time mentioned in promise); Szendzikowski v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. (1895) 58 Ill. App. 418 (defective machine; no specific time mentioned in promise); Shlacker v. Ashland Iron Min. Co. (1891) 89 Mich. 253 (mining company liable for the death of a miner who was directed to remain at work by the mining captain after complaining of expected danger, and, being left there for two hours, was killed in consequence of so remaining); Madara v. Pottsville Iron & S. Co. (1894) 160 Pa. 109 (father entitled to re-now uniformly stated by text-writers, that where the master, on being notified by the servant of defects that render the service he is engaged to perform more hazardous, expressly promises to make the needed repairs, the servant may continue in the employment a reasonable time to permit the performance of a promise in that regard without being guilty of negligence, and, if any injury results therefrom, he may recover, unless when the danger is so imminent that no prudent person would undertake to perform the service. . . . The doctrine on this subject rests on sound principle, and it will be found to be supported by English and American decisions. The reason upon which the rule is said to rest is, that the promise of the master to repair defects relieves the servant from the charge of negligence by continuing in the service after the discovery of the extra perils to which he would be exposed." In Counsell v. Hall, 145 Mass. 468, the plaintiff was employed by the defendant to take charge of an engine and boiler, and plaintiff complained to defendant that the glass water gauge of the boiler was defective and dangerous, and defendant promised to get a new one. About two weeks after, the gauge exploded, injuring the plaintiff. The court said: "If machinery upon which a servant is employed has become dangerous, and the servant has complained of it, and has been promised that it shall be repaired, but it is injured before the defect is cover for the death of his son occasioned by the fact that the platform upon which he was working was obviously too narrow, and the accident happened within twenty minutes after the father had been induced by the boss in charge of the work to allow the deceased to remain temporarily at his employment by the promise that the deceased should be taken right down).

The courts are particularly inclined to put a lenient construction upon the servant's continuance of work, where his immediate desertion of his post would cause extreme inconvenience to his employer and the public, and he may therefore be regarded as having exposed himself to danger from motives of duty. Such cases present themselves where the servant is in control of some machinery used in the business of transportation, which, as is well known, is not infrequently found to be out of order at a time when it will greatly incommode the traffic to withdraw it temporarily from use. Thus, in Greene v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1883) 31 Minn. 248, 47 Am. Rep. 785, the action was held not to be barred, where an engineer was injured while running a defective engine to a certain station, his superior officer having promised to repair it there, if there was time, and, if not, to repair it on his return. So, it was held in Kane v. Northern C. R. Co. (1888) 128 U. S. 91, 32 L. ed. 339, where it was held that an employee on a train owes it to the public, as well as to his master, not to abandon his post, and that the absence of a step on one of the cars did not create a danger so imminent as to subject him to a charge of recklessness in continuing work, upon receiving an assurance from the conductor that the defective car would be thrown out of the train when it reached a station a few miles distant from the place where he noticed the defect. So, it has been held not to be necessarily negligence for an engineer to take to the end of the trip, at the request of his superior officer (master mechanic), an engine the only defect of which is a disabled air-brake. Flynn v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1883) 78 Mo. 195, 47 Am. Rep. 99.

The following rulings as to specific periods of continuance will serve to illustrate the manner in which the appellate courts have dealt with the verdicts of juries, under different sets of facts, showing the existence of a greater or less danger: In Clarke v. Holmes (1862) 7 Hurlst. & N. 937, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 356, 8 Jur. N. S. 992, 10 Week. Rep. 405, where the machinery which caused the injury had remained unfenced for about a year, and the servant had made frequent complaints, the court of exchequer chamber upheld a verdict absolving the plaintiff of the charge of contributory negligence in continuing to work during that period. But the question whether the 40 L. R. A.

time of continuance was unreasonable was not raised either by the court or by counsel.

In Belair v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1876) 43 Iowa, 662, the court refused to say, as a matter of law, that a brakeman waived his objection to a defective draw-bar by continuing in the service about three months, during which he had occasional opportunities for ascertaining whether the master's promise had been kept.

In Eureka Co. v. Bass (1896) 81 Ala. 200, 6 Am. Rep. 152, the court set aside a verdict for a miner where the tendency of the fuses supplied to hang fire had become known to him six days before he was injured, through his returning to the mine in the belief that the fire communicated to the fuse had been extinguished, and the court had declined to give a charge to the effect that the plaintiff could not recover if he continued work beyond a reasonable time.

This case was followed in Davis v. Graham (1892) 2 Colo. App. 210, where a judgment for the plaintiff was reversed because the trial judge had not given an instruction indicating to the jury the law as to reasonable time.

A miner is justified in continuing his work where his foreman has promised that a pile of debris, which would obstruct his escape in case of accident, would be removed on the following morning, where there is no indication that any such accident is likely to happen before the promise can be kept. Kelley v. Fourth of July Min. Co. (1896) 16 Mont. 484.

In Rothenberger v. Northwestern Consol. Min. Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 461, the court refused to set aside a verdict to the effect that a period of ten days was not an unreasonable period during which to continue work in a mill, although the defects in the machinery might have been remedied in about two days if all the other repairs had been postponed to the task of removing the danger complained of.

A servant is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence because he works in the neighborhood of dangerous machinery from which the covering has been torn away, by continuing in the employment after discovery of the danger, when he has notified the superintendent of the defect, and the latter has directed him to continue at work until noon of the same day, at which time he promises to remedy the defect. Roux v. Blodgett & D. Lumber Co. (1891) 85 Mich. 519, 13 L. R. A. 728.

Remaining at work about fifteen days after a promise to repair a slippery floor is not such an unreasonable length of time as to charge a servant with knowledge that there was no intention to change the same. Weber Wagon Co. v. Kehl (1891) 40 Ill. App. 585.

A servant is not, as matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence in continuing to work remedied, and while he is reasonably expecting the promise to be performed, the promise is a circumstance to be considered by the jury. . . . If . . . the time for performance has gone by before the accident, and, as must have been the fact, the servant knows that the repair has not been made, there is a very strong argument that the servant is no longer relying upon the promise, but has decided to take the risk." In Chicago, Anderson Pressed-Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak, 148 Ill. 573, the plaintiff was engaged in taking clay from the bank. He had objected to go underneath on account of the dangerous condition of the bank, and said that, if it should go down, he would be injured. One Kelly was foreman in charge, representing the defendant, and he insisted there was no danger, and ordered the plaintiff to go underneath, and perform his work. Under these circumstances, the court in this opinion held the plaintiff was not on the same footing with the master, and that his primary duty was obedience, and, while he believed it dangerous to go under the bank, and protested, yet where the master sought to allay his fears, and induce obedience to his commands, by declaring there was no danger, the servant in such case, having such fears, and relying upon such assurances, was entitled to recover. That case, however, presents various differences from the case at bar.

While it is true some cases hold the rule to for two or three days on an inclined tramway, some boards of which have become loose, where the superintendent has promised to secure them. Couroy v. Vulcan Iron Works (1876) 62 Mo. 35.

A brakeman is not, as a matter of law, negligent in continuing to use a defective lantern six days after the conductor has promised to furnish a new one. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lannigan (1895) 56 Kan. 109.

It is error to charge a jury, without qualification, that a servant who continues to work for six months after ascertaining the existence of a defect is absolved from the charge of contributory negligence, if he notified the master of the existence of the defect which he discovered, and the master promised that the defect would be repaired. The question is one of fact. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Williams (1891) 82 Tex. 342.

A verdict for a blacksmith injured through the incompetence of a helper will not be set aside where the injury was received four days after the master promised to furnish another assistant, and the testimony leaves it doubtful whether he ought, as a reasonable man, to have apprehended the occurrence of some accident. Lyberg v. Northern P. R. Co. (1888) 39 Minn. 15.

V. Servant's action not maintainable unless his continuance of work was actually induced by the master's promise to protect him from some danger, etc.

In order to enable the servant to recover he must show: (1) that he received from the master or the master's representative some assurance the effect of which was that the condition under which he was working would be so altered that the particular danger from which he apprehended injury would cease to exist; and (2) that his reliance on that assurance was the efficient cause of his remaining in the employment.

Where a promise is relied upon either as showing an express assumption of the risk by the master, or as affording a reasonable guaranty that the danger will be removed in time to prevent injury to the servant, it must be shown that what passed between the master and servant had in view either a transfer of the risk from the servant to the master, or the removal of the dangerous condition as a protection of the servant. In other words, the master should have induced the servant to waive his right to leave the dangerous employment either by taking upon himself the responsibility for injuries which might result, or by leading the servant to believe that the duty to repair the appliances, or supply the deficiency, would be performed within a reasonable time. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Turner (1893) 3 Tex. Civ. App. 487.

40 L. R. A.

In the first place, therefore, as there must have been something amounting to a promise by the master, it follows that a simple protest or complaint by the servant, not followed by an assurance that the defect will be remedied, will not cast the responsibility upon the master. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Duffield (1883) 12 Lea, 67, 47 Am. Rep. 319; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bingle (1895) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 322; Weid v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1888) 39 Kan. 63; Alexander v. Tennessee & L. C. Gold & Silver Min. Co. (1894) 3 N. M. 255.

"Protest against, or objection to, a service rendered dangerous by defective machinery, if the party making the protest or objection is under no legal obligation to remain in the service, cannot render the services subsequently performed involuntary." Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Drew (1883) 59 Tex. 10, 46 Am. Rep. 261. Compare Wheeler v. Berry (1893) 96 Mich. 250, where the protest was against being required to use machinery outside of his regular employment.

Much less will the responsibility be shifted where the complaint is merely that the certain defect increases the difficulty of the work, and not that it is dangerous. Balle v. Detroit Leather Co. (1889) 73 Mich. 158.

A mere surmise or expectation based on no specific promise will not be sufficient. McKelvey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 500; Southern P. Co. v. Lenash (1893) 2 Tex. Civ. App. 68.

But the rule does not require that a promise shall have been given in formal terms.

When complaining of defective instrumentalities or machinery it is not necessary that the servant shall state in exact words that he apprehends danger to himself by reason of the defects, nor need there be a formal notification that he will leave the service unless the defects be repaired or remedied. It is sufficient if, from the circumstances of the case, it can be fairly inferred that the servant is complaining on his own account, and that he was induced to continue in the service by reason of the promise. Rothenberger v. Northwestern Consol. Mill. Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 461.

Gr. as another case has it, any acts or expressions by which the servant gives the proper agent of the employer to understand that he is unwilling to continue in the employment, unless the cause of the danger is removed, constitute a sufficient complaint, and any acts or expressions by which such agent gives the servant to understand that the cause of the danger will be removed, constitute a sufficient promise. Pleart v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1891) 82 Iowa, 148.

A notification issued to engineers by the master mechanic, directing them to modify their be that the servant, after having informed the master of any defects in machinery, tools, appliances, or surroundings of his work, and the master having promised to repair and make safe such defects, has the right to rely upon such promise, and continue in the employ of the master, expecting such promise to be fulfilled, yet the rule in this state, and also in most other states, holds that such expectation on the part of the servant may continue only for a time reasonable for such repairs to be made, or defects remedied; and, if not so made within a reasonable time, the servant, having full knowledge of such defects, will be considered to have waived the same, and subject himself to all the dangers incident thereto. Swift & Co. v. Madden, 185 Ill. 41.

In the case at bar the plaintiff says he had frequently gone to the foreman, and told him that the standing where he was working was dangerous, and that the foreman would make an "offish" reply of some kind, and say he would fix it. Plaintiff says he spoke to the foreman quite a number of times during the year prior to this accident, the last time being two or three weeks before the injury occurred. He also says, in substance, that he did not place much reliance upon the foreman's word, but supposed, however, the floor would be fixed. It is apparent from this record that the speed on a certain section of the road "until the track can be got into better condition." operates as a declaration that the defects will be remedied, and an engineer has a right to rely on such an assurance. Flynn v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1883) 78 Mo. 195, 47 Am. Rep. 99.

On the other hand, it has been held that there was no promise such as the rule contemplates, where a section foreman to whom a yardmaster applied to improve a defective track in the yard, so as to lessen the risk, notified him that he could not do it without orders from his superior, but, upon a subsequent application, promised conditionally "that he would do it if he got time some Saturday afternoon." Wilson v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. (1887) 37 Minn. 326.

Nor where the only remark made by the master's representative in regard to the defective appliance was more in the nature of a rebuke for using it in its then condition than an assurance that it would be repaired. Shackleton v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co. (1895) 107 Mich. 16.

Nor was a statement made by the mechanic in charge of the shops where the defendant procured its repairs to be made, in reply to complaints made to him of the car in question, that it ought not to be made use of for coupling with the coupler on the other cars, evidence of assurances by defendant that its use would be discontinued, and any tendency to make out a case of culpable negligence on the part of the defendant towards its servants. Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co. v. Gildersleeve (1876) 83 Mich. 133, 136.

Nor is a promise of getting a new hand car, which will relieve a railroad employee's use of a defective car from constituting contributory negligence, established by evidence that the foreman directed the employee to use the car with great care until he could get a new one, and that he expected a new one at any time. McAndrews v. Montana Union R. Co. (1895) 15 Mont. 290.

Nor is a servant warranted in relying on a mere conditional promise by a fellow employee to take the necessary steps to lessen the risk, "if he got time," when he has already admitted that he could not do this without directions from a superior officer. Wilson v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. (1887) 37 Minn. 326.

Whether there was actually a promise to remove the danger is a question for the jury, when it is a matter of implication. Stoutenburgh v. Dow, G. N. Co. (1891) 82 Iowa, 179.

The weight of authority is to the effect that a promise to furnish other instrumentalities in place of those from which the servant apprehends danger is equivalent in its legal effect to a promise to remedy a defect in some instrumentality the use of which is to be continued. 40 L. R. A.

Pleant v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1891) 82 Iowa, 148; Atchinson, T. & St. F. R. Co. v. Lannigan (1895) 56 Kan. 109; Atchinson, T. & St. F. R. Co. v. Sadler (1887) 88 Kan. 128; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Finlayson (1884) 16 Neb. 578, 49 Am. Rep. 724; Gowen v. Harley (1893) 12 U. S. App. 574, 56 Fed. Rep. 973, 6 C. C. A. 190; Chicago Drop Forge & Foundry Co. v. Van Dam (1894) 149 Ill. 337, Affirming (1893) 50 Ill. App. 470; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Croker (1889) 41 Kan. 747.

In the recent case of Schlitz v. Pabst Brewing Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 303, the court said: "The cases in which the rule has been applied have been cases where there was a promise on the part of the master to remedy the defect. But we can see no difference in principle between such cases and those where, upon the servant's objecting to continue the use, the master, for his own convenience and purposes, induces the servant to continue it for a short time, upon the promise that the use shall be discontinued at the end of such time. What, for instance, could be the difference on the matter of assuming the risk between a promise to remedy the defects of this particular wagon and a promise to furnish another without such defects? We can see none."

An employee cannot be held to assume the risk of bolts protruding from a coupling of a revolving shaft notwithstanding a promise of the foreman to cover it, on the ground that such promise is not to repair an existing defect in the machinery, but to supply a new or additional appliance which the employer is under no obligation to furnish. Homestake Min. Co. v. Fullerton (1895) 36 U. S. App. 32, 69 Fed. Rep. 323, 16 C. C. A. 545.

But some courts seem to incline to the view that the situation is not the same in the two cases.

In Sweeney v. Berlin & J. Envelope Co. (1895) 101 N. Y. 520, 54 Am. Rep. 722, the court expressed its opinion, arguendo, that a promise which merely concerns a new appliance not attached to the particular machine whose sufficiency is complained of, nor to any machines of the same make, does not fall within the general rule, but it was held that, upon the evidence, there was no promise made, nor any inducement offered him, to take the risk, and the case was finally decided in favor of the defendant on the ground that the servant had simply been requested to continue working with an old machine of a certain type with the peculiarities of which he had been familiar ever since he had begun work, and therefore assumed the risk of any injury which he might thereafter receive in a service which he was at liberty to quit.

In Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Ott (1894) 55 N. E. 517, it was held that a servant who until floor was in a dangerous condition. It is apparent also that the plaintiff was fully aware of this dangerous condition, and had been so for at least a year. It was his duty, being fully aware of the danger, to have notified the foreman or his employer, which he did. It was his right, also, under the law, having given such notice, to have continued in the work in which he was engaged for a reasonable time only, awaiting the fulfilment of this promise to remedy such dangerous condition. The jury should have been instructed that the law was as stated in the instruction which was refused. The instruction should have been given, and it was error to refuse it.

the arrival of others which the master has promised to obtain, uses a lantern which he has ascertained to be defective, assumes the risk of injury as one thenceforth incident to the service, and is not in the same position as if he had used it until promised repairs should be completed. But that ruling was changed on rehearing (1893) 11 Ind. App. 504.

In International & G. N. R. Co. v. Williams (1896, Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 181, the court thought that the general principle as to the effect of a promise was not applicable where a section hand was told that a defect in a hand-car would be remedied, and, having been transferred to another car, was injured by the defective car running into it.

That the servant's reliance on the master's promise was not the efficient cause of the injury cannot be inferred where the evidence shows that the servant apprehends no danger from the particular service in which, pending the fulfilment of the promise, he was engaged when he received the injury. Holloran v. Union Iron & Foundry Co. (1896) 133 Mo. 470, where a servant engaged in moving a derrick across the uncovered girders on the first floor of a building, after the master had promised to furnish more planks, fell into the cellar by reason of his foot slipping from the girder, upon which he placed it without apprehending any danger therefrom.

Nor does a promise inure to the benefit of the servant unless he was injured at a time and place covered by it. Thus, a promise to shore up a part of a trench where the servant expects to be presently working will not entitle him to recover for injuries caused by an earthslide at that part of the trench where he was at work when he received the promise. Showalter v. Fairbanks (1894) 88 Wis. 376.

It is not necessary that the promise should have been addressed to the plaintiff individually, provided it was made in his presence, and the stipulated repairs will remove a danger to which he is exposed. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sadler (1887) 38 Kan. 128; Alton Lime & Cement Co. v. Calvey (1892) 47 Ill. App. 343.

In the second place, the promise is a material element in the case only in so far as it is an undertaking to remedy conditions which involve danger to the servant. A stipulation to change those conditions for some other reason than the protection which the servant will thereby obtain will not bring the case within the general principle.

"No case . . . has gone so far as to hold that, where the servant does not complain on his own account, and continues in his employment with full knowledge of the risk, he can recover of the master, because the latter, when the defective condition was called to his attention by the servant, gave assurances, which
40 L. R. A.

For this error the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court.

Carter, J., dissenting:

I do not agree to the reversal of the judgment in this case, nor to the reasons given for such reversal. So far as the discussion of certain of the facts is concerned, it would seem to be sufficient to say that the judgment of the appellate court has finally and conclusively settled the facts in favor of appellee. I do not find so much fault with the statement of the general rules governing such cases as I do with the application of such rules to the instruction which the court below refused to give to the did not induce the servant to remain, that the defect should be remedied." Lewis v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1891) 153 Mass. 73, 10 L. E. A. 513, where it was held that no action could be maintained by a servant whose employment required him to go upon a pier which had become unsafe because of the decayed condition of the planking, and who continued in the service with full knowledge of the risk, although he complained of the defects on the ground that "someone was liable to get hurt," and received the master's assurance that they should be remedied. It was considered that the complaint was made entirely in the interest of the defendant, and referred only to the danger incurred by strangers.

So, an assurance given by the master that the number of hands will be increased, will not relieve the servant of his assumption of the risk arising from the insufficiency of the number, where the master's promise was made in his own interest, and with reference to the more rapid despatch of his business, and not with a view to the protection of the servant, and to induce him to remain in the service. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Turner (1893) 3 Tex. Civ. App. 487.

So, the general rule has no application to a case where neither the master nor the servant contemplated any additional danger to the servant in the use of the defective instrument, but only imperfections in the work done with it. Tesmer v. Boehm (1895) 58 Ill. App. 609.

Nor to a case where the remonstrance of the servant is merely to the effect that, with another appliance, the work would be easier, and he himself admits that, before the accident, he never thought that the work involved any danger. Gowen v. Harley (1893) 12 U. S. App. 574, 56 Fed. Rep. 973, 6 C. C. A. 190.

Lastly, after the servant has shown that there has been a promise, actual or implied on the part of the master, and that this promise amounts to an undertaking to remove, not only a danger, but a danger by which he himself is threatened, he must still fall in his action unless he proves that he relied in good faith upon the promise. Showalter v. Fairbanks (1894) 88 Wis. 376.

The mere fact that the servant has some suspicion that the master's assurances will not be made good is not enough to deprive him of his right of action. Weber Wagon Co. v. Kehl (1892) 139 Ill. 644, Affirming (1891) 40 Ill. App. 584.

But an instruction which tells the jury they must find for the plaintiff, if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, at the time of the injury, "had reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant would immediately cure the defect," has been held misleading and prejudicial to the defendant, as it leaves the jury to infer that the servant may recover, even if his jury at the request of the defendant, and for which refusal this court now reverses the judgment. I am satisfied that the instruction in question was erroneous, and that it was properly refused. That instruction, if given, would have told the jury that the servant may, while relying upon the promise of the master to repair, remain in the service of the master only for such a time after such promise as would be reasonably sufficient to enable the master to remedy the defect, and that, if he continues in such service longer than that, he assumes the increased risk. I do not understand the law to be that the time, and that only, which would be reasonably sufficient for the making of the repairs, is the measure of the time during which the servant may rely upon the master's promise to repair. I submit, with deference to the opinion of the majority of the court, that the reasonable time does not so much relate to the time required to make the repairs as it does to the time the servant is authorized, in the exercise of reason and prudence, to rely upon his master's promise. I know that the authorities and text-books state in general terms, as stated in the opinion of the court, that the servant may continue, after the promise to repair, in the employment of the belief that the defect would be cured was a mere surmise or expectation of his own, based on no specific promise. McKelvey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 500.

Similarly, in Southern P. Co. v. Lash (1893) 2 Tex. Civ. App. 68, the servant's right to recover was denied on the ground that the servant continued work, not because he relied on the master's promise, as given, but merely because of an expectation, based on the defendant's habit, to make the repairs in question.

It is ordinarily for the jury to say whether the servant's reliance on a promise by the master induced him to continue work. Union Mfg. Co. v. Morrissey (1883) 40 Ohio St. 148, 48 Am. Rep. 609; Rothenberger v. Northwestern Consol. Mill. Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 461.

In Showalter v. Fairbanks (1894) 88 Wis. 376, it was said to be quite doubtful whether the rule that a servant is entitled to go on working for a reasonable time after a promise to remove a danger, without his being charged with an assumption of the risk, is applicable to any other cases except those in which machinery or tools are found to be defective.

The court cited Gowen v. Harley (1893) 12 U. S. App. 574, 56 Fed. Rep. 973, 6 C. C. A. 180, but the ruling in that case does not justify any such expression of doubt, as it is merely an application of the principle that a promise by the master has no effect in augmenting the servant's rights, unless it relates to the removal of some danger which threatens his safety.

VI. Whose promise is binding on an employer.

The principles upon which it is determined whether a promise, when given by an employee, binds the master, are the same as those which fix the dividing line between an alter ego and a mere fellow servant. That is to say, the promise is or is not deemed to have been given by the master according as the employee who gave it was or was not one charged with the performance of that particular duty of the master, the breach of which has produced the servant's danger.

The plaintiff, in other words, cannot recover on the ground of a promise made by an employee unless the promisor had authority to take such steps as were appropriate, under the circumstances, to secure the safety of the employee. Ehlncke v. Porter (1891) 45 Minn. 338.

The following rulings will serve as illustrations of this general principle, but, as they are necessarily colored by the views prevailing in the particular state from which they proceed as to the extent to which a master is liable for the act of a fellow employee of the injured servant, the practitioner should consider them with due reference to the general doctrine which they exemplify.

The employer has been held liable for the promise of the undermentioned employees as respects the matters referred to:

40 L. R. A.

Of a general superintendent of a factory to put in a new floor, to replace one which has become dangerously slippery. Weber Wagon Co. v. Kehl (1892) 139 Ill. 644, Affirming (1891) 40 Ill. App. 584.

Of a railway superintendent, to repair a switch. Patterson v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. (1874) 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412.

Of an assistant general roadmaster, to repair a switch. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Winslow (1894) 10 Ohio C. C. 193.

Of a yardmaster to have running boards put on a yard engine. Pleart v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1891) 82 Iowa, 148.

Of the day foreman of a mine, that exposed parts of machinery will be covered: Such an act does not require a previous conference with the general superintendent, or the master mechanic, because it does not involve any alteration of the machinery, or interfere to any extent with its operation. Homestake Min. Co. v. Fullerton (1895) 36 U. S. App. 32, 69 Fed. Rep. 923, 16 C. C. A. 545.

Of a foreman with power to discharge an incompetent servant, that he will be replaced by another. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Eckols (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 429; Wust v. Erie City Iron Works (1892) 149 Pa. 263; Lytle v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. (1890) 84 Mich. 239.

Of a section foreman to supply new tools. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sadler (1887) 38 Kan. 123.

Of a conductor, that a defect in a car will be repaired. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Henley (1893) 92 Tenn. 207.

On the other hand, the master is not bound by the promise of an employee who merely makes repairs which have been determined upon by a person in authority. Ehlncke v. Porter (1891) 45 Minn. 338.

Nor by promise of an agent other than the one whom the servant knew to be in charge of such matters. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. v. McDowell (1894) 16 Ky. L. Rep. 1.

Nor by the promise of an employee who is a mere fellow servant acting under the instructions of the plaintiff himself, and not a representative of the master, qualified to give directions as to the continued use of the defective appliance. Shackleton v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co. (1895) 107 Mich. 16.

A servant who asks to have a saw reset and is told by the employee intrusted with that duty to go on working until noon, when he will see what he can do, cannot recover for injuries which he receives before that hour. The neglect, if any, is in a detail of the management of the machinery, not in a duty of the master. Webber v. Piper (1888) 109 N. Y. 496, Affirming (1885) 58 Hun, 353.

It is error to give an instruction which assumes that an employee was the representative of a railroad company as regards the repairing of electric lights used to facilitate the master a reasonable time, to enable the master to make the repairs and remove the defect; but it does not follow that the measure of such reasonable time is as stated in said refused instruction. Let it be supposed that a case is on trial, and the injury to the servant is undisputed. The master admits the defective condition of the machinery or the place where the servant is required to work, and that it caused the injury; admits the servant notified him of such defective condition, and that he gave the servant his promise to make repairs and remove the defects complained of; that he failed to keep his promise, and the servant was injured. Then, under the rule stated in the above-mentioned instruction, and adopted by the opinion of the court, the master would proceed to prove, to relieve himself from liability, that he did not, within such time as would have been reasonably sufficient for the purpose before the injury, make the promised repairs,—in other words, would make a complete defense by proving his own default and negligence; while the servant would be required to prove that the master was not in default, but had not, at the time of the injury, had sufficient time in which to make the repairs. Such positions of the parties would, to work of loading iron from a car onto a steamer, and that his promise to repair one of them bound the company, where another employee is shown to have been in control of the entire work, and no evidence has been offered to prove that the former employee was vested with any other power than of overseeing the loading of the train. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brentford (1891) 79 Tex. 619.

VII. Rule where the promise relates to simple appliances.

In Marsh v. Chickering (1886) 101 N. Y. 396, it was held that a lamplighter who was injured through the slipping of a ladder on which he had mounted in the discharge of his duties could not maintain an action although his employer had promised to furnish it with hooks and spikes for the purpose of obviating the danger of such accidents. The reasoning which led the court (Ruger, Ch. J., dissenting) to this conclusion will appear from the subjoined extract from the opinion: "As a general rule it is to be supposed that the master who employs a servant has a better and more comprehensive knowledge as to the machinery and materials to be used than the employee who has claims upon his protection against the use of defective or improper materials or appliances while engaged in the performance of the service required of him. The rule stated, however, is not applicable in all cases, and where the servant has equal knowledge with the master as to the machinery used or the means employed in the performance of the work devolving upon him, and a full knowledge of existing defects, it does not necessarily follow that the master is liable for injuries sustained by reason of the use thereof. In considering the application of the rule just stated, due regard must be had to the limited knowledge of the employee as to the machinery and structure on which he is employed and to his capacity and intelligence, and to the fact that the servant has a right to rely upon the master to protect him from danger and injury, and in selecting the agent from which it may arise. In cases, however, where persons are employed in the performance of ordinary labor, in which no machinery is used, and no materials furnished, the use of which requires the exercise of great skill and care, it can scarcely be claimed that a defective instrument or tool furnished by the master, of which the employee has full knowledge and comprehension, can be regarded as making out a case of liability within the rule laid down. A common laborer who uses agricultural implements while at work upon a farm or in a garden, or one who is employed in any service not requiring great skill and judgment, and who uses the ordinary tools employed in such work, to which he is accustomed and in regard to which he has perfect knowledge, can hardly be said to have a claim against his employer for negligence, if in using a utensil which he knows to be defective, he is accidentally injured. It does not rest with the servant to say that the master has superior knowledge, and has thereby imposed upon him. He fully comprehends that the instrument which he employs is not perfect, and if he is thereby injured it is by reason of his own fault and negligence. The fact that he notified the master of the defect and asked for another instrument, and the master promised to furnish the same, in such a case, does not render the master responsible if an accident occurs. We have been referred to no adjudicated case which upholds the liability of a party under circumstances of the same character as those presented by the evidence here. A rule imposing such a liability in the case considered would be far reaching, and would extend the principle stated to many of the vocations of life for which it was never intended. It is one of a just and salutary character, designed for the benefit of employees engaged in work where machinery and materials are used of which they can have but little knowledge, and not for those engaged in ordinary labor which only requires the use of implements with which they are entirely familiar. The plaintiff was of the latter class of laborers, and the work in which he was engaged was not of a character which would entitle him to the protection of the principle referred to."

The doctrine of this case has been followed in the subjoined rulings:

One employed to make general repairs about a building is guilty of negligence in attempting to ascend a ladder placed on a slippery floor, without himself arranging, under his duty of general repairing, some appliance, fixture, or guard to make the foot of the ladder secure, although the employer had previously promised to procure a safe ladder. Corcoran v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. (1892) 81 Wis. 191.

An employer is not liable for personal injuries sustained by his employee because of an obvious defect in a ladder consisting of the nails being partially withdrawn from the steps, and which could have been easily remedied with a stone or brick if a hatchet or hammer was not obtainable, although he had informed the employer thereof and the latter had told him it was safe for the present, but promised to remedy it. Meador v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1894) 138 Ind. 290.

Where a defect is of a plain and obvious character, such as the wearing down by constant friction, of a plank which is being used as a walk by employees engaged in the construction of a trestle, and it is obviously rashness for anyone to tread upon the plank, the servant cannot charge the master with liability for the use of such an appliance, merely by reason of the fact that he has given an in-say the least that might be said, be anomalous. It seems clear to me that the rule stated in this instruction and adopted by this court is illogical, and contrary to reason and natural justice. It is also in conflict with what was held in Weber Wagon Co. v. Kehl, 189 Ill. 646. It seems to me that the true rule ought to be, and is, that the assumption of the increased risk by the master by his promise to repair, whereby the servant is induced to remain, will continue until he fulfils his promise, or notifies the servant of his inability or unwillingness to do so, or until such a length of time has elapsed as would, under all of the attending circumstances, make it unreasonable for the servant to longer rely upon the promise. Under such a rule, the question would be whether the servant, at the time of the accident, relied, or definite promise to repair it. Brewer v. Tennessee, Coal, I. & R. Co. (1896) 97 Tenn. 615.

"The rule that the master is responsible for damages resulting to a servant from defects in machinery and appliances of which the servant has notified him and which he has promised to repair, governs cases in which machinery or tools that are used in the work are discovered to be dangerously defective while in use, and to cases in which tools or machinery are necessary for the safe performance of the work. It has no application to a case where the service required is simple manual labor without tools or machinery, and where no such tools or appliances are necessary to the performance of the work with a reasonable degree of safety. Gowen v. Harley (1893) 12 U. S. App. 574, 56 Fed. Rep. 973, 6 C. C. A. 190, where it was held that a receiver operating a railroad could not be held; that a servant could not recover damages for the breach of his employer's promise to furnish skids for the purpose of transferring a box weighing about 250 pounds from one railroad car to another, only about 5 feet away. (The general principle laid down in Marsh v. Chickering, supra, was approved, but the decision was also based on the consideration that the promise was not that a danger would be removed, but merely that additional facilities for doing the work would be furnished.

Compare also St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Kelton (1892) 55 Ark. 483; Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski (1896) 162 Ill. 461. In the latter case, however, the court seems to consider that this qualification of the general rule is referable, not only to the fact that the danger in such case is obvious, but that the continued use of the tool after knowledge of the defect, and after the lapse of more than a reasonable time since the promise to remedy it was made, indicates recklessness.

This introduction of the factor of reasonable time is not justified by anything said in the leading case of Marsh v. Chickering, supra, and it must therefore remain somewhat doubtful, whether the Illinois court would follow the New York ruling without reservation, if the consideration here emphasized were eliminated from the case.

It is submitted that Marsh v. Chickering (1886) 101 N. Y. 306, and the decisions which have followed it, do not rest upon any rational basis. The modification of the general principle introduced by them only upon the hypothesis that one or other of these three theories is correct: (1) That, in the case of simple appliances, the promise of the master does not, in any way, alter or shift his responsibility, even temporarily; (2) that the quantitative value of the constructive knowledge imputed to the servant with regard to the defects in such appliance is different from the quantitative value of such actual knowledge as he may acquire in regard to more elaborate instrumentalities; (3) that the danger of handling simple appliances like ladders, spades, axes, etc., is, as a matter of law, so serious as to require the application of the rule that the master's promise will not warrant a continuance of the service where the hazards to which the servant will be exposed are so imminent that no prudent man would encounter them. All these positions are manifestly untenable: the first because it entails the anomaly of gauging the effect of an express stipulation by the nature of the subject-matter to which it relates; the second, because it involves a logical absurdity; the third, because it ignores the most obvious facts.

The conclusion arrived at by the New York court seems to be accounted for by the undue weight which is ascribed to the fact that, in the case of a defect in a simple appliance, the servant has equal or superior means of knowledge in regard to the dangers to which it will subject him. Assuming the rationale of the situation created by the promise to be that which is stated in subdiv. III., supra, it seems manifest that the question whether the servant's knowledge was equal or superior to that of the master cannot be of any moment except where the continuance of work has been induced, both by a promise of repairs and by an assurance that the defect is not so serious as to threaten immediate injury. It may be a perfectly sound argument that the servant is not justified in relying on the master's promise in regard to the prospects of safety while repairs are being made in an appliance of a very simple kind. But it is not apparent why in the case of such an appliance, just as in the case of any other, the inference may not be drawn that the master has assumed the responsibility for accidents while the repairs are being executed, nor why the servant should not be entitled to hold the master to the performance of the revived or modified contract, which, as we have seen, is implied by a promise to remove a specific cause of danger. The question whether a prudent man would have allowed his conduct to be influenced by the promise would then remain to be decided, as a distinct issue, by a due consideration of all the circumstances presented by the testimony.

VIII. Obligations of the servant pending the fulfilment of the promise.

The fact that the master has promised to repair a defect does not relieve the servant of the duty of using reasonable care for his safety. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bingle (1895) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 322.

If the servant, by his own negligence in the manner of using the defective appliance, brings injury on himself, the master will not be liable." Schlitz v. Pabst Brewing Co. (1894) 57 Minn. 303.

In view of his knowledge of the existence of an abnormal danger, a greater degree of care will be required of him than if he had not known of the defect. Meador v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1894) 138 Ind. 290.

But the employer "cannot hold [him] that servant to the exercise of an unerring choice of the best method of obviating difficulties and lessening danger. If the servant uses reasonable and ordinary judgment, he does all that can be required, and the fact that his judgment had reasonable grounds to rely, upon the promise of the master to repair, or had himself assumed the increased risk by continuing in the service after he had ceased to rely upon the master's promise. The rule is stated more broadly than is here contended for in Chicago Anderson Pressed-Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak, 148 Ill. 578, citing Holmes v. Clarke, 6 Hurlst. &

N. 349. See also Counsell v. Hall, 145 Mass. 468.

Magruder, J.: I concur in the views expressed by Mr. Justice Carter.

Boggs, J.: I concur in the dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Carter.

Rehearing denied December 21, 1897.

may not prove to be absolutely the best does not relieve the employer from liability." Illinois C. R. Co. v. Creighton (1895) 63 Ill. App. 168.

That the servant, when he is called upon to work with an appliance which he has ceased to handle since the master promised to repair it may or may not be justified, according to the circumstances, in acting upon the presumption that the repairs have been completed, is clear both upon principle and authority. Thus, on the one hand, it has been held that an employee who knows that the machine at which he works is out of repair and that a fellow servant has been ordered to repair it on a specified day, is guilty of such contributory negligence as will prevent a recovery for an injury resulting from such defect, in subsequently going to work upon the machine of his own accord, without ascertaining whether or not it had been repaired. Schulz v. Rohe (1896) 149 N. Y. 132.

So, the servant will be denied recovery where the defect is of such an obvious kind that if he had been making the ordinary use of his eyesight at the time he was injured, he could not have failed to observe that it had not been repaired. Brewer v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (1885) 56 Mich. 620.

Under certain circumstances the broad principle will be controlling, that an employee who has given notice of a defect to the proper officer whose duty it is to make the repairs, and the impression has been conveyed to him that these would be made, has a right to assume that they have been made, and to act upon that assumption. Thus, an engineer who has received a promise that his engine will be repaired, and is absent on sick leave for several days afterwards, is not, as a matter of law, negligent in taking out the engine at the end of that period without specific information that the repairs have been completed. Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock (1894) 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 938.

A complaint which, in effect, alleges that the injured servant was induced to remain in the service by the promise of his foreman that a fellow servant of whose incompetence he had complained would be discharged is complete without a further averment that the plaintiff, when he was injured, was ignorant of the fact that the incompetent servant had not been discharged. To go further would be to plead matters of evidence. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Eckols (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 429.

The obligations of the servant to use due care after he has received a promise of repairs do not go to the extent of a requirement that he shall himself take active steps to lessen the danger covered by the promise.

Thus, the fact that a railroad engineer could repair a defective foot-board himself, or run the locomotive with it entirely removed, does not render him guilty of contributory negligence in continuing to use it in its defective condition, where the rule of the company provides that employees shall report defects or repair them themselves, and he has reported the defect to the proper person, and been twice assured that it will be repaired. Gibson v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. (1893) 55 Minn. 177.

Nor is an employee whose duties require him to pass under a coupling of a revolving shaft having protruding bolts under any obligation to turn aside from his ordinary duties and construct a box to cover such coupling, after the foreman's attention has been called to the defect and he has promised to send carpenters to cover it. Homestake Min. Co. v. Fullerton (1895) 38 U. S. App. 32, 69 Fed. Rep. 923, 16 C. A. 545.

C. B. L.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

W. T. PERHAM, Admr., etc., of Nathaniel Carl Perham, Deceased, Resp't.,
v.

PORTLAND GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Or.....)

1. An action for death caused by wrongful act or omission, whether it results instantly or not, is given by Hill's Ann. Code, § 369, 371, providing that the personal representatives may maintain an action at law if the deceased "might have maintained an action had he lived," and that the recovery shall be administered as other personal property of the deceased.

2. The fact that there are no surviving relatives or creditors of a person killed by wrongful act or omission does not preclude a right of action under Hill's Ann. Code, §§ 369, 371, making the recovery assets of the estate.

3. The owner of electric wires carrying a dangerous current is chargeable with negligence in stringing them over a bridge so near the top of it that it is impossible to make repairs on the bridge without coming into contact with them.

4. A workman engaged in repairing a bridge over which electric wires with an apparently safe insulation are strung, where he must come in contact with them in performing his work, has a right to assume that contact with them will not be dangerous.—

NOTE.—For negligence as to electric-light wires in or on buildings, see Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. (Mass.) 82 L. R. A. 400, and note; also 40 L. R. A.

McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric-Light Co. (Ky.) 34 L. R. A. 812. See also Mooney v. Luzerne (Pa.) post, 811.

pecially after the workmen have made an examination of them, and ascertained, as they suppose, that the wires are not dangerous.

5. Placing electric wires known to be dangerous at a place where others are lawfully entitled to be constitutes negligence.
6. The apparent perfect insulation of electric wires, which is calculated to deceive and to cause one unfamiliar with the facts to suppose them safe, when the wires are placed where persons in the performance of their duties may come in contact with them, amounts to an invitation to them to risk contact therewith.
7. The exercise of due care and prudence to prevent injury by dangerous electric wires is a question for the jury.
8. An instruction against allowing exemplary damages, or damages as a solatium for grief or anguish, need not be given, where the complaint and the proof are confined to the earning capacity, habits, and probable length of life of a person killed.
9. Verbal inaccuracy of a charge to the jury will not require a reversal, if the charge as a whole fairly and accurately presents the law applicable to the facts.
10. The care demanded of electric companies must be commensurate with the danger, and, where the wires carry a highly dangerous current of electricity, the law requires the utmost degree of care in the construction, inspection, and repair of the wires so as to keep them harmless, at places where persons are liable to come in contact with them.

(April 18, 1898.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

Statement by Bean, J.:

This is an action brought under § 371 of the Code to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, caused by the alleged negligence of the defendant company. The facts, which are practically undisputed, are that on September 27, 1898, the plaintiff's intestate, an employee of the East-Side Railway Company, a corporation owning and operating a suburban railway between Portland and Oregon City, was killed while engaged in repairing its bridge across the Clackamas river by coming in contact with wires owned and used by the defendant company for the transmission of electricity from its station in Oregon City to its customers in the city of Portland, and which were suspended over and horizontal with such bridge. This bridge is described by the witnesses as a Howe truss with half-hip connections, 22 feet wide, and the distance between the top and bottom chords is 35 feet. Near the ends of each top chord are four vertical iron rods with nuts and washers, connecting the top and bottom chords, and the top chords are connected together by 6x8 lateral braces set on edge, crossing each other in the shape of the letter X, and also by iron rods, about an inch in diameter, at either extremity. The main end braces of the bridge run from the ends of the top chords to the outer end of the bottom chords at an angle of 45 degrees, and are connected together, by cross braces similar to the top lateral braces, and also by two timbers 5½ by 9½ inches, called "strut braces," placed horizontally above and below the cross braces. The upper strut brace is 4½ inches below the under side of the top chord, or 20½ inches below the upper surface thereof, and the most southerly lateral rod connecting the top chords of the bridge is 22 inches north thereof, and 13 inches higher than its upper surface. Under a license from the railway company, the defendant had, at the time of the accident, ten wires strung lengthwise and 85 inches above the top of the bridge, which were attached to pins in cross braces or arms extending from one side of the bridge to the other, and supported by standards resting on the top chords. The wires were placed 1 foot apart, except the two on the west side, between which there was a space of 2 feet. On the 15th of September, 1898, the railway company sent a gang of men under charge of a foreman to repair the bridge, and they were engaged in such work until some time in the following month. While thus engaged, it became necessary to tighten the nuts on the vertical rods connecting the top and bottom chords, and, as this could not be done on the south end of the bridge without moving the arm or brace to which the electric wires were attached, the foreman telephoned, on the morning of the 27th of September, to the office of the railway company in Portland, asking that a lineman be sent out to detach the wires, so that the arm could be moved, but, as the company neglected to do so, he concluded to go on with the work and do the best he could. He thereupon directed the deceased and three other workmen to go up on top of the bridge, and tighten the nuts on the rods with a large wheel wrench 7 feet and 8 inches in diameter. The wheel part of this wrench was some 15 or 16 inches above the socket which fitted on the nut, and the wrench was operated by workmen sitting outside of the wheel on the chords or braces of the bridge, or boards placed thereon. Before working in and among the wires, the workmen examined them, and, finding that they were covered with the insulating material in common use, and that such covering was unbroken, and apparently in good condition, and receiving no injurious effect from handling them, concluded that they were safe. At the time this examination was made the wires were what are called "dead wires," as the electric current was shut off about 8 o'clock in the morning and not turned on again until about 4 in the afternoon, but of this fact the workmen were ignorant, and they supposed and believed that the wires were live wires all the time, and that the reason they were harmless was because of the insulation. Along in the afternoon, the deceased and his fellow workmen, having completed the work at the north end of the bridge, proceeded to the south end for the purpose of tightening the rods on that end, but, being unable to place the wheel wrench on the nuts because of the standard which supported the cross bar to which the wires of the defendant company were attached, they were directed by the foreman to move it out of the way. At this time the two wires on the west side of the bridge were live wires, but this fact was unknown to the workmen. They proceeded to detach a sufficient number of the wires, beginning at the east side of the bridge, to enable them to move the east end of the south standard or support a sufficient distance north to permit the use of the wheel wrench; and after taking out the lag screws, which fastened the standard to the top chord, the deceased was directed by the foreman to cross over to the west side of the bridge to a hand line and draw up the tools necessary to be used in fastening the standard out of the way of the wrench. In obedience to this order, he started to walk over on one of the top lateral braces, stepping over the wires and steadying himself by touching them with his hands, and when he reached the two west wires, which were carrying at the time 5,000 volts of electricity, he accidentally took hold of both wires at the same time, and the entire force of the current passed through his body, killing him instantly.

The complaint alleges: That at the time the defendant so placed its wires over the bridge of the railway company it well knew it would be necessary from time to time for such company to cause the bridge to be repaired, and for persons to work upon the top chords and braces thereof; but, notwithstanding such knowledge, it carelessly and negligently strung its wires only 2½ feet above such chords and braces, and in such a manner that it was not possible or practicable for persons to work upon such bridge without coming in contact with and handling the same; and that it carelessly and negligently failed and omitted to protect or cover the wires, and particularly the two west ones, with safe or sufficient insulating material, and that it carelessly and negligently permitted the covering used thereon to become worn, defective, and wholly insufficient to render them safe to persons coming in contact therewith. That it knew the bridge was being repaired during all the times referred to, and particularly on the 27th day of September, and that it might be necessary at any time between the hours of 7 o'clock in the morning and 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon of that day for the workmen to move about among and come in contact with its wires, and that it was not possible or practicable for them, nor for anyone, to go upon or work upon the top chords or the top lateral braces without so doing; and that it also knew that the deceased was engaged in the work of tightening the vertical rods during the afternoon of the 27th, and that he was necessarily moving about among and coming in contact with and handling the wires, but that, notwithstanding such facts, it carelessly and negligently caused and permitted a high and dangerous current of electricity to be turned into the two wires nearest the west side of the bridge at about 4:20 o'clock in the afternoon, without notice or knowledge to the deceased or any of his fellow workmen; and that the deceased, while engaged in the performance of his duties and exercising due care and caution, and without any fault on his part, came in contact with said wires, and was instantly killed. That all the workmen on the bridge, including the deceased and foreman, thought and believed it was perfectly safe for them to move about among and touch and handle the wires referred to, because the same seemed to be insulated, but they had no knowledge of the time the current was turned into the wires, but thought and believed they were charged with electricity and were live wires at all times.

The complaint then alleges the appointment of the plaintiff as administrator of the estate of deceased, and upon the question of damages avers: "That said Nathaniel Carl Perham at the time of his death was twenty-five years and six months old, unmarried, strong, healthy, temperate, industrious, frugal, of good intelligence and business capacity, and was a skillful carpenter and bridge carpenter and contractor, and was earning and receiving wages at the rate of $3 per day, and would, if he had continued to live during the ordinary period of life, have continued to earn and receive the same and even greater wages for his services, and would have accumulated property and estate to the present value of $20,000, and that by reason of his death, occasioned by the negligence and wrongful acts and omissions of the defendant, as hereinbefore set forth, plaintiff, as administrator of said estate, has been injured and damaged in the sum of $20,000;" and prays for judgment against defendant for the sum of $5,000, being the limit of a recovery permitted by the statute. The defendant, by its answer, admits that at the time it placed its wires on and along the bridge in question it knew that it would be necessary to repair the bridge from time to time, and that in doing so persons would be required to go and be upon the top chords and top lateral braces thereof, but it denies that its wires were so placed that it would be necessary for such persons to come in contact therewith, or move about among or handle the same, or that it failed or omitted to protect or cover its wires with proper or sufficient insulating material, or that it permitted the covering used to become worn or defective. But it alleges that it is impracticable to insulate wires carrying such a high voltage as was carried over the wires in question so that they will not be dangerous to the life of persons coming in contact with two of them at the same time; that all of its wires were attached by proper and sufficient glass insulators to wooden cross bars or arms at a height of not less than 2 feet and 10 inches above the top chords and top lateral braces of the bridge, and were new and perfect wires, and the insulating used thereon was in perfect order and condition. It is further alleged that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to step over the wires in crossing the bridge, but that he should have passed under them, either by creeping along on top of the lateral braces or by crossing on the strut brace at the south end of the bridge which was about 4½ feet below the wires. The reply put in issue the material allegations of the answer, and, a trial resulting in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant appeals, alleging as error: First, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that the court erred in overruling its motion for a nonsuit; and, third, that the court erred in the giving and refusal of certain instructions to the jury.

Messrs. Frederick V. Holman, Richard Williams, and E. B. Williams, for appellant:

The amended complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Hill's (Or.) Code, §§ 369-371; Carlson v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 450; Belding v. Black Hills & Ft. P. R. Co. 3 S. D. 369; Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 84 Mich. 539; Charlebois v. Gogebic & M. R. Co. 91 Mich. 59; Bancroft v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 11 Allen, 84; Kearney v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 9 Cush. 108; Corcoran v. Boston & A. R. Co. 183 Mass. 507; Riley v. Connecticut River R. Co. 135 Mass. 292; Mulchahey v. Washburn Car Wheel Co. 145 Mass. 281; Maher v. Boston & A. R. Co. 158 Mass. 36; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Pendergrass, 69 Miss. 425.

The circuit court erred in denying appellant's motion for judgment of nonsuit.

Scott v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 14 Or. 211; Ford v. Umatilla County, 15 Or. 313; Northorn C. R. Co. v. Huson, 101 Pa. 1; Beck v. Vancouver R. Co. 25 Or. 32; Salem-Bedford Stone Co. v. Hobbs, 11 Ind. App. 27; Salem-Bedford Stone Co. v. O'Brien, 12 Ind. App. 217; Miner v. Connecticut River R. Co. 153 Mass. 398; Bailey, Personal Injuries Relating to Master & Servant, pp. 158-165, 168, 169, and notes; Illick v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 67 Mich. 632; Wormell v. Maine C. R. Co. 79 Me. 405; McMullan v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 13 Misc. 392; Sullivan v. Boston & A. R. Co. 156 Mass. 378; Burk v. Edison General Electric Co. 89 Hun, 498; Hector v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 558, 25 L. R. A. 554; Lothrop v. Fitchburg R. Co. 150 Mass. 423; Flood v. Western U. Tele. Co. 131 N. Y. 603.

The circuit court erred in refusing to give the instructions to the jury requested by the appellant.

Croswell, Electricity, § 234; Carlson v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 450; Belding v. Black Hills & Ft. P. R. Co. 3 S. D. 369; Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 84 Mich. 539.

The circuit court erred in giving instructions to jury which were excepted to by appellant.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 402, 403, 468, and cases cited; Croswell, Electricity, § 234; City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery, 61 Ark. 381, 31 L. R. A. 570; Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson, 21 Colo. 371, 31 L. R. A. 566; Ahern v. Oregon Teleph. Co. 24 Or. 276, 22 L. R. A. 635; McMullan v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 13 Misc. 392.

Messrs. Reed & Hogue and W. W. Thayer, for respondent:

The amended complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The allegation that appellant's electric current caused the "instant death" of the decedent does not defeat the right of the administrator to recover the damage the estate has suffered because of such death.

Hill's Annotated Laws of Oregon, § 371, is not a survival statute, but gives a new right of action unknown to the common law for the damages resulting from the death.

Hill's (Or.) Anno. Laws, §§ 34, 39, 369-371; Putnam v. Southern P. Co. 21 Or. 230; Wellman v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 40 L. R. A.

21 Or. 530; Carlson v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 450; The Oregon, 73 Fed. Rep. 846; Holland v. Brown, 35 Fed. Rep. 43; Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510; Martin v. Missouri P. R. Co. 58 Kan. 475; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Bennett, 5 Kan. App. 231; Kureka v. Merrifield, 53 Kan. 794; McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742; Burns v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 113 Ind. 169; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Stout, 58 Ind. 143; Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 632; Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294; Weber v. Third Ave. R. Co. 12 App. Div. 512; Smith v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 15 Misc. 158; Littlewood v. New York, 89 N. Y. 24, 42 Am. Rep. 371; Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465; Matz v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 85 Fed. Rep. 180; Mason v. Union P. R. Co. 77 Utah, 77; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain, 98 Ky. 700, 34 L. R. A. 788; Givens v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 89 Ky. 231; The City of Norwalk, 55 Fed. Rep. 98; Nestle v. Northern P. R. Co. 56 Fed. Rep. 261; 2 Thomp. Neg. pp. 1295-1309; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, Appendix.

In the states whose statutes are similar to Lord Campbell's act, the action for death by wrongful act has never been defeated because the death was instantaneous.

Brown v. Buffalo & S. L. R. Co. 22 N. Y. 191; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kindred, 57 Tex. 491; Reed v. Northeastern R. Co. 37 S. C. 42; Bones v. Boston, 155 Mass. 344, 15 L. R. A. 865; Kearney v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 9 Cush. 108; Matz v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 85 Fed. Rep. 180; Boutiller v. The Milwaukee, 1 Minn. 97; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain, 98 Ky. 700, 34 L. R. A. 788; Givens v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 89 Ky. 231; Roach v. Consolidated Imperial Min. Co. 7 Sawy. 224, 7 Fed. Rep. 698; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 73.

The Oregon statute is based upon the same principles, and is designed to serve the same ends, as statutes similar to Lord Campbell's act.

Putnam v. Southern P. Co. 21 Or. 230 The Oregon, 73 Fed. Rep. 846.

Under statutes which are properly held to be survival statutes, damages have been held recoverable in the following cases, though the death and the injury were simultaneous:

Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Daughtry, 88 Tenn. 721; Haley v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 7 Baxt. 241; Fowlkes v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 9 Heisk. 829; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Prince, 2 Heisk. 580; Worden v. Humeston & S. R. Co. 72 Iowa, 201; Connors v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 490; Murphy v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 30 Conn. 184; Hamilton v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. Co. 42 La. Ann. 824; Cheatham v. Red River Line, 56 Fed. Rep. 248; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 75.

The complaint does not show contributory negligence on the part of the deceased.

Johnston v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 23 Or. 94.

The allegation of damage was sufficient. Nicolai v. Krimbel, 29 Or. 76; Miller v. Hirschberg, 27 Or. 522; Wellman v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 530; Carlson v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co.

21 Or. 450; Putnam v. Southern P. Co. 21 Or. 230; McKay v. Muagrove, 15 Or. 162; Willer v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 15 Or. 158; Aiken v. Coolidge, 12 Or. 244; Davidson v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 11 Or. 186; Houghton v. Beck, 9 Or. 325; Ladd v. Foster, 81 Fed. Rep. 827; Holmes v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 6 Sawy. 262, 5 Fed. Rep. 75; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 109; District of Columbia v. Wilcoz, 4 App. D. C. 80.

The complaint sufficiently shows that deceased could have maintained an action against appellant had he lived.

Reed v. Northeastern R. Co. 37 S. C. 42; Gurney v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 37 N. Y. S. R. 155; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, §§ 63, 65, 181.

The complaint need not allege the existence of any heirs, legatees, or creditors of deceased, nor of any indebtedness against his estate.

Hill's (Or.) Anno. Laws, §§ 371, 776, ¶¶ 28, 3099; Wellman v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 580; East Tennessee Teleph. Co. v. Simms, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 761; Budd v. Meriden Electric R. Co. 69 Conn. 272; Harvey v. Thornton, 14 Ill. 217; Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Bradford, 86 Ala. 574; Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Waller, 48 Ala. 459; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Noell, 32 Gratt. 394; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wightman, 29 Gratt. 481, 26 Am. Rep. 884; Warner v. Western N. C. R. Co. 94 N. C. 250; Harper v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 36 Fed. Rep. 102; Roach v. Consolidated Imperial Min. Co. 7 Sawy. 224, 7 Fed. Rep. 698; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, §§ 56, 81.

The question of contributory negligence, as well as that of negligence, is one of fact for the jury if there be any dispute as to the facts; or, if there be no dispute as to the facts, but there may reasonably be a difference of opinion as to the inferences and conclusions deducible therefrom, it is the province of the jury to determine the question.

Connell v. McLoughlin, 28 Or. 230; Hedin v. Suburban R. Co. 26 Or. 155; Gardner v. Michigan C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 849, 87 L. ed. 1107; Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 339, 43 L. ed. 491; Pyle v. Clark, 49 U. S. App. 360, 79 Fed. Rep. 744, 25 C. C. A. 190; Union P. R. Co. v. Novak, 15 U. S. App. 400, 61 Fed. Rep. 573, 9 C. C. A. 629; Sullivan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 154 Mass. 527; Cherokee & P. Coal & Min. Co. v. Britton, 8 Kan. App. 292; Croswell, Electricity, § 284.

A nonsuit is properly refused unless plaintiff's evidence, taken in its most favorable light, would not authorize the jury to find a verdict in his favor. Every intendment, and every fair and legitimate inference which can arise from the evidence, must be made in favor of the plaintiff.

Wallace v. Suburban R. Co. 26 Or. 174, 25 L. R. A. 663; Hedin v. Suburban R. Co. 26 Or. 155; Vanbeber v. Plunkett, 26 Or. 562, 27 L. R. A. 811; Brown v. Oregon Lumber Co. 24 Or. 315; Herbert v. Dufur, 23 Or. 462; Salomon v. Cress, 23 Or. 177; Great Northern R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 44 U. S. App. 189, 70 Fed. Rep. 669, 17 C. C. A. 830.

The jury viewed the bridge and saw the wires in question, and their situation, and that 40 L. R. A.

of the bridge. What they saw there had an important bearing on the question of contributory negligence, and this is entitled to consideration on the question of the propriety of refusing a nonsuit.

Jones, Ev. § 412; Tully v. Fitchburg R. Co. 184 Mass. 499.

Courts incline to greater liberality in cases of death by wrongful act in allowing the questions of the negligence of the defendant, and of the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, to go to the jury upon slight evidence.

Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 189; Maguire v. Fitchburg R. Co. 146 Mass. 879; McDermott v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co. (Iowa) 47 N. W. 1087; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 Ill. 272.

Deceased had a right to assume that the place to which he was sent was safe.

Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 692, 16 L. R. A. 43; Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 588, 25 L. R. A. 552; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Kelly, (Tex. Civ. App.) 84 S. W. 140; Newark Electric Light & P. Co. v. Garden, 39 U. S. App. 416, 78 Fed. Rep. 74, 23 C. C. A. 649; Johnston v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 23 Or. 94; Consolidated Kansas City Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Tinchert, 5 Kan. App. 130; Cherokee & P. Coal & Min. Co. v. Britton, 3 Kan. App. 292; Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964, 7 L. R. A. 172, and note; Bunker Hill & S. Min. & O. Co. v. Oberder, 48 U. S. App. 339, 79 Fed. Rep. 726, 25 C. C. A. 171; Croswell, Electricity, § 266.

As between deceased and appellant, deceased assumed those risks only to which, having actual knowledge thereof, he voluntarily and unnecessarily exposed himself. He was under no duty toward appellant, and was under no obligation or duty to know or ascertain the danger in the wires.

Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 588, 25 L. R. A. 552; Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 692, 16 L. R. A. 43; Giraudi v. Electric Improv. Co. 107 Cal. 120, 28 L. R. A. 596; Newark Electric Light & P. Co. v. Garden, 39 U. S. App. 416, 78 Fed. Rep. 74, 87 L. R. A. 725, 23 C. C. A. 649; Croswell, Law of Electricity, §§ 285, 256.

Deceased was not a trespasser in working on the bridge and handling appellant's wires, nor even a licensee, but was an employee of the bridge owner, by whose license appellant's wires were placed and maintained on the bridge. He was rightfully there, engaged in a lawful occupation, and appellant owed him the duty of so conducting its dangerous business that he might not be injured.

Ennis v. Gray, 87 Hun. 355; Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. 164 Mass. 492, 82 L. R. A. 400; Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 588, 25 L. R. A. 552; Newark Electric Light & P. Co. v. Garden, 39 U. S. App. 416, 78 Fed. Rep. 74, 37 L. R. A. 725, 23 C. C. A. 649.

The doctrine of fellow servant can be invoked only by the common master, and has no application in this case.

Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. v. Chambers, 32 U. S. App. 253, 68 Fed. Rep. 148, 15 C. C. A. 327, and cases cited.

The concurrent negligence of a third person is no defense in personal injury or death cases, and this is true whether the defendant and the third person were acting together or severally, or whether the two negligent acts were joint or separate and distinct.

United Electric R. Co. v. Shelton, 89 Tenn. 423; Cartersville v. Cook, 129 Ill. 152, 4 L. R. A. 721; Bunting v. Hogsett, 139 Pa. 363, 12 L. R. A. 268; Masterson v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 247, 38 Am. Rep. 510; Barrett v. Third Ave. R. Co. 45 N. Y. 628; Colegrove v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 20 N. Y. 492, 75 Am. Dec. 418; Griffin v. Boston & A. R. Co. 148 Mass. 143, 1 L. R. A. 698; Lake v. Milliken, 63 Me. 240, 16 Am. Rep. 456; Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11; Kellow v. Central Iowa R. Co. 68 Iowa, 470, 56 Am. Rep. 858; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Spencer, 98 Ind. 186; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Friel, 39 U. S. App. 451, 77 Fed. Rep. 127, 23 C. C. A. 77; Brown v. Cox Bros. 75 Fed. Rep. 689; Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. v. Chambers, 32 U. S. App. 253, 68 Fed. Rep. 148, 15 C. C. A. 327.

The jury was properly instructed as to the degree of care required of appellant.

Ahern v. Oregon Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 24 Or. 276, 22 L. R. A. 635; McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445; Giraudi v. Electric Improv. Co. 107 Cal. 120, 28 L. R. A. 596; Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 692, 16 L. R. A. 43; Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 583, 25 L. R. A. 552; Searle v. Kanawha & O. R. Co. 32 W. Va. 370; Brown v. Seattle City R. Co. 16 Wash. 465; Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson, 21 Colo. 371, 31 L. R. A. 566, and note; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Horst, 98 U. S. 291, 23 L. ed. 898; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Davidson, 46 U. S. App. 300, 76 Fed. Rep. 517, 22 C. C. A. 806; Croswell, Electricity, §§ 284, 256; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1, note 1; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Phillips, 49 Ill. 284; Kelly v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 70 Mo. 604; McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric Light Co. 18 Ky. L. Rep. 693, 34 L. R. A. 812; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 608; Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 211, 26 L. R. A. 810; Cherokee & P. Coal & Min. Co. v. Britton, 3 Kan. App. 292.

Bean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is claimed at the outset that the action cannot be maintained, because the statute under which it is brought is a survival statute, and, as the complaint alleges and the evidence shows, that the death of plaintiff's intestate was instantaneous. There was no interval of time between the injury and the death within which the deceased could have brought an action for the injury, and therefore there was no right of action to survive to his personal representatives. The statute provides that a cause of action arising out of an injury to the person dies with the person, except that, "when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another, the personal representatives of the former may maintain an action at law therefor against the latter, if the former might have maintained an action, had he lived, against the latter, for an injury done by the same act or omission. Such action shall be commenced within two years after the death, and the damages therein shall not exceed $5,000, and the amount recovered, if any, shall be administered as other personal property of the deceased person." Hill's Anno. Code, §§ 369, 371. It is agreed that at common law there was no remedy by way of a civil action for the death of a human being, and that a cause of action arising out of an injury to the person died with the person. But the practical impossibility of securing the punishment of mere carelessness by means of a criminal action induced the British Parliament in 1846 to pass what is known as "Lord Campbell's Act," by which a civil remedy is given to the personal representative of one whose death is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another for the benefit of the widow, husband, parent, or child of such person. This statute has been in substance, in one form or another, incorporated into the legislation of most of the states of the Union, and the holding is quite universal that it creates a new right of action for the wrongful death, which may be maintained whether it was instantaneous or consequential. 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 189; Cooley, Torts, p. 264; and Seward v. The Vera Cruz, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 59. But the contention for the defendant is that the statute of this state, unlike Lord Campbell's act and the statutes modeled after it, does not create a new right of action for the death, but is a survival statute under which the personal representatives of a deceased person may bring an action to recover damages for the injury which caused the death in cases where the party injured was entitled to bring such action, but died before exercising such right; and in support of this view we are referred to Belding v. Black Hills & Ft. P. R. Co. 3 S. D. 369; Kearney v. Electric & W. R. Corp. 9 Cush. 108; Bancroft v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 11 Allen, 34; Corcoran v. Boston & A. R. Co. 133 Mass. 507; Riley v. Connecticut River R. Co. 135 Mass. 292; Mutcaley v. Washburn Car Wheel Co. 145 Mass. 281; Maher v. Boston & A. R. Co. 158 Mass. 36; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Pendergrass, 69 Miss. 425.

But the statutes under which these decisions were made are essentially different from ours. The statute of South Dakota provides (Comp. Laws, § 5498) that, if the life of any person not in the employment of a railroad company shall be lost by reason of the negligence or carelessness of the proprietor or proprietors of any railroad, his personal representatives may institute suit to recover damages in the same manner that the person might have done for any injury where death did not ensue; and (§ 5499) that, if the life of any person is lost or destroyed by the neglect, carelessness, etc., of another person, company, or corporation, etc., the widow, heir, or personal representative of the deceased shall have the right to sue and recover damages for the death of such person; and the court held, in the case referred to, that under these provisions of the law a personal representative could not recover for the loss of the life of his intestate, but that such right was conferred exclusively upon the widow or heir, and the personal representative could only recover such damages as the deceased had suffered up to the time of his death. For that reason no action could be maintained where the death was instantaneous. The supreme court of Kentucky, however, in Givens v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 89 Ky. 231, reached a different conclusion under a similar statute. The statute under which the Massachusetts decisions were made provides that "the action of trespass on the case, for damages to the person, shall hereafter survive, so that in the event of the death of any person entitled to bring such action, or liable thereto, the same may be prosecuted or defended by or against his executor or administrator, in the same manner as if he were living" (Stat. 1842, chap. 89, § 1); and, as Mr. Chief Justice Shaw says in Kearney v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 9 Cush. 108, "supposes the party deceased to have been once entitled to bring an action for the injury, and either to have commenced the action and subsequently died, or, being entitled to bring it, to have died before exercising that right." It is therefore held in that state, under what Judge Cooley characterizes (Cooley, Torts, p. 264) as "a somewhat nice and technical construction of the statute," that the action will not lie when the death is instantaneous, but, if there is the slightest interval between the accident and the death, it can be maintained; and that the right does not depend upon intelligence, consciousness, or mental capacity of any kind on the part of the deceased after he is injured and before his death. The Mississippi statute declares that "executors, administrators, and collectors shall have full power and authority to commence and prosecute any personal action whatever, at law or in equity, which the testator or intestate might have commenced and prosecuted," and that "executors and administrators shall have an action for any trespass done to the person . . . of their testator or intestate against the trespasser, and recover damages in like manner as the testator or intestate would have had if living, and the money so recovered shall be assets and accounted for as such." Code, §§ 2078, 2079. The court held that the purpose of the statute is "to save to personal representatives the right to begin and carry on such personal actions as the deceased might have begun and carried on if he had not died," and that the personal representative can have no standing in court where the death is simultaneous with the injury, but in such cases all recoverable damages must be sought by the kindred who have sustained the loss. It thus appears that the statutes construed by the decisions relied upon by the defendant were, as interpreted by the courts, in each instance designed to prevent a cause of action accruing to the deceased in his lifetime for an injury to his person from being defeated by his subsequent death, and not to create a new cause of action for the death. But such is manifestly not the purpose or effect of our statute. It provides that when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another, his personal representative may maintain an action therefor,—that is, for the death,—if the deceased might have maintained an action had he lived for the injury which caused the death. The language of the statute is plain, and its meaning obvious. It clearly creates a new right of action in favor of the personal representative for the death itself, and not an action founded on survivorship, or on any cause of action in favor of the deceased. The death, and not the injury from which the death results, is the cause of action under the statute, and the personal representatives are entitled to recover damages for the wrongful taking away of the life itself; and therefore it makes no difference whether the injured party was killed instantly or not. Nor does it matter that the damages recovered become assets of the estate, to be administered upon as other personal property of the deceased, and do not go to certain designated persons as provided in Lord Campbell's act, and in many states of this country. This is but a statutory direction as to the disposition to be made of the damages to be recovered, and does not determine the question as to whether the statute creates a new right of action or is only a survival statute. In the absence of the statute, no right of action for the death exists in favor of any person, and it was clearly competent for the legislature, in creating this new right, to make such provision as to the disposition of the damages recovered thereunder as it might see proper.

The statutes of the various states which have in substance adopted Lord Campbell's act differ widely in this respect, and it has never been suggested, so far as we are aware, that for this reason they do not give a cause of action for the death. And actions brought under § 371 have repeatedly been before this court in one form or another, and it has always been assumed that the action was for the death, and that it made no difference, either in the right to maintain it or in the amount recovered, whether the deceased was killed instantly or not. Carlson v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 450. And the same construction has been put upon the statute by the Federal courts. In The Oregon, 73 Fed. Rep. 846, Mr. Justice Bellinger, speaking of the effect of § 371, says: "The Oregon statute, unlike that of Louisiana, does not provide that causes of damage to another shall survive in case of death. It is substantially like Lord Campbell's act; and in the case of Seward v. The Vera Cruz, L. R. 10 App. Cas. 59, the view held was (Lord Blackburn concurring), not that the cause of action survived, but that 'a totally new action is given against the person who would have been responsible to the deceased if the deceased had lived; an action which, as is pointed out in Pym v. Great Northern R. Co. 4 Best & S. 896, is new in its species, new in its quality, new in its principle, in every way new, and which can only be brought if there is any person answering the description of the widow, parent, or child, who, under such circumstances, suffers pecuniary loss by the death.' In the case of Pym v. Great Northern R. Co. cited in the foregoing quotation, it was argued in behalf of the defendant that the action maintainable under Lord Campbell's act by the personal representatives of a deceased person is 'a mere continuance of that which would have accrued to the deceased if he had lived;' but Erle, Ch. J., said: 'The statute, as appears to me, gives to the personal representatives a cause of action beyond that which the deceased would have if he had survived, and based on different principles.' 4 Best & S. 403. And so in The City of Norwalk [55 Fed. Rep. 98], the court considers the right 'a new right,' which is 'none the less maritime because based upon state legislation, where the subject-matter is maritime.'" And in Holland v. Brown, 35 Fed. Rep. 43, Mr. Justice Deady said, concerning the same statute: "The action given by the statute is for the death simply. This includes, of course, all such losses to his estate, or creditors, and next of kin to whom it belongs, and for whose benefit the action is allowed, as may be fairly implied from the cessation of his life. The fact on which the damages are computed is death and its consequences, and not its antecedents or cause." See also Lung Chung v. Northern P. R. Co. 10 Sawy. 17, 19 Fed. Rep. 254, and Ladd v. Foster, 12 Sawy. 547, 31 Fed. Rep. 827. The statutes of Kansas and Indiana are identical with ours, except that damages are allowed to the extent of $10,000, and must inure to the exclusive benefit of the widow and children, if any, or next of kin. Mr. Justice Brewer, in Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510, referring to the Kansas statute, says it "gives a new right of action—one not existing before; an action which is not founded on survivorship; an action which takes no account of the wrong done to the decedent, but one which gives to the widow or next of kin damages which have been sustained by reason of the wrongful taking away of the life of the decedent. It makes no difference whether the injured party was killed instantly or lived months; whether he suffered lingering pain or not; whether or not he was put to any expense for medical attendance and nursing. None of these matters are to be considered in an action under § 422; and the single question is, How much has the wrongful taking away of his life injured his widow or next of kin? It is an action to recover damages for the death, and in no sense a survival of an action which accrued to the decedent before his death." And to the same effect, see Martin v. Missouri P. R. Co. 58 Kan. 475; Eureka v. Merrifield, 53 Kan. 794; McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Bennett, 5 Kan. App. 281.

In Indiana it has been held that, while the statute does not in terms "revive the common-law right of action for personal injury nor make it survive the death of the injured person," it does "create a new right in favor and for the benefit of the next of kin or heirs of the person whose death has been wrongfully caused." Burns v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 113 Ind. 169. The questions determined in the adjudged cases on the right of the personal representatives of one whose death was caused by the wrongful act or omission of another to maintain an action for damages against the latter arose under such dissimilar statutes that the decisions afford but little light upon the interpretation of any particular statute at variance with the one under consideration in the given case, and hence it is useless to attempt any further examination of them at this time. However, the following authorities are more or less in point in the present discussion, and in the main tend to support our conclusion as to the proper construction of the statute: Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 189; Cooley, Torts, p. 264; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1283; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 78; Brown v. Buffalo & S. L. R. Co. 22 N. Y. 191; Roach v. Consolidated Imperial Min. Co. 7 Sawy. 224, 7 Fed. Rep. 693; Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465; Murphy v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 30 Conn. 184; Givens v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 89 Ky. 281; Conners v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 490, 60 Am. Rep. 814; Worden v. Humeston & S. R. Co. 72 Iowa, 201; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Prince, 2 Heisk. 580.

It is next claimed that the complaint is defective because it does not show that the deceased left surviving him any heirs, legatees, next of kin, or creditors. Under the provisions of Lord Campbell's act, and statutes which, like it, give a right of action for the death of a person caused by the wrongful act of another for the benefit of certain designated relatives, no action can be maintained at all unless the deceased left at least one surviving relative of the class specified, and the complaint must necessarily show that fact. 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 185; Stewart v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 103 Ind. 44. In such case the executor or administrator, in prosecuting the action, is a mere nominal party, who sues for the benefit of the real party in interest; and such damages as he may recover do not go to the estate of the deceased, nor belong to him in his representative capacity, but to the person for whose benefit the right of action is given by the statute. Blake v. Midland R. Co. 19 Q. B. 93; Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 189. The theory is that those entitled to the benefit of the statute have a pecuniary interest in the life of the deceased, and the recovery is to compensate them for the pecuniary loss they have sustained. In short, a new right of action is created for the benefit of certain designated persons, and consequently can be maintained only when the deceased left surviving him someone entitled to its benefit. Thus, where a statute gives a right of action for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, a husband, not being the next of kin to his wife, is not within its terms, and an action cannot be maintained if the deceased leave a husband only. Lucas v. New York C. R. Co. 21 Barb. 245; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Dixon, 42 Ga. 327. So, also, where the statute is for the benefit of the widow and children, no recovery can be had when the deceased left no widow or children. Com. v. Boston & A. R. Co. 121 Mass. 36. But it will be observed that the right of action created by our statute is not for the benefit of any particular person, but the damages recovered become assets of the estate, to be applied by the administrator to the payment of debts, or distributed as the exigencies of the estate and the laws governing the distribution of personal property may direct. Under Lord Campbell's act, and similar statutes, the damages recovered belong to the designated beneficiary, and are measured by the value of the life taken to the particular person entitled to the benefit of the statute, while under our statute they belong to the estate, and are coextensive with the value of the life lost, without regard to its value to any particular person. In the one case the object of the action is to recover the pecuniary loss sustained by the designated relatives, and in the other the value of the life lost, measured, as near as can be, by the earning capacity, thriftiness, and probable length of life of the deceased, and the consequent amount of probable accumulations during the expectancy of such life. Carlson v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 450.

It follows, therefore, that, so far as the right to maintain the action is concerned, it is immaterial whether the deceased left surviving him any relatives or creditors whatever. The right of action is given by the statute to the administrator or executor in his representative capacity, and is in the nature of an asset of the estate. The heirs, creditors, or distributees have no interest in the recovery on account of any right of action for the pecuniary injury sustained by them, but only by virtue of being creditors or of kinship; and, if the expense of the administration and debts of the deceased equal or exceed the assets, including the amount of the recovery, the next of kin would receive no benefit whatever from the right of action. It is ingeniously argued, however, that an estate of a deceased person can in no way be damaged by his death, and this is probably true if the word "estate" is to be taken in the technical sense of meaning the property left by him. But it is not so used when speaking of the measure of damages for the wrongful death of a person. It is thus used as a convenient term to distinguish the rule as to the measure of damages under our statute from the one prevailing under statutes similar to Lord Campbell's act, and in which the recovery is for the benefit of some designated individual.

This brings us to the important question whether the defendant's motion for a nonsuit should have been sustained. It is undisputed that the wires which caused the death of plaintiff's intestate were placed by the defendant in a position where they would probably be exposed to contact by persons working on the bridge, although it knew that it would be necessary to repair the structure from time to time; and it admits and alleges that it is not practicable, in the present knowledge of the science of electricity, to insulate wires so as to make them safe, and not dangerous to persons coming in contact with them when charged with the high voltage of electricity carried over the wires in question. This is, in our opinion, sufficient to make out a prima facie case of negligence, because it tends to support the main ground of recovery relied on by the plaintiff, viz., that, although the defendant knew it would be necessary from time to time for the railway company to send men on top of the bridge to make needed repairs, it placed its wires to be used in the transmission of such a high voltage of electricity as inevitably to cause the instant death of any person coming in contact with two of them at the same time in such a position that it was impracticable, if not impossible, to make such repairs without doing so.

It is contended, however, that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence (1) in going on top of the bridge to work without ascertaining from the defendant company, or 40 L. R. A.

someone having knowledge on the subject, whether it would be safe to come in contact with the defendant's wires; and (2) in attempting at the time of the accident to cross from one side of the bridge to the other by walking on the top lateral braces and stepping over the wires, rather than crossing on the end strut brace and under the wires. But both of these contentions proceed on the theory that he was chargeable with knowledge of the fact that the wires were dangerous, and, having voluntarily exposed himself to the risk of contact therewith, must take the consequences of his own conduct. And, indeed, this is the underlying question on this branch of the case. The deceased was unquestionably guilty of such negligence as will preclude a recovery if he is to be charged with knowledge that the defendant's wires, although apparently harmless, were in fact dangerous; for he could have avoided coming in contact with them. But, on the other hand, it cannot be ruled, as matter of law, that he was negligent in going on the bridge to work or in crossing on the top lateral braces, if the defendant owed to him the duty of exercising reasonable care to prevent injury to him from contact with its wires while at his work. There is evidence tending to show that he acted with due care and caution, and did not heedlessly or recklessly expose himself to contact with the wires. It was only after they had been examined, and their apparent safety ascertained, that he and his fellow workmen ventured to work at a place where they would probably or necessarily come in contact with the wires; and there is evidence to the effect that the usual and customary way for men employed in the construction or repair of a bridge of the character in question to cross from one top chord to the other is by walking on one of the top lateral braces. Unless, therefore, the case should have been withdrawn from the jury on the ground that the deceased was bound, at his peril, to ascertain whether the wires were in fact dangerous before working at a place on the bridge where he would be likely to come in contact with them, there was no error in denying the motion for nonsuit, and submitting the issue of negligence as respects the defendant and plaintiff to the jury; and we do not think any such doctrine as the one suggested can be maintained either upon reason or authority. It is not claimed that the deceased had any more knowledge of electricity or its effects than such as is possessed by persons of average intelligence. He knew that there is such a force carried by wires and used in driving cars and lighting streets and houses, and that the wires in question were used for that purpose; but he supposed, as is the common understanding, that the insulating material with which such wires are covered is placed there for the purpose and with the result of making them safe. He had no knowledge of the fact, as this record discloses, that wires are used for the transmission of electricity, which, on account of the high voltage carried, cannot be insulated at any reasonable cost so as to make them safe, and that the insulating material sometimes used thereon affords no protection from injury. Nothing can, therefore, be claimed in this case on account of any special knowledge of electricity or its effect possessed by the deceased; and there is no pretense that he knew the wires were in fact dangerous, and, as he was not the agent or servant of the defendant company, he was not, in our opinion, chargeable with such knowledge, nor did he assume any risk on account of the wires unless he knew the danger and voluntarily exposed himself to it. He was not a trespasser or licensee bound to take the premises in the condition in which he found them, but the servant of the railway company, lawfully on the bridge, engaged in an employment which, according to the testimony, necessarily required him to come in contact with the wires of the defendant company. These wires were visible, insulated, and to all appearances perfectly harmless. There was nothing in their appearance to warn the deceased of the great force being carried over them, or that there was any danger in coming in contact with them. The danger was a hidden and secret one, and the insulation of the wires deceptive. The familiar rule that one who deliberately goes into a place of known or apparent danger and is injured must take the consequences of his hardihood can have no application here, because there was in fact no apparent danger, but, on the contrary, so far as the deceased—a nonexpert—could ascertain from an examination, the wires were entirely safe, and in perfect condition. He had a right therefore, to believe that the place was safe, and to assume that the defendant company had exercised due care and caution to prevent injury to him, and had not placed on the bridge, in such a position that he would likely come in contact with them, wires which it knew to be dangerous. It was using the bridge by permission of the railway company for the support of wires used in the transmission of a highly dangerous, subtle, and invisible force, and was, therefore, chargeable with the duty of placing and keeping them, as far as practicable, in a condition to avoid injuring the servants of the railway company while at their work. Its duties and responsibilities in this respect are similar to those of an electric company which, by permission of the owner, places its wires over the roof, or attached to a house or building; and in such case the rule is quite universal that the company is liable to the owner and his servants for an injury received through its negligence by contact with such wires when making needed repairs or improvements to the building, if the injured party is in the exercise of due care and caution at the time.

The question respecting the care required of electric companies under such circumstances first came before the courts in the case of Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. (decided in 1892) 44 La. Ann. 692, 16 L. R. A. 43. In that case the plaintiff's intestate—a tinsmith engaged to assist in repairing the roof—was killed while at his work by coming in contact with the wires of the defendant company, placed 2 feet 4 inches above the roof. The wires were insulated, and to all appearances safe, but there was a defect in the insulation, which caused his death while he was either attempting to step over or go under the wires, in trying to reach the gutter. The court held, after mature deliberation, that the company was responsible. And although there was involved in the case a failure to comply with a municipal ordinance requiring electric light companies to have the splices of their wires perfectly insulated, it was considered that this ordinance added nothing to the duty or liability of the company. The court says, in speaking upon this matter, that "it [the wire] passed over a roof to which people in adjoining rooms had access, and where, in the course of time, mechanics must go to make repairs, or laborers to sweep off or clean the roof. It was the duty of the company, independent of any statutory regulation, to see that their lines were safe for those who, by their occupation, were brought in close proximity to them." And in answer to the objection that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence it said: "The deceased, Clements, was lawfully on the gallery roof. He was engaged in a service that necessarily required him to run the risk of coming in contact with the defendant's wires, either by stepping over them or going under them. It is probable that the latter mode was the most convenient, and there is no evidence that in so doing he incurred any greater risk. The wires were visible, and to all appearances were safe. The great force that was being carried over the wire gave no evidence of its existence. There was no means for a man of ordinary education to distinguish whether the wire was dead or alive. It had all the appearance of having been properly insulated. From this fact there was an invitation or inducement held out to Clements to risk the consequences of contact. He had a right to believe it was safe, and that the company had complied with its duties specified by law. He was required to look for patent, and not latent, defects. Had he known of the defective insulation and put himself in contact with the wire he would have assumed the risk. The defect was hidden, and the insulation wrapping was deceptive. It is certain, had it been properly wrapped, Clements would not have been killed. His death is conclusive proof of the defect of insulation and the negligence of the defendant. He exercised reasonable care in going under the wire in the performance of his duty, as he had a right to believe, from external appearances, that the wire was safe. His action was such as not to tend to expose himself directly to the danger which resulted in the injury. In fact, there was no apparent danger." So, also, in Giraudi v. Electric Improv. Co. 107 Cal. 120, 28 L. R. A. 596, the plaintiff was sent on top of a building by the owner to adjust a sign which was about to be blown down by the wind, and, coming in contact with an electric light wire, placed along and near the roof, was injured and it was held that the failure of defendant to place its wires a sufficient distance above the roof to enable persons lawfully thereon to pass under them was sufficient proof of negligence to justify the verdict, and that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence by going on the roof. The court says: "Defendant was using a dangerous force, and one not generally understood. It was required to use very great care to prevent injury to person or property. It would have been comparatively inexpensive to raise the wires so high above the roof that those having occasion to go there would not come in contact with them. Not to do so was sufficient proof of negligence to justify the verdict. If there was any excuse for not so locating the wires, it is on the claim that they were so covered that there was no danger in coming in contact with them. The accident itself proves that this was not sufficient, res ipsa loquitur. The point most insisted upon here is that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; that he knew, or ought to have known, of the location of the wires, and should have taken care to avoid them. It is not a case where the doctrine of negligent ignorance can apply. Plaintiff owed defendant no duty, and no part of his employment required him to know, or gave him opportunity to know. Unless it can be held that he did in fact know, there was no evidence which even tended to show negligence on his part."

And again, in Ennis v. Gray, 87 Hun, 355, the plaintiff, a roofer, employed by the owner of a building, was injured while at his work by coming in contact with an electric-light wire of the defendant, which was attached to the building, and which the evidence tended to show was placed without proper safeguards and improperly insulated, and the court held that the issue as to the defendant's negligence and the contributory negligence of the plaintiff was for the jury. In this case the defendant tried to escape liability by claiming that there was no contractual relation or other privity between it and the plaintiff which required it to protect him while at work for the owner of the building, and while on his premises, and that as to him the construction and maintenance of electric apparatus were res inter alios. But the court held that the defendant was engaged in the business of supplying electricity for lighting purposes, and considering the high voltage which it was necessary to carry over its wires, the business was of a character highly dangerous and likely to result in injury to others unless conducted with care and skill; and therefore, outside of any contractual relation, the law imposed the duty upon defendant of using the necessary skill and prudence to prevent injury to persons coming in contact with its wires, not only as regards the public generally, but also with respect to any individual engaged in a lawful occupation in a place where he was entitled to be. So, also, in McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric Light Co. 18 Ky. L. Rep. 693, 34 L. R. A. 812, a person engaged in painting a building was injured by coming in contact with an imperfectly insulated electric wire on the side of the building, while climbing out of a window upon the cornice, and in an action against the electric company to recover damages for the injury it was held that the defendant was bound to exercise the utmost care to keep the insulation of its wires perfect at a place where people had a right to go for work, business, or pleasure, although very great care may be sufficient for wires at other places; that an apparently properly insulated wire is an invitation or inducement to such person to risk the consequence of contact with it; that the fact that the insulation of such wires is expensive or inconvenient is no excuse for failure to make such insulation perfect at places where people have a right to go; and that the plaintiff in the action was not guilty of contributory negligence in coming in contact with the wires unless in so doing he failed to exercise the degree of care which an ordinarily careful and prudent person usually exercises under similar circumstances, and the question whether he exercised such care was for the jury and not the court. A like principle was applied in Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 583, 23 L. R. A. 552. The plaintiff was employed in the fire-alarm system of the city of Boston. The city used for the lines of its system structures erected by the defendant electric company for the support of its electric wires. While the plaintiff was in the performance of its duties and descending one of such structures, the pliers in his belt caught in a wire belonging to the defendant, and in reaching around to clear them he received injury by the contact of his hand with a wire of the defendant not properly insulated; and it was held in an action against the company for damages, that the defendant's negligence in leaving the joints of its wires without insulation at such place, and the question whether the plaintiff was in the exercise of due care, should have been submitted to the jury. So, also, in Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. 164 Mass. 492, 32 L. R. A. 400, a tinsmith, while engaged in placing an iron conductor on a building, was injured by receiving a shock from an electric-light wire running along the side of the building, about 12 feet from the ground, by reason of the conductor which he was handling coming in contact with a place on the wire where the insulating material had been worn off, and it was held that the question of defendant's negligence and of due care on the part of plaintiff were for the jury, and that it could not be said, as a matter of law, that the condition of the wire was so apparent that the plaintiff must or ought to have seen it although the accident happened in the forenoon; and that, while an expert might consider it dangerous to touch any wire unless he knew it was a harmless one, no such degree of care could be required of the plaintiff, who was not an expert, but that the question of his want of care was for the jury. Applying the doctrine of these cases, and the underlying principles by which they are controlled, to the case in hand, it is clear that no error was committed in overruling the motion for nonsuit. It is true that in the cases referred to the actions were grounded on negligence in using improperly insulated wires, but in each instance the judgment of the court proceeds on the theory that it is a want of due care for a company handling and transmitting the highly dangerous force of electricity to use a wire known, or which reasonably ought to have been known, to be dangerous, at a place where others are lawfully entitled to be; and it is assumed in each instance that, but for the insufficient insulation, the wires would have been safe. The same principle governs here. Although the wires of the defendant company were insulated, it is admitted that such insulation was no protection whatever to persons coming in contact with them, and hence the negligence of the defendant is equally as great, if not greater, than if the danger had been from insufficient or want of insulation..

The apparently perfect insulation was calculated to deceive, and to cause one unfamiliar with the facts to suppose the wires safe. It acted as an invitation to persons at work in and among the wires to risk the consequences of contact therewith. And such was the effect in this case. But for the insulation, and the belief of safety caused thereby, it is not at all probable that the deceased would have exposed himself to the risk of a contact with the wires in question. The defendant, however, knew that the insulation afforded no protection, and yet, with knowledge of that fact, put its wires in a place where the servants of the railway company might come in contact with them while in the performance of their duties, and without giving any warning or notice of the danger whatever. Under such circumstances a jury would certainly be justified in finding that it did not exercise due care and caution in so doing. Electric companies, of course, are not bound to have perfect apparatus or perfect construction, but they are required to exercise a degree of care and prudence in the construction and maintenance of their wires commensurate with the danger; and where their wires are designed to carry a strong and powerful current of electricity, so that persons coming in contact with them are certain to be seriously injured, if not killed, the law imposes upon the company the duty of exercising the utmost care and prudence to prevent such injury; and whether such care has been exercised in a given case is ordinarily for the jury. Croswell, Electricity, § 234.

The cases cited and relied upon by the defendant are not in point in this contention. In Beck v. Vancouver R. Co. 25 Or. 82; Salem-Beafield Stone Co. v. Hobbs, 11 Ind. App. 27; Salem-Beafield Stone Co. v. O'Brien, 12 Ind. App. 217, and Flood v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 131 N. Y. 608,—the danger was open and visible, and could have been ascertained by the complainant if he had exercised his faculties. In Hector v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 558, 25 L. R. A. 554, the facts are that a lineman of a telephone and telegraph company was sent to attach a wire to a standard owned by the defendant on the roof of a building. Instead of entering this building, and going out on the roof, he went up on a building some distance away, passed over the several intervening structures until he came to the building adjoining the one on which the standard was placed. While stooping down to see how he could get from this building to the place of his destination, he came in contact with the wires of the defendant company, and was injured by reason of the insulation being worn off. The case was decided in favor of the defendant on the ground that it owed no duty to the plaintiff to maintain an effective insulation at the place where he was injured, where he was not sent to work, and where he had no right to be. The same is true of the case of the boy who was killed by coming in contact with the wire of an electric company while searching on top of a building for a lost ball. Sullivan v. Boston & A. R. Co. 156 Mass. 378. In both cases the injured party was a trespasser, and at a place where he had no right to be, and where the company was under no obligation to protect him from injury. But in the case at bar the deceased was rightfully at the place where he was injured. In McMullan v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 13 Misc. 392, the defendant company had disconnected its service wires, carrying a low current of electricity, which could not cause death or great bodily harm, from the distributing wires in the cellar, 8 feet above the ground, in order that the owner might make certain repairs, but failed to "tape" the ends of the wires, and it was held that it was not liable for an injury to a workman while engaged in making such repairs, because no reasonable person would, under the circumstances, have anticipated "that any person would have entered this cellar, mounted upon a box, and, after seeing these wires, taken hold of at least two of them at the same time, in such a manner as to make a short circuit, or bring the two wires in contact with his hand near the same point, and thus burn his hand." In Burt v. Edison General Electric Co. 89 Hun, 498, the evidence shows that the deceased deliberately chose a way of known danger to go from one part of a cellar to another, when a perfectly safe way was open to him, and the court held that he must take the consequences of his own hardihood.

It only remains to notice briefly the assignments of error based upon the giving and refusal of instructions by the trial court. The defendant requested in writing some fourteen different instructions, which were refused, except as given in substance in the general charge. All of these, except one, present different phases of the questions already considered, and therefore require no further notice. By the eighth request the court was asked to charge the jury that, if they should find for the plaintiff, they could not estimate nor give exemplary or vindictive damages nor any damages as a solatium for the grief or anguish of the surviving relatives, or the pain or suffering of the deceased. And while this instruction embodies a correct principle of law, and might, with propriety, have been given (Carlson v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 450), its refusal was not reversible error. Neither exemplary damages nor damages for the suffering of the deceased or any of his relatives were asked in the complaint, nor, so far as the record indicates, claimed at the trial. The allegations of the complaint and the proof were confined to the earning capacity, habits, and probable length of life of the deceased, and no instructions were given under which the jury could have understood that they had a right to consider any other matters in arriving at the amount of the verdict. By the instruction as given they were told, in effect, in assessing damages, if they found in favor of the plaintiff, to consider the earning capacity, habits, and probable length of life of the deceased, and thus determine what would probably have been his accumulations if he had lived the ordinary course of his life; and no question is made as to the soundness of this rule. The entire charge of the court as given seems to have been separated into paragraphs, in some instances without special reference to the context, and objections made and exceptions saved to the giving of each; and while the charge, which was given orally, is perhaps open to some criticism on account of the verbal inaccuracy of the language used, to which the attention of the trial court was not specially called at the time, it, however, in our opinion, exhibits no reversible error, but, when taken as a whole, fairly and accurately presents the law as applicable to the facts of this case. The definition of "negligence" as given is not open to the criticism made, nor did the court withdraw the question of plaintiff's intestate's contributory negligence from the jury, but told them expressly that what he had said in regard to the defendant's liability must be taken with the proviso that the plaintiff's intestate did not himself contribute by his own negligence to the injury from which he died, and then proceeded with the charge in detail on that phase of the case. The statement that the words "care" and "diligence," when used in reference to the duty of the defendant, are not absolute, but relative, terms; "that, when the danger is great, the care and vigilance to escape the consequence of danger must be proportionately great. In matters of this sort, where people are dealing with electricity (one of the most subtle, powerful, and wonderful agencies known to man; an agency that is very destructive to human life, even when carefully and properly handled and treated),—I instruct you that in such a case as this due care would be the highest care and vigilance of which a man is capable, and which the condition of science makes known at the time. And this is the degree of care which was demanded of the company: to so conduct itself in regard to the wires on that bridge as that the diligence and care should be proportionate to the danger which there existed,"—is but, in effect, an application to the case in hand of the rule that the care demanded of electric companies must be commensurate with the danger, and that, where their wires are carrying a highly dangerous current of electricity, as is admitted to have been carried over the wires which caused the death of plaintiff's intestate, the law imposes upon the company the utmost degree of care in their construction, inspection, and repair, so as to keep them harmless at places where persons are liable to come in contact with them. Croswell, Electricity, § 284; Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 208, 26 L. R. A. 810; City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery, 61 Ark. 381, 31 L. R. A. 570; Giraudi v. Electric Improv. Co. 107 Cal. 120, 28 L. R. A. 596, and authorities heretofore cited.

The questions in this case are important, and many of them of first impression in this state, and therefore we have given to the case that consideration which its merits deserve; but, finding no error in the record, the judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Rehearing denied June 20, 1898.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Bridget MOONEY

v.

LUZERNE BOROUGH, Appt.

(186 Pa. 161.)

1. Negligence of a city causing the death of a person by contact with an abandoned telephone wire is a question for the jury, where the wire had been unused for several months, crossing a charged electric-light wire in close proximity thereto, and after sagging so as to interfere with public travel, was cut by a member of the borough council, and wrapped around a post within easy distance of pedestrians, and with one end resting on the ground or in the water.

2. The liability of a city for neglect of its duty to exercise care and supervision over electric wires suspended over its streets is not lessened by the fact that individuals or corporations are subjected to a like duty and liability.

(May 16, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Luzerne County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's son. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. O. Coughlin and George R. Bedford for appellant.

Messrs. William R. Gibbons and William S. M'Lean, for appellee:

It was the duty of the defendant to supervise and control the erection and maintenance of electric wires suspended over its streets.

Allentown v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 148 Pa. 117.

The maintenance and repairs of the same demand constant and rigid supervision, and every municipality owes such duty of rigid inspection to its citizens.

McKeesport v. McKeesport & R. Pass. R. Co. 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 242.

The negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of the death of plaintiff's son. The contact of the wires was unquestionably a concurrent cause, but it was a cause not extraordinary, and therefore likely to be foreseen.

Schaeffer v. Jackson Twp. 150 Pa. 145, 18 L. R. A. 100; Kieffer v. Hummelstown, 151 Pa. 304, 17 L. R. A. 2; Ewing v. North Versailles Twp. 146 Pa. 309.

Sterrett, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant borough not only complains

NOTE.—As to liabilities for injuries by electric wires in highways, see Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson (Colo.) 81 L. R. A. 566, and note; also Newark Electric Light & P. Co. v. Garden (C. C. App. 3d C.) 37 L. R. A. 725; Atlanta Consol. Street 40 L. R. A.

R. Co. v. Owings (Ga.) 33 L. R. A. 798; Willey v. Boston Electric Light Co. (Mass.) 37 L. R. A. 723; and Bergin v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. (Conn.) 39 L. R. A. 192.

of the manner in which the case was submitted to the jury, but it challenges the right of the court to submit it to them in any form. The evidence bearing on all the disputed questions was quite sufficient to carry the case to the jury. It would have been manifest error to have affirmed defendant's third point. The fact that the telephone wire had been maintained in the same place for fifteen years without accident was no reason why it should continue there indefinitely without inspection. Directly the opposite conclusion was warranted, but it was for the jury. Taking into view the fact that the telephone wire had been in the same place for fifteen years, in connection with the further facts that the telephone line had been unused and abandoned for several months; that it crossed a charged electric-light wire, in close proximity thereto; and, finally, that a few months before the accident the old telephone wire sagged to such an extent as to interfere with public travel on the streets, and we have a condition of affairs that was at least sufficient to admonish the municipality that more than ordinary care should be exercised in the supervision of the overhead wires in question. When, under such circumstances, the sagging wire is cut by a member of the borough council, and one end wrapped around a post within easy distance of pedestrians on the highway crossing the bridge, with the end resting on the ground or in the water, the defendant has no just reason to complain that the question of its alleged negligence was submitted to the jury. The evidence was quite sufficient to justify the latter in finding that the accident which resulted in the sudden death of plaintiff's son was the natural and probable consequence of the manner in which the telephone wire was fastened to the post.

The only remaining question that requires notice is one presented by the second specification. Defendant contends that, while a municipality is invested with police supervision of the wires of corporations occupying its streets, such supervision does not involve pecuniary responsibility, and, if an accident happens from a failure to maintain the wires in a safe and proper condition, the corporation owning the wires, and not the municipality, is alone responsible for resulting injuries; and West Chester v. Apple, 85 Pa. 284, is cited as authority for the position. While language used in the opinion in that case may justify the conclusion sought to be drawn therefrom, it was not necessary to the decision, and it has been expressly disapproved in Philadelphia v. Smith, 28 W. N. C. 242. In that case it was held by this court that the liability of a municipality for damages for injuries caused by defective sidewalk is not relieved against by the fact that the property owner is also liable. The same rule applies to dangerous defects or obstructions in the highway, whether overhead or at grade. The duty and liability of the municipality is in no way lessened by the fact that individuals or corporations are subject to a like duty and liability. The learned trial judge was therefore right in affirming plaintiff's point that "it is the duty of a municipality to exercise a careful supervision over the adjustment and regulation of the electric wires suspended over its streets," and that it is liable for injuries resulting from neglect of such duty. In view of the multiplicity of overhead wires carrying deadly currents and the increasing frequency of accidents from defects in such wires, or in the manner of their adjustment, it behooves municipalities to recognize and perform their duties in the premises in more than a perfunctory manner, if they would escape the consequences of negligence. Neither of the specifications of error is sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS

Levy WILLIAMS, Admr., etc., of John M. Williams, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,

v.

THACKER COAL & COKE COMPANY.

(.....W. Va.....)

*1. It is the duty of an operator or agent of a coal mine to employ a competent mine boss under and according to the provisions of § 11, p. 995, Code 1891, Append., and, having done so, he has discharged his duty to his employees in relation to those duties which the statute prescribes shall be performed by such mine boss, and the operator or agent is not liable for injuries arising from the negligence of the mine boss.

2. A mine boss so employed is such a fellow servant as, in case of an injury to other employees through his negligence, the master is not responsible.

*Headnotes by MCWHORTER, J.

NOTE.—For a similar case of a statute regulating the employment of a mine boss, see Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. (Pa.) 29 L. R. A. 808.
40 L. R. A.

(April 2, 1906.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Mingo County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Goodykoonts, Marcum, Simms, & Enslow for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Rucker, Keller, & Hamill, for defendant in error:

There is no evidence showing, or tending to show, that the plaintiff's intestate was authorized or invited to go into the air course when and where the accident occurred, unless he was so authorized or invited by virtue of a custom, or usage, among the miners to borrow and return each other's mining tools, the existence of which is attempted to be shown by plaintiff.

It is true that miners not supplied with tools of their own sometimes borrow such tools from other miners. This is conceded; but this practice or habit of the miners did not constitute a "custom," or "usage," in the legal sense of these words, so as to bind their employer, the defendant, or render it liable for the consequences of their indulgence in such practice.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 708, note 4.

The relation of master and servant does not exist "where the servant is at the time on a private errand of his own."

1 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 324.

The duty to use care in keeping his premises in safe condition does not devolve upon the master in regard to places where the servant goes voluntarily, for purposes of his own, without being required or authorized so to do.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 190; Neff v. Broom, 70 Ga. 256; Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 34 W. Va. 514, 11 L. R. A. 385; Woolwine v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 36 W. Va. 329, 16 L. R. A. 271; Belford v. Canada Shipping Co. 35 Hun, 347; Wright v. Rawson, 52 Iowa, 329, 35 Am. Rep. 275; Doggett v. Illinois C. R. Co. 34 Iowa, 284.

A trespasser or mere licensee cannot recover damages for injuries resulting from negligence of the owner of premises where injury occurred, there being no legal duty due from the owner to the trespasser to keep the premises safe.

Cooley, Torts, pp. 659 et seq.; 3 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 1149; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 907; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 111 et seq., and notes; Poling v. Ohio River R. Co. 38 W. Va. 645, 24 L. R. A. 215; Woolwine v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 36 W. Va. 329, 16 L. R. A. 271.

Under the Pennsylvania act of April 18, 1877 (Pub. Laws, 58), it is the duty of a mining company to provide a mining boss, and such company is not liable for any injury resulting from his negligence, if proper care has been exercised in his selection.

Redatone Coke Co. v. Roby, 115 Pa. 364; Reese v. Biddle, 112 Pa. 72; Waddell v. Simson, 112 Pa. 567.

In order to hold the master responsible for the act or omission of the servant, it must appear that the act or omission was, in contemplation of law, the act or omission of the master.

Baker v. Kinsey, 38 Cal. 694; Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 469, 68 Am. Dec. 845, and note; Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. 171 Pa. 198, 29 L. R. A. 808.

McWhorter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 18th day of February, 1895, John M. Williams was in the employ of the Thacker Coal & Coke Company in Mingo county, engaged in mining or digging coal in said company's mines in room No. 11. About noon of that day he went into room No. 12, where two other miners were at work, to borrow from them a tamping bar and needle, which it seems it was necessary for him to have in the proper prosecution of his work in getting out his coal. In about an hour thereafter he returned the tools to the person from whom he borrowed them in room No. 12, and as he had turned, and was again leaving the last-named room, and before he had gotten entirely out of it, about 25 feet from the mouth of the room, he was crushed and killed beneath a large piece of slate 15 feet long, 5 or 6 feet wide, and 9 to 10 inches thick, which fell from the roof of the mine upon him. Said room No. 12 was a haulway, then being driven and constructed, and was intended to be, when completed, an air course. This room was further in the mine than room No. 11. Levy Williams, administratrix of John M. Williams, deceased, brought her action of trespass on the case against said the Thacker Coal & Coke Co. in Mingo circuit court, and filed her declaration at August rules, 1895, laying her damages at $10,000. And at a term of said court, on the 16th day of September, defendant entered its qualified appearance, and moved to quash the summons and return of service, which motion was overruled, and the defendant then appeared, and demurred generally to the declaration, and to each count thereof, which was also overruled by the court. The defendant then pleaded not guilty, and on the 19th day of September a jury was impaneled and sworn to try the issue, and, after hearing all the evidence adduced by the plaintiff, the defendant moved the court to exclude such evidence, and direct the jury to render a verdict for the defendant, which motion the court overruled, to which ruling the defendant excepted. The defendant then introduced its testimony, and after the evidence had been introduced as well for the plaintiff as for the defendant, the defendant filed a demurrer to the evidence of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff entered her joinder therein, and the jury was directed to inquire what damages the plaintiff had sustained by reason of the matters shown by her in evidence in case judgment should be given for her upon the evidence, and the jury returned a special verdict for plaintiff for $8,000, and the court having considered the defendant's demurrer to the evidence, sustained the same, and rendered judgment for defendant for costs, to which rulings of the court plaintiff excepted, and obtained from this court a writ of error and supersedeas, and assigned the following errors: "First. The court erred in sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence in the case and giving judgment thereon against the plaintiff, because the evidence clearly establishes that the deceased, Williams, was killed while in the discharge of his duty as a miner in the defendant's coal mines, and without any fault or negligence upon his part whatever, by the falling of a large piece of overhanging slate that had been in an unsafe and insecure condition for at least two weeks prior to the day of the accident, and that its dangerous, unsafe, and insecure condition was known to the mine boss and mine propper for at least two weeks prior to the day of the accident; that the said mine boss and mine propper's attention had been called to it by Graves and White, the two miners working in said room No. 12, where the accident occurred, at least two weeks before the same did occur. Second. Because it was error upon the part of the court to refuse to overrule the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence and to render judgment upon said demurrer in favor of the plaintiff."

Section 11, p. 995, Code 1891, Append. provides that, "in order to better secure the proper ventilation of every coal mine, and promote the health and safety of persons employed therein, the operator or agent shall employ a competent and practical inside overseer, to be called "mining boss," who shall be a citizen, and an experienced coal miner, or any person having two years' experience in a coal mine;" and in prescribing the duties of such mining boss it provides that he "shall see that as the miners advance their excavations, proper break-throughs are made as provided in § 10 of this act, and that all loose coal, slate, and rock overhead in the working places, and along the haulways, be removed or carefully secured so as to prevent danger to persons employed in such mines," etc. This statute is taken from the statute of Pennsylvania. The latter requires the "owner or agent [of any coal mine] to employ a competent and practical inside overseer to be called 'mining boss'" and then prescribes his duties, similar to those prescribed by our statute, while ours prescribes that such mining boss "shall be a citizen and an experienced coal miner, or any person having two years' experience in a coal mine." Under the Pennsylvania statute, in Reese v. Biddle, 112 Pa. 79, Justice Paxson, in the opinion of the court, says: "It was plain error to instruct the jury that the defendants below were responsible for the negligence of their mine boss. There was no evidence that he was not competent to perform his duties, and hence no negligence can be imputed to defendants for employing him. It has been repeatedly held that a mining boss is such a fellow servant as, in case of an injury to other employees through his negligence the master is not responsible."—and cites Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Jones, 86 Pa. 432; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. 374; and Keystone Bridge Co. v. Newberry, 96 Pa. 246, 42 Am. Rep. 543. "The operator of a coal mine fulfils the measure of his duty to his employees if he commits his work to careful and skilful bosses and superintendents, who conduct the same to the best of their skill and ability. Waddell v. Simson, 112 Pa. 567, syl. point 3. The statute requires that the operator or agent of every coal mine shall employ a competent and practical inside overseer. For what purpose? To better secure the proper ventilation of the coal mine, and promote the health and safety of persons employed therein. Operators and agents are not supposed to have the practical knowledge necessary to look after these matters which are of so much importance to the interests of the miners and employees in and about the mines; therefore the legislature, with proper solicitude for the welfare of those who brave the dangers of the mines in order to make a living for those dependent upon them, asserts its prerogative, and so far interferes with the private business of the capitalist who engages in the mining business as to require him to take into his employment a person whose experience in the business and sound judgment equip him for such management and oversight of the conduct of the mine as to reduce the dangers thereof to a minimum. The operator is left no choice—no discretion—in the matter. Although he may himself be a practical miner, possessed of all the qualifications of a mine boss, yet under the statute he is compelled to employ such person. Did the appellee in this case comply with the statute? The record shows that Thomas Litefoot, a man thirty-nine years of age, a practical miner of nearly thirty years' experience in "digging coal and doing everything in a coal mine," was at the time of the injuries complained of, and had been for some months prior thereto, the mine boss in the employ of appellee. What more could be required of appellee than compliance with the strict provisions of this statute for the protection and safety of the miners and other employees of the mines? There is no evidence tending to show incompetence of the mining boss, or negligence of appellee in employing him in that capacity; none whatever to prove, or tending to prove, that appellee knew or had notice of any part of the mine being in a dangerous condition. "Where a person or corporation is compelled by law to employ an individual in a given matter, no liability attaches for his tortious or negligent acts." 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 809. "When the law compels the corporation to give out a contract for grading a street to the lowest bidder, it takes away from the corporation the responsibility arising from the acts of the person taking the contract." James v. San Francisco, 6 Cal. 528, 65 Am. Dec. 626; Story, Agency, § 456; Milligan v. Wedge, 12 Ad. & El. 757. In Waddell v. Simson, 112 Pa. 567, Justice Gordon says in the court's opinion: "Moreover, as the defendants had complied strictly with the 8th section of the act of 3d of March, 1870, in providing a practical and skilful inside overseer or mining boss, as they had thus fulfilled the duty imposed upon them by the general assembly, it is not for this or any other court to charge them with an additional obligation. . . . 'It is too plain for argument that, if the defendants have not violated said act they are not responsible.' To this doctrine we must adhere, and the more so that it is just and reasonable. The act is one of great practical utility to the miner, and lays upon the proprietors of mines all the burdens they ought of right to bear. They must provide capable overseers for their works, and they must furnish what, by such overseers, is required for the safety and welfare of the men engaged in those works. More than this they cannot do, for upon the judgment and skill of these practical agents they must depend quite as much as any of the men who are engaged in their mines. Bosses, however well intentioned and skilful, cannot always be on the watch; occasionally they will fail in judgment, and at times may even be negligent; but of this the workman is quite as well aware as his employer, and in entering upon the employment of mining he must assume the risks that are ordinarily incident thereto, among which are those accidents that may result from the negligence of coemployees, of whom, as we have seen, the mining boss is one." In all the cases decided in Pennsylvania under the statute requiring operators of mines to employ mine bosses, it is held that these mine bosses are fellow servants with the miners and employees in the mines. An act of the general assembly of Pennsylvania, passed in 1891, "to provide for the health and safety of persons employed in and about the anthracite coal mines of Pennsylvania, and for the protection and preservation of property connected therewith," provided what qualifications a mine foreman or assistant mine foreman should possess, and provided for a board of examiners for such foremen and that none should be employed as such who was not certified by such board; and further provided "that for any injury to person or property occasioned by any violation of this act or any failure to comply with its provisions by any mine foreman, a right of action shall accrue to the party injured against said owner or operator for any direct damages he may have sustained thereby; and in case of loss of life by reason of such neglect or failure aforesaid, a right of action shall accrue to the widow or lineal heirs of the person whose life shall be lost for like recovery of damages for the injury they shall have sustained." In the case of Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. 171 Pa. 198, 29 L. R. A. 808, it is held that this act, "in so far as it imposes liability on the mine owner for the failure of the mine foreman to comply with the provisions of the act which compels his employment and defines his duties is unconstitutional and void."

The duty of the operator or agent is to employ a competent mine boss according to the provisions of the statute, and when he has done so he has discharged his duty to his employees in relation to those duties which the statute prescribes shall be performed by such mine boss and the operator or agent is not liable for injuries arising from the negligence of the mine boss, who is not a vice principal, as his duties are not delegated to him by his employer, but are prescribed by statute: and he is a fellow servant, as in case of an injury to other employees through his negligence the master is not responsible.

The court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to the evidence, and the judgment must be affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

David BETTMAN, Appt.,

v.

H. T. COWLEY, Resp.

(..... Wash.)

1. The right of action on a judgment exists at common law, in the absence of a statute to the contrary.
2. The restriction of the lien or charge of a judgment against the estate or person of the judgment debtor, to six years from its rendition, by act of March 6, 1897, and the prohibition of the renewal of such judgment for more than one year after the act takes effect, so far as the act applies to pre-existing contracts, is an unconstitutional impairment of their obligation.
3. It is a matter of common knowledge that young men who are intelligent, industrious, and frugal, although absolutely penniless, obtain money upon the credit of their future earnings and accumulations.

(Reavis and Gordon, JJ., dissent.)

(April 9, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County setting aside a default judgment and letting defendant in to defend in an action brought upon a judgment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. Will G. Graves, for appellant:

Appellant's right of action upon this judgment was a common-law right. An act modifying or repealing the remedy of a party by action or suit will not be construed to affect actions brought prior to its passage, unless it takes away the jurisdiction or right previously existing.

NOTE.—For judgments as contracts within the constitutional provision against impairment of obligation, see Rockwell v. Butler (Colo.) 17 L. R. A. 611, and note.

40 L. R. A.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 482.

The earlier writers classified a judgment as a contract by specialty—the highest form of contract.

8 Bl. Com. p. 160; Chitty, Contr. p. 2; 1 Parsons, Contr. 7th ed. p. 8.

This classification has been approved in recent decisions by courts of the highest standing.

Carr v. Rischer, 119 N. Y. 117; Gutta Percha & R. Mfg. Co. v. Houston, 108 N. Y. 278; Taylor v. Root, 4 Keyes, 335; Johnson v. Butler, 2 Iowa, 585; Cox v. Mariatt, 36 N. J. L. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 454; Butler v. Rockwell, 17 Colo. 290, 17 L. R. A. 611.

As to whether or not a judgment is a contract under all circumstances is an open question.

Louisiana, Folsom, v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 988; Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405, 33 L. ed. 198; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925.

No attempt has been made to fix definitely the line between alterations of the remedy, which are to be deemed legitimate, and those which, under the form of modifying the remedy, impair substantial rights.

Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. 585, 18 L. ed. 403.

Whenever the result last mentioned is produced, the act is within the prohibition of the Constitution, and to that extent void.

Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 319, 11 L. ed. 146; M'Cracken v. Haywood, 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529; Gunn v. Barry, 82 U. S. 622, 21 L. ed. 215; Barnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. 118, 41 L. ed. 98; Louisiana, Nelson, v. Police Jury, 111 U. S. 720, 28 L. ed. 578.

At the time of the rendition of this judgment, and, it must be presumed, at the time of the making of the contract, the judgment creditor, by a statutory proceeding, could revive and continue the lien of his judgment from time to time. The length of the time for which the lien of the judgment might thus be extended was not limited.

2 Hill's Code, §§ 462, 463.

In addition he had a right of action as upon a debt upon his judgment in the court where it was rendered, or in any other court.

Comyns, Dig. title Debt, A, 2; Proctor v. Johnson, 1 Ld. Raym. 670; Hickman v. Macon County, 42 Fed. Rep. 759; Clark v. Goodwin, 14 Mass. 287; O'Neal v. Kittredge, 3 Allen, 470; Linton v. Hurley, 114 Mass. 76; Wilson v. Hatfield, 121 Mass. 551; White River Bank v. Downer, 29 Vt. 332; Whittemore v. Carlin, 53 N. H. 576; Greathouse v. Smith, 4 Ill. 541; Albin v. People, 46 Ill. 872; Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658; Hummer v. Lamphear, 32 Kan. 439, 49 Am. Rep. 491; Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 11; Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 872, 76 Am. Dec. 538; Haven v. Baldwin, 5 Iowa, 503; Simpson v. Cochran, 23 Iowa, 81, 92 Am. Dec. 410; Kingsland v. Forrest, 18 Ala. 519, 52 Am. Dec. 232; Palmer v. Glover, 78 Ind. 529; Davidson v. Nebaker, 21 Ind. 394, 83 Am. Dec. 350; Denison v. Williams, 4 Conn. 402; Ices v. Finch, 28 Conn. 112; Stewart v. Peterson, 63 Pa. 230; Gardner v. Henry, 5 Coldw. 458; Hale v. Angel, 20 Johns. 343; Smith v. Mumford, 9 Cow. 26; Headley v. Roby, 6 Ohio, 521; McDonald v. Butler, 3 Mich. 558.

When a statute gives a new remedy for a matter which was actionable at common law, and contains no negative, express or implied, of the old remedy, the new one provided by it is cumulative, and the party may elect between the two.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 339; Dean v. Eldredge, 29 How. Pr. 221; Lane v. Salter, 51 N. Y. 6.

The statutory revival is but a continuation of the former suit. It is, in fact, nothing more than a provision for the common-law writ of scire facias put into statutory form, and the relief given by it is no greater than that given by the common-law writ.

1 Black, Judgm. § 432.

The judgment creditor is not restricted to the proceedings by scire facias, but may have his action upon the judgment as upon any other demand.

Haven v. Baldwin, 5 Iowa, 503; Simpson v. Cochran, 23 Iowa, 82, 92 Am. Dec. 410; Albin v. People, 46 Ill. 374; Denison v. Williams, 4 Conn. 403.

And the principle is not changed because the statute has provided a method of revival.

Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658; Hummer v. Lamphear, 32 Kan. 439, 49 Am. Rep. 491.

The term "property," as used in the constitutional prohibition, includes every right to the use, possession, enjoyment, or recovery of land, goods, or money which the law will vindicate if assailed, or can be enforced as a defense or cause of action.

2 Hare, Am. Const. Law, p. 823; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 445; Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 19, 38 L. ed. 64.

A judgment is property of the highest order. By the rendition thereof certain rights are vested in the creditor. Among the vested rights so secured is the right to the pursuit of the remedy given by the law when the judgment was recovered. With such rights the legislature cannot interfere, and any attempt to do so, if enforced by the courts, would be a taking of property without due process of law.

Gunn v. Barry, 82 U. S. 622, 21 L. ed. 214; Bates v. Kimball, 2 D. Chip. (Vt.) 88; Stratford v. Sharon, 61 Vt. 126, 4 L. R. A. 500; Gilman v. Tucker, 128 N. Y. 190, 13 L. R. A. 309.

Messrs. Blake & Post, for respondent:

A judgment is not a contract, within the meaning of the Constitution.

Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925; Freeland v. Williams, 181 U. S. 405, 33 L. ed. 193; Louisiana, Folsom v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648.

A contract is an agreement in which a party undertakes to do, or not to do, a particular thing, which in this case was to pay a sum of money on a day named. The laws of the land bind him to perform his undertaking, and this is, of course, the obligation of his contract. These cannot be changed whether they relate to the remedy or the right, to such an extent that the creditor may not have a reasonable opportunity after the maturity of the contract to satisfy the same out of the property of his debtor.

The power of the legislature to cut off the remedy, after giving reasonable time in which to enforce it, must have been contemplated by the parties. Within these limitations the remedy is completely within the discretion of the legislature.

Drury v. Henderson, 143 Ill. 315.

A change of the remedy for the violation of a contract, or a change in the method of enforcing it, does not impair its obligation.

Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Hill, 86 Mo. 473; Tennessee, Bloomstein v. Sneed, 96 U. S. 74, 24 L. ed. 612; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 319, 11 L. ed. 146; Sanger v. Nightingale, 123 U. S. 176, 30 L. ed. 1105; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365; Rexford v. Knight, 11 N. Y. 308; People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 227; Vance v. Vance, 108 U. S. 514, 27 L. ed. 808; Curtis v. Whitney, 13 Wall. 68, 20 L. ed. 513; Wheeler v. Jackson, 137 U. S. 245, 34 L. ed. 659; Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How. 163, 12 L. ed. 1080.

The matter of the statute of limitations is so far within the discretion of the legislature that a legislative enactment that removes the bar which the statute enables a debtor to interpose to prevent the payment of a debt does not deprive the debtor of any constitutional right.

Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 620, 29 L. ed. 433; Gittings v. Stearns, 19 Ill. 876; Sohn v. Waterson, 17 Wall. 596, 21 L. ed. 737; Barker v. Jackson, Henry, 1 Paine, 559; Jackson, Leper v. Griswold, 5 Johns. 139; Stephens v. St. Louis Nat. Bank, 43 Mo. 885; Bell v. Roberts, 13 Vt. 582; Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill, 324.

If the law is a statute of limitations, the principle which supports such laws against the objection that they impair the obligation of contracts is equally efficient in this case.

Wheeler v. Jackson, 137 U. S. 245, 34 L. ed. 659; Louisiana, Folsom v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936; Freeland v. Williams, 181 U. S. 405, 33 L. ed. 193.

A common-law action upon a judgment cannot be maintained as a matter of strict right.

Pitzer v. Russel, 4 Or. 124; 2 Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 449; 1 Freeman, Executions, chap. 8; Abernethy v. Medical Lake, 9 Wash. 112.

Since it does not appear but that appellant may be able to satisfy his claim by the issuance of an execution, the maintenance of an action upon the judgment is not a matter of strict right, and the same is not, therefore, property within the meaning of the constitutional provision under consideration.

An act of Congress which authorizes the solicitor of the treasury to issue a warrant of distress against the property of a revenue officer, for the amount found due in adjusting his accounts in the treasury department, is constitutional, and not obnoxious to the objection that it is not due process of law.

Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372; Springer v. United States, 102 U. S. 586, 26 L. ed. 253; Hilton v. Merritt, 110 U. S. 97, 28 L. ed. 38.

The sources of jurisdiction are to be found in the laws conferring the power to adjudicate matters as between litigants, and when it has been found that courts have gone beyond the limits of such power, or directly violated the laws conferring such power, the judgment is held to be void.

Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 31 L. ed. 372; Re Snow, 120 U. S. 274, 30 L. ed. 658; Seamster v. Blackstock, 33 Va. 232; Fithian v. Monks, 43 Mo. 502; 1 Black, Judgm. §§ 216, 240-242; Howell v. Tacoma, 3 Wash. 711; Spokane Falls v. Browne, 3 Wash. 92; Kline v. Tacoma, 11 Wash. 193; Vancouver v. Windler, 8 Wash. 378.

Dunbar, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action upon a judgment. Service of the summons and complaint was made, default of the respondent was noted, and judgment entered against him on August 23, 1897. Thereafter respondent moved to set aside the default and judgment entered against him, which motion was sustained. It is stipulated that the respondent has no defense to the action other than the act of the legislature of 1897, approved March 6, 1897, entitled "An Act Relating to the Duration of Judgments and Repealing §§ 462 and 463, 2 Hill's Code of Washington." The act is as follows:

"Sec. 1. After the expiration of six years from the rendition of any judgment it shall cease to be a lien or charge against the estate or person of the judgment debtor.

"Sec. 2. No suit, action, or other proceeding shall ever be had on any judgment rendered in the state of Washington by which the lien or duration of such judgment, claim, or demand shall be extended or continued in force for any greater or longer period than six years from the date of the entry of the original judgment.

"Sec. 3. When the lien of any judgment, as specified in § 1 of this act, has run six years, or its duration will be less than one year by reason of this act, then the lien of such judgment shall continue for one year from and after the taking effect of this act.

"Sec. 4. Sections 462 and 463 of volume 2, 40 L. R. A.

Hill's Code of Washington, relating to a renewal of judgments, are hereby repealed."

And it is claimed that the act is unconstitutional, as applied to judgments in existence at the time of the passage of the act. It is also contended by the appellant that the title of this act is not sufficient, in that it embraces more than one subject, and the subject is not expressed in the title of the act. We do not think there is any substantial merit in this objection. In presenting our views in relation to the constitutionality of the act, it is not necessary to pass upon the other objections raised by the appellant. It is contended by the appellant that the application of this law to judgments already in existence is violative of § 10 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, and of § 23 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of Washington, in that it is a law which impairs the obligation of contracts; and of article 5 and of § 1 of article 14 of the Constitution of the United States, and of § 8 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of Washington, in that it would deprive the appellant of his property without due process of law. We think that, in any event, as applied to contracts existing at the time the law was enacted, its enforcement would be an impairment of such contracts. It is insisted by the respondent that the United States Supreme Court has decided this question adversely to appellant's contention in Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925, in that it has decided that a judgment is not a contract, but we do not think that the court decided that contractual rights, when merged into a judgment, could not be enforced. The facts before the court must be ascertained to determine the principles of law which the court decides in a given case. The facts in that case were substantially as follows: An action was brought in the supreme court of New York by John S. Prouty against the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company et al. to compel the specific performance of a certain contract. It was adjudged in January, 1878, that the company pay the plaintiff out of its net earnings $53,184.88, together with interest thereon from the entry of said judgment. It was also adjudged that, if the company within the time specified failed to pay to the plaintiff the above-specified sum and such interest, the plaintiff might have execution therefor against the defendant. By the statutes of New York in force when this judgment was rendered, 7 per cent was the legal rate of interest. Afterwards, in 1879, the legislature reduced the rate of interest to 6 per cent. The question came up on the right of the legislature to reduce the rate of interest on a judgment rendered when the rate was higher, and the court held, in substance, that where a judgment is obtained on a contract which contains no provision for interest, the allowance for interest on the judgment is a matter within the legislative discretion that the judgment is not a contract, and the law reducing the rate of interest thereon does not impair the obligation of contracts, within the meaning of the Federal Constitution. It simply was determined by the court that in that case, where the judgment did not arise out of contract, the interest which was allowed by the state was allowed as damages for the nonperformance of a payment of the judgment,—damages which the state had a right to estimate and enforce; that no contractual obligation existed, so far as the question of interest was concerned, but that, the interest allowed having been allowed by the state as damages, the amount of such damages was within the control of the state, and therefore no obligation was impaired. Even in that case there was a very able dissenting opinion by Justice Harlan, which was concurred in by Justice Field and Justice Brewer, holding that it was not only an impairment of a contract, but that the judgment was property, and that the rate of interest which the judgment drew was property within the meaning of the Constitution, and that the Constitution was violated by the changing of the rate of interest by the legislature. But it is not necessary in this case to go to the extent to which the dissenting judges did in the case just reviewed. Reference was made in that case to Louisiana, Folsom, v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 986, which shows that the court was considering, and considering only, judgments which did not arise out of contract, and had no element of contract in them, and this is one of the cases also relied upon by the respondent in this case. This was an action brought by the holders of judgments recovered in the courts of Louisiana for damages done to the property of the plaintiffs by a mob or riotous assemblage of people in the year 1873. A statute of the state made municipal corporations liable for damages thus caused within their limits. At the time the injuries complained of were committed the city of New Orleans was authorized to levy and collect a tax upon property within its limits of $1.75 upon every $100 of its assessed value. Afterwards, by the Constitution of the state, the power of the city to impose taxes on property within its limits was restricted to 10 mills on the dollar of the valuation, and it was asserted that the effect of this last limitation was to prevent the relators, who were not allowed to issue executions against the city, from collecting their judgments, as the funds receivable from the tax thus authorized to be levied were exhausted by the current expenses of the city, which must first be met, and this action was to compel the authorities of the city to provide for the payment of these judgments by a levy of an additional tax. Judge Field, in writing the opinion of the court in this case (and it may be noted that he was one of the judges who dissented in the Morley Case, and therefore it cannot be concluded that he intended to lay down a doctrine which would be opposed to the doctrine of the dissenting opinion, viz., that the judgment was property, the taking of which without due process of law would fall within the inhibition of the Constitution), said: "The right to reimbursement for damages caused by a mob or riotous assemblage of people is not founded upon any contract between the city and the sufferers. Its liability for the damages is created by a law of the legislature, and can be withdrawn or limited at its pleasure. Municipal corporations are instrumentalities of the state for the convenient administration of government within their limits. They are invested with authority to establish a police to guard against disturbance; and it is their duty to exercise their authority so as to prevent violence from any cause, and particularly from mobs and riotous assemblages. It has, therefore, been generally considered as a just burden cast upon them to require them to make good any loss sustained from the acts of such assemblages which they should have repressed. . . . But, however considered, the imposition is simply a measure of legislative policy, in no respect resting upon contract, and subject, like all other measures of policy, to any change the legislature may see fit to make, either in the extent of liability or in the means of its enforcement. And its character is not at all changed by the fact that the amount of loss in pecuniary estimation has been ascertained and established by the judgments rendered. The obligation to make indemnity created by the statute has no more element of contract in it because merged in the judgments than it had previously." And this was the sole ground upon which this case was decided. And, as showing conclusively that a contractual relation would have compelled a different decision from this, the opinion proceeds: "The cases in which we have held that the taxing power of a municipality continues, notwithstanding a legislative act of limitation or repeal, are founded upon contracts; and decisions in them do not rest upon the principle that the party affected in the enforcement of his contract rights has been thereby deprived of any property, but upon the principle that the remedies for the enforcement of his contracts existing when they were made have been by such legislation impaired. The usual mode in which municipal bodies meet their pecuniary contracts is by taxation. And when, upon the faith that such taxation will be levied, contracts have been made, the constitutional inhibition has been held to restrain the state from repealing or diminishing the power of the corporation so as to deprive the holder of the contract of all adequate and efficacious remedy." And the court cites approvingly the cases of Wolff v. New Orleans, 103 U. S. 328, 26 L. ed. 395, and Louisiana, Southern Bank v. Pillsbury, 105 U. S. 278, 26 L. ed. 1090, saying: "In both cases by the unanimous judgment of the court, the legislation in that respect is subject to this qualification, which attends all state legislation,—that it shall not conflict with the prohibitions of the Constitution of the United States, and, among other things, shall not operate directly upon contracts of the corporation, so as to impair their obligation by abrogating or lessening the means of their enforcement. Legislation producing this latter result, not indirectly, as a consequence of legitimate measures taken, as will sometimes happen, but directly, by operating upon those means, is prohibited by the Constitution, and must be disregarded—treated as if never enacted—by all courts recognizing the Constitution as the paramount law of the land. This doctrine has been repeatedly asserted by this court when attempts have been made to limit the power of taxation of a municipal body, upon the faith of which contracts have been made, and by means of which alone they could be performed." Justice Bradley, in his concurring opinion, makes it especially clear that he concurred in the opinion simply upon the ground that "remedies against municipal bodies for damages caused by mobs, or other violators of law, unconnected with the municipal government, are purely matters of legislative policy, depending on positive law, which may at any time be repealed or modified, either before or after the damage has occurred, and the repeal of which causes the remedy to cease. . . . But," said he, "an ordinary judgment of damages for a tort, rendered against the person committing it, in favor of the person injured, stands upon a very different footing. Such a judgment is founded upon an absolute right, and is as much an article of property as anything else that a party owns; and the legislature can no more violate it without due process of law than it can any other property. To abrogate the remedy for enforcing it, and to give no other adequate remedy in its stead, is to deprive the owner of his property within the meaning of the 14th Amendment. The remedy for enforcing a judgment is the life of a judgment, just as much as the remedy for enforcing a contract is the life of the contract."

So it will be seen from these cases, which are the principal and most pertinent cases cited on this question, not only by the opinions of the court but also by the dissenting opinions in each case, that it was not the intention of the Supreme Court to lay down the rule that the destruction of a judgment in which a contract was merged by the legislature was not an impairment of the contract, and was not a deprivation of property, within the meaning of the 14th Amendment. But the Supreme Court has with uniformity spoken with no uncertain sound concerning the sacredness of contract rights, and of the protection of property under the constitutional guaranty referred to. These cases, without especially enumerating them, are many of them reviewed in the late case of Barnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. 118, 41 L. ed. 93, where the first quotation is from Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 811, 11 L. ed. 143, where the court, in discussing a question of what was a right and what was a remedy, said: "Whatever belongs merely to the remedy may be altered according to the will of the state, provided the alteration does not impair the obligation of the contract. But, if that effect is produced, it is immaterial whether it is done by the acting on the remedy or directly on the contract itself. In either case it is prohibited by the Constitution." Citing, also, McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397, where it was said: "The obligation of a contract consists in its binding force on the party who makes it. This depends on the laws in existence when it is made; these are necessarily referred to in all contracts, and forming a part of them as the measure of the obligation to perform them by the one party, and the right acquired by the other. There can be no other standard by which to ascertain the extent of either than that which the terms of the contract indicate, according to their settled legal meaning; when it becomes consummated, the law defines the duty and the right; compels one party to perform the thing contracted for, and gives the other a right to enforce the performance by the remedies then in force. If any subsequent law affect to diminish the duty, or to impair the right, it necessarily bears on the obligation of the contract, in favor of one party to the injury of the other; hence, any law which in its operation amounts to a denial or obstruction of the rights accruing by a contract, though professing to act only on the remedy, is directly obnoxious to the prohibition of the Constitution." And as showing the construction which must have been placed by the court itself on the opinion in Louisiana, Folsom, v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936, the court in this case quotes approvingly the case of Seibert v. Lewis, 122 U. S. 284, 30 L. ed. 1161, where it was announced that it was the settled doctrine of the court that "the remedy subsisting in a state, when and where the contract is made and is to be performed, is a part of its obligation, and any subsequent law of the state which so affects that remedy as substantially to impair and lessen the value of the contract is forbidden by the Constitution, and is therefore void;" and that the legislature of Missouri having by act of March 23, 1868, to facilitate the construction of railroads, enacted that the county courts should levy and cause to be collected in the same manner as county taxes a special tax in order to pay the interest and principal of any bond which might be issued by a municipal corporation in the state on account of the subscription authorized by the act to the stock of the railroad company, which tax should be levied on all the real estate within the township making the subscription in accordance with the valuation then last made by the county assessors for county purposes, it must be held that it was a material part of this contract that such creditor should always have the right to the special tax, to be levied and collected in the same manner as county taxes at the same time might be levied and collected. Here the action of the party came into effect. He entered into this contract on the strength of the law of the state of Missouri, and, having entered into it with reference to that law, the supreme court will not allow the state to pass any law which impairs that obligation or in any way lessens the value of the contract. And in Louisiana, Ranger, v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 203, 26 L. ed. 182, Mr. Justice Field, in the opinion of the court, said: "The obligation of a contract, in the constitutional sense, is the means provided by law by which it can be enforced,—by which the parties can be obliged to perform it. Whatever legislation lessens the efficacy of these means impairs the obligation. If it tend to postpone or retard the enforcement of the contract, the obligation of the latter is to that extent weakened."

The language of the learned judge might well be applied in the interest of the appellant in this case. The means provided by the law for the enforcement of the contract at the time the contract was made and by which it could be enforced has been taken away by the legislature. The action of the legislature has not only tended to lessen the efficacy of the means which then existed, it has not only tended to retard the enforcement of the contract, but it has destroyed the means of its enforcement altogether, and has supplied no other means in its stead. It is the contention of the respondent, however, and, indeed, that is his main contention, that this act of the legislature is a statute of limitation in effect, and numerous cases are cited where statutes of limitation have been sustained, but we think there is a vast difference between the act in question here and the acts which were construed in the cases cited by respondent. The governing principle in this case is altogether different from the principle underlying statutes of limitation. Statutes of limitation are statutes of repose intended to put at rest controverted questions of fact, to insure to a degree certainty in testimony by compelling its production before it is affected by the infirmities of memory, thereby giving value to contracts. Such statutes are in the interest of morals, serving to prevent perjuries, frauds, and mistakes; hence they subserve public interests, and fall within the special authority of the legislature, which in the exercise of its discretion can regulate them, providing always that, where a statute of limitation is shortened, a reasonable time must be allowed to commence the action or present the claim. This constitutes no deprivation of a substantial right. It does not even change the remedy. It is a mere change in the time at which the remedy is to be applied, which can go no further than a possible inconvenience, and it is upon this theory that the shortening of the statutes of limitation is sustained. The creditor's rights are in no wise impaired. He is deprived of no remedy. His substantial right, viz., to collect his debt, remains. It is true he must reduce his claim to a judgment sooner than he was required to do, but when it is so reduced he can perpetuate his judgment, and the time for collecting the fruits of the judgment is not shortened. In this case, when the original judgment was obtained, the creditor had a right to perpetuate his judgment, either by a suit on the same, or by keeping it alive under the provisions which the law under consideration repeals, and the shortening of the time in which he could bring his action, as we have seen, in no wise rendered his judgment less valuable; for, notwithstanding the shortening of the statute of limitations, there was no shortening of the life of the liability. If the creditor or claimant does not obey the law when a reasonable time is given him in which to act, his loss is attributable to his own laches, and not to matters which are beyond his power to control. But altogether another principle is involved in the shortening of the life or of the actual demolition of the liability. If the debtor happens to be execution proof just at this time the creditor is helpless. No amount of diligence or industry will avail him. His judgment, which, before the passage of the law, had at least a prospective value, is now rendered absolutely valueless, and the future acquisitions which he had a right to rely upon he is now deprived of. The proposition is too well settled to call for discussion that there is read into every contract the law which was in existence when the contract was entered into, or, in other words, that the parties to a contract have the right to rely upon the law governing the contract at the time it was made, and that law which could reasonably have been taken into consideration will be presumed to have been taken into consideration. It is a matter of common knowledge that many young men in this country where the avenues of wealth are open to all who are intelligent, industrious, and frugal, who are known to be absolutely penniless, if they are known to possess the qualities mentioned above, can obtain money upon the strength and credit of their future earnings and accumulations, and the right to look to these future earnings and accumulations, under the law as it existed at the time the credit was given, is a valuable right, and may well be said to have been taken into consideration when the credit was given. A special review of all the authorities cited by the respondent showing that this act is in the nature of a statute of limitation, will be fruitless, for we think that none of them are cases of this kind. Here a right to a remedy—a remedy which is essential to the recovery of a debt—is not postponed, is not shortened, but is virtually destroyed, and we think without any question that the obligation is impaired, if, indeed, the judgment is not properly which under this law could be taken without due process of law. We therefore hold that the act in question is unconstitutional so far as it refers to contracts which were in existence at the time the law was enacted. We should have stated in the beginning that, so far as the common-law right to sue on a judgment is concerned, especially in this state where the common law is the law of the state in the absence of statutory enactment, the right is so overwhelmingly sustained by the authorities that it is fruitless to discuss it.

40 L. R. A.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule the motion to set aside the default and judgment.

Scott, Ch. J., and Anders, J., concur.

Reavis, J., dissenting:

The act of the legislature under consideration and set out in the opinion of the majority of the court in § 4 expressly repeals the former law of the state relating to a renewal of judgments. I do not understand that the opinion questions the power of the legislature to make this repeal, and that it is a valid act of the legislature, but to decide only that it cannot relate to contracts in existence before the enactment of the law. The only constitutional questions, then, are whether the law approved March 6, 1897, impairs the obligation of contracts or takes property without due process of law. No case from any court has been presented by counsel for appellant which, in my judgment, aids in the solution of the controversy, excepting those from the Supreme Court of the United States, which are also cited by respondent. It is claimed that the case of Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925, does not decide that when contractual rights are merged into a judgment they cannot be enforced, and the facts before the court are referred to to sustain this view. The facts in that case seem to be plain. It was a suit to compel the specific performance of a contract, and a money judgment was entered thereon in pursuance of the contract, and, if the defendant did not pay the sum specified and interest specified, plaintiff might have execution against the defendant. When the judgment was rendered, the legal rate of interest was 7 per cent. This rate was afterwards reduced by the legislature to 6 per cent. The court held that the judgment was obtained on a contract which contained no provision for interest, and that the allowance of interest was a matter of legislative discretion. Now, the point mentioned by appellant, that interest on the judgment was in the nature of statutory damages, and was therefore no part of the contract upon which judgment was obtained, was one decided in the case. But I think the question was also clearly raised, and a precise declaration of opinion, at any rate, that a judgment obtained upon a contract is not a contract within the protection of the Constitution. The court said: "It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff in error, as stated above, that the judgment is itself a contract, and includes within the scope of its obligation the duty to pay interest thereon. As we have seen, it is doubtless the duty of the defendant to pay the interest that shall accrue on the judgment, if such interest be prescribed by statute; but such duty is created by the statute, and not by the agreement of the parties, and the judgment is not itself a contract within the meaning of the constitutional provision invoked by the plaintiff in error. The most important elements of a contract are wanting. There is no aggregatio mentium. The defendant has not voluntarily assented or promised to pay. . . . Where the transaction is not based upon any assent of parties, it cannot be said that any faith is pledged with respect to it, and no case arises for the operation of the constitutional prohibition. Garrison v. New York, 21 Wall. 196, 203, 22 L. ed. 612, 614. It is true that in Louisiana Southern Bank v. Pittsury, 105 U. S. 278, 26 L. ed. 1090, and in Garrison v. New York, the causes of action merged in the judgments were not contract obligations, but in both those cases, as in this, the court was dealing with the contention that the judgments themselves were contracts proprio rigore." It will be observed in this case the Supreme Court discussed the very question of the distinction between judgments on torts, and which it had theretofore held were not contracts within the constitutional prohibition, and judgments on contracts, and held that the judgment is not a contract because the most important elements of a contract are wanting, i. e., the aggregatio mentium. Now, the cases cited by counsel for appellant sustaining Blackstone's definition of "judgments" are not at this day entirely correct. The very refined theories upon which Blackstone's definition is sustained are merely interesting from an antiquarian and historical standpoint. See Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405, 33 L. ed. 193; Louisiana, Folsom, v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648.

The appellant (plaintiff below) holds the contract of the defendant to pay a certain sum of money. Unquestionably the law for the enforcement of the contract, or rather the remedy existing at the time the contract was entered into, cannot be impaired by the state. But what was the remedy existing at that time? It was the right of action against the defendant for his breach of the contract,—his failure to pay the note when due,—and to recover a judgment against defendant upon which an execution could issue against all his property not exempt from execution. And by the then existing law the judgment so recovered against defendant was a lien, and the judgment and the lien existed together for six years. It was written in the law creating this judgment that its existence, together with that of the lien thereunder, was for six years. At the end of that time, by the law of its creation, the judgment was dead. It is true that another statute provided for the revival of the judgment. The latter statute, I think, was merely a voluntary act of the legislature, and not founded on any contract, but solely a question of public policy, and I do not think that by any force of reasoning it can be held that the parties in entering into the original contract had in mind such a remedy, and it was no part of the original contract. And so, too, with the lien which the original judgment here gave the plaintiff. It was strictly a part of the remedy confined to the original judgment. The plaintiff having brought his action and obtained his judgment, the contract then became absolutely merged in the judgment, and all the legislature has done in the act of 1897 is to take away the sanction of the state to a resurrection and revivification of a dying judgment. I think, also, the statute of 1897 is in the nature of a law of limitation. Limitation may be applied to remedies as well as to rights of action. They are alike in principle. Drury v. Henderson, 143 Ill. 315; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Hill, 86 Mo. 466; Tennessee, Bloomstein, v. Sneed, 96 U. S. 74, 24 L. ed. 612; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143; Sanger v. Nightingale, 122 U. S. 176, 30 L. ed. 1105; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 865.

In the last case the Supreme Court of the United States discussed the reasonableness of the time before the bar of limitations attached, and said: "Of that the legislature is primarily the judge; and we cannot overrule the decision of that department of the government, unless a palpable error has been committed. In judging of that, we must place ourselves in the position of the legislators, and must measure the time of limitation in the midst of the circumstances which surrounded them, as nearly as possible; for what is reasonable in a particular case depends upon its particular facts. . . . The business interests of the entire people of the state had been overwhelmed by a calamity common to all. Society demanded that extraordinary efforts be made to get rid of old embarrassments, and permit a reorganization upon the basis of the new order of things. This clearly presented a case for legislative interference, within the just influence of constitutional limitations. For this purpose the obligations of old contracts could not be impaired, but their prompt enforcement could be insisted upon or an abandonment claimed. That, as we think, has been done here, and no more." In that case a note was barred within nine months and seventeen days, i. e., a nine-months limitation was upheld. Rexford v. Knight, 11 N. Y. 808; People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 227; Jackson, Hart, v. Lamphire, 3 Pet. 280, 7 L. ed. 679. In People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 227, six months was held a reasonable limitation within which to do an act after the passage of the law. Vance v. Vance, 108 U. S. 514, 27 L. ed. 808. In Curtis v. Whitney, 13 Wall. 68, 20 L. ed. 513, it was said: "Nor does every statute which affects the value of a contract impair its obligation. It is one of the contingencies to which parties look now in making a large class of contracts, that they may be affected in many ways by state and national legislation. For such legislation demanded by the public good, however it may retract on contracts previously made, and enhance the cost and difficulty of performance, or diminish the value of such performance to the other party, there is no restraint in the Federal Constitution, so long as the obligation of performance remains in full force." And in Vance v. Vance, 108 U. S. 514, 27 L. ed. 808, the same court said of the state statute: "It is in its nature a statute of limitations. The right of the state to prescribe the time within which existing rights shall be prosecuted, and the means by and conditions on which they may be continued in force, is, we think, undoubted. Otherwise, where no term of prescription exists at the inception of a contract, it would continue in perpetuity, and all laws fixing a limitation upon it would be abortive. Now, it is elementary that the state may establish, alter, lengthen, or shorten the period of prescription of existing rights, provided that a reasonable time be given in future for complying with the statute." But a distinction is drawn between the limitation on the right to commence an action and the limitation on the right to issue an execution or the duration of a lien. I can see no difference. The judgment creditor has his full six years under his judgment in which to make his levies. If he does not, then his right may or may not be renewed, in the discretion of the legislature. It is not a matter of contract. As said in Louisiana, Folsom, v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936, also mentioned in the opinion of the majority: "A party cannot be said to be deprived of his property in a judgment because at the time he is unable to collect it."

Thus, the legislature of 1897 did not attempt to destroy the contract, if any existed, between plaintiff and defendant, but did withdraw a contingent remedy upon such contract, but which was not a part of the original contract. The contract, if one please, may be said to exist, but without remedy to enforce its moral obligation. Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How. 163, 12 L. ed. 1030; Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 620, 29 L. ed. 483; Gittings v. Stearns, 19 Ill. 376; Bell v. Roberts, 13 Vt. 582.

It is questionable whether the common-law right to bring an action on judgments exists as a strict matter of right in this state. This right to institute an action has been frequently questioned by the ablest jurists, and many courts upholding the right have granted it with reluctance, and it has been denied by some authorities. It seems, upon principle, to be a useless and expensive proceeding to allow a plaintiff to commence an action upon a judgment.

ment the day after it has been entered, and thus to put it within his power to accumulate costs and distress the defendant unnecessarily. It would seem that the courts should have the power to restrain the abuse of such action, and this evidently was the view held by this court in Abernethy v. Medical Lake, 9 Wash. 112, where the court refused to allow an action to be maintained upon a municipal warrant for the reason that any judgment obtained thereon could only be satisfied by the issuance of a like warrant, and that, therefore, there was no necessity for nor advantage growing out of such action. The principle decided in that case was surely the same as that in a suit upon a judgment, because the judgment creditor in all cases has the right to his execution on the first judgment, and it is the only right he obtains by his action upon a judgment and the recovery of the second judgment. See Pitzer v. Russell, 4 Or. 124; 2 Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 449; 1 Freeman, Executions, chap. 8,—which are in consonance with the views expressed here. And I do not think the common-law right to commence an action on a judgment in this state is a strict one, but more in the nature of a permissive one. I cannot conclude that the statute of 1897 under discussion is unconstitutional when applied to existing or prior judgments at the time of its enactment.

Gordon, J.: I concur in the views expressed by Justice Reavis.

D. R. NOBLE et al., Respts.,
v.
City of SEATTLE, Appts.

(..... Wash.)

Parents are not "heirs" within the meaning of 2 Hill's Code, § 138, giving a right of action to the widow and children of a man killed in a duel, and to the heirs or personal representatives of a person whose death is caused by wrongful act or neglect; but the word "heirs" is limited to the widow and children.

(Dunbar, J., dissents.)

(March 24, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John K. Brown and F. B. Tip-ton for appellant.

Mr. G. H. Fortson, for respondents:

2 Hill's Code, § 138, gives a right of action to the widow or widow and her children, or child or children, if no widow, of a man killed in a duel; to the "heirs or personal representatives" of a person whose death is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another; and to the "heirs or personal representatives" of a person whose death is "caused by an injury received in falling through any opening or defective place in any sidewalk, street, alley, square, or wharf," etc.

NOTE.—For the similar question of the meaning of the word "heirs" in an insurance policy, see note to Hubbard v. Turner (Ga.) 30 L. R. A. 584.

In Givens v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 89 Ky. 231, which is a case brought under § 1, chap. 57, Ky. Stat. in discussing the question, the supreme court says: "The action will be regarded as under the 1st section, and the recovery limited to compensation, and neither the widow nor the child can maintain such an action, but it must be instituted in the name of the personal representative." And also says that the personal representatives would hold the amount recovered like other assets left by the intestate.

In Conley v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 89 Ky. 402, which is an action brought by the personal representative for the recovery of damages for negligently causing the death of a person over the age of twenty-one years, who having never been married and left neither wife nor child, the supreme court of Kentucky held that the action could be maintained under said § 1.

Newport News & M. Valley Co. v. Dentzel, 91 Ky. 42; Morris v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 11 Ky. L. Rep. 698.

Other states having statutes somewhat similar to those of Washington allow recoveries by parents of adult children.

Denver, S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Wilson, 12 Colo. 20; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall. 90, 18 L. ed. 591; Barnum v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 30 Minn. 461; Schwarz v. Judd, 28 Minn. 371; Southern P. Co. v. Lafferty, 15 U. S. App. 193, 57 Fed. Rep. 536, 6 C. C. A. 474; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wangelin, 152 Ill. 138; Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. Lamb, 6 Colo. App. 255; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Henry, 75 Tex. 220; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Southwick (Tex. Civ. App.) 80 S. W. 592.

The object and purpose of these statutes is to provide a remedy whereby the family or relatives of the deceased, who might naturally have expected maintenance or assistance from the deceased had he lived, may recover compensation from the wrongdoer commensurate with the loss sustained, etc.

Hedrick v. Ilwaco R. & Nav. Co. 4 Wash. 403.

Section 138, 2 Hill's Code, gives right of action to heirs for death by wrongful act of an adult, and § 139, 2 Hill's Code, gives right of action to father or mother and guardian for death by wrongful act of a minor or ward.

Atrops v. Costello, 8 Wash. 149.

The words "heirs or personal representatives," contained in § 138, should have and receive their natural and ordinary construction. The word "heir" is usually and generally held to mean one upon whom the law casts his ancestor's estate immediately on the death of the ancestor.

9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 357; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 253.

It includes all that would take an interest in the deceased's estate by a statute of distribution.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall. 90, 18 L. ed. 591; Redfield v. Oakland Consol. Street R. Co. 110 Cal. 277.

The statutes of this state give parents a special interest in the savings and earnings of 40 L. R. A.

their children, in providing that children shall support their indigent parents.

See 1 Hill's Code, §§ 3088, 3089.

Supreme courts of other states have so held under similar statutes.

Chicago v. Keefe, 114 Ill. 222, 55 Am. Rep. 860; Denver S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Wilson, 12 Colo. 20.

Gordon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The respondents, father and mother, respectively, of Judson D. Noble, deceased, brought this action to recover damages for his death, claiming that it was caused by the negligent, careless, and wrongful act of the city in not keeping one of its streets in a safe condition for public travel. It appears from the record that in passing over a street in the city of Seattle, known as "Railroad Avenue," which runs along the water front, the deceased fell through the planking, and was drowned. The deceased, at the time of his death, was over the age of twenty-one years, had never been married, and left neither wife nor child. Respondents have been divorced for a number of years, and reside in different states. By way of an affirmative defense, the answer contained the following allegation: "And for a further answer, and as new matter, constituting a second affirmative defense to said second amended complaint, the defendant alleges that said Judson D. Noble, at the time of his death, was over the age of twenty-one years, and that he left surviving him no widow or child or other descendant." A demurrer to this defense was sustained by the lower court, and this ruling constitutes one of the errors argued and assigned on this appeal. Section 138 of 2 Hill's Code is as follows: "Section 138. The widow, or widow and her children, or child or children, if no widow, of a man killed in a duel, shall have a right of action against the person killing him, and against the seconds and all aiders and abettors. When the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death; or when the death of a person is caused by an injury received in falling through any opening or defective place in any sidewalk, street, alley, square, or wharf, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person whose duty it was, at the time of the injury, to have kept in repair such sidewalk or other place. In every such action the jury may give such damages, pecuniary or exemplary, as under all circumstances of the case may to them seem just." Section 139, Id., gives the right of action to a father or mother or guardian for death, by a wrongful act, of a minor or ward. It is the contention of the appellant that the word "heirs" as used in § 138, does not include parents or collateral relatives, but only includes the widow and child or children of the person whose death is caused by the wrongful act of another. In support of this contention it is pointed out that, by the plain terms of the statute, the right of action is specifically limited to the widow and child or children of a man killed in a duel; and it is urged that there can be no sound reason for denying it as to the parents in that case, and conferring it upon them in the case of death by wrongful act. As pointed out by this court in Atrops v. Costello, 8 Wash. 149, the first part of § 138, as contained in the present Code, was enacted in 1873, and the remainder of the section, as now found in the Code, was not enacted until 1875, when the legislature enacted it as an additional section. The question here presented has never been decided by this court, and, because of the dissimilitude between the various statutory provisions on the subject, the cases decided elsewhere are of little value. There is a greater similarity between these provisions of our own statute and those of the state of Kentucky relating to the same subject than we have been able to find elsewhere; and in a long line of decisions in that state it is held that the word "heirs" does not include parents or collateral relatives. Henderson v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 86 Ky. 389; Jordan v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 89 Ky. 40; Henning v. Louisville Leather Co. 11 Ky. L. Rep. 544; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Coppage, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 200. Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 57, § 3, provides that, "if the life of any person . . . is lost or destroyed by the wilful neglect of another person, . . . company, or . . . corporation, . . . then the widow, heir, or personal representative of the deceased shall have the right to sue," etc. Commenting upon this statute, the court in Henderson v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 86 Ky. 389, say: "No others sustain as near relation to, are so dependent upon, or have the same legal right to look for a support to, a person as his wife and children, especially those of the latter who may be minors. Therefore the injury resulting from his death, at the hands of another, to them is actual and direct, while to his collateral heirs it is remote and not immediate, and as to creditors it may not exist at all. We are unable to perceive any reason for giving to the widow and minor child the exclusive right to sue for and recover damages for the loss of the life of a person in a duel, or by the careless or malicious use of firearms, that does not apply with equal force when it is destroyed by wilful neglect. In each case the widow and child have been deprived of the society and support of the husband and father by the criminal or quasi criminal act of another. And, whether the injury has been done in one or another of the three modes denounced in the statutes, the consequences to them are the same; and it would seem they ought to be entitled to the same reparation. Therefore, looking to the reason for the statutory right to sue and recover damages for the destruction of the life of one person by the act of another, and to the necessity, when it can be properly done, of so construing each part of the General Statutes as to preserve the consistency of the whole, we are of the opinion that the widow and child or children have the prior right to sue for, and the exclusive right to, what may be recovered, in an action authorized by § 3, chap. 57. And, though the right to institute such an action is given to the personal representative, we think, for the reasons indicated, he can exercise that right only for the use and benefit of the widow and child, if there be any. It is, we think, 40 L. R. A.

also evident that the word 'heir' was intended to mean 'child,' and not to apply to any other description of person. What proportion of the amount recovered the widow and children may be respectively entitled to, whether the right belongs to adult as well as minor children, and whether the personal representative may maintain such an action in case there be neither widow or child of the person whose life has been so destroyed, are questions not involved in this case, and not decided." In Jordan v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 89 Ky. 40, the action was by the administrator; and in the answer it was pleaded in bar of the recovery that deceased left no widow or child. To this the plaintiff replied that the deceased left, as heirs, a father, mother, sister, and brother. Upon the question thus presented the court says: "No person has a legal cause of action against another for a wrongful or negligent act, and it may be safely said legislative power to give it does not exist, unless he has sustained pecuniary injury by it. For the foundation of every action for a tort is actual pecuniary injury, without which there can be legally assessed neither compensatory nor punitive damages. It seems to us clear it was not intended that creditors of the deceased should have any part of what may be recovered under § 3, chap. 57, and that the personal representative can maintain an action for the cause therein mentioned only for the use of the widow and heir. . . . As, then, the widow is entitled to maintain such action, and, as a necessary consequence, to share with the heir what is recovered, the single question to be determined is, what meaning the legislature intended to be given to the word 'heir,' as therein used. It must be either so limited as to mean 'child,' or so extended as to include collateral kindred of the deceased, however remote, if it can be fairly applied to them at all; for the right to sue for and recover punitive, which presupposes also compensatory damages, is given by the statute, without condition or qualification." And the court concludes that the word "heir," as used in their statute, means "child," and "does not include parents or collateral relatives."

We have quoted at length from these cases, because, in our judgment, they are peculiarly applicable to the one we are considering, and we have been unable to find any others that are. It is familiar law that interpretation may contract as well as expand the meaning of words used in a statute, when the harmony of the legal system so requires. That it was the intention of the legislature to limit the right of action in cases like the present to those heirs, and only to those heirs, to whom the deceased, while living, owed the legal duty of support, is further evidenced by § 148, 2 Hill's Code, which is as follows: "Sec. 148. No action for a personal injury to any person occasioning his death shall abate, nor shall such right of action determine by reason of such death if he have a wife or child living, but such action may be prosecuted, or commenced and prosecuted, in favor of such wife, or in favor of the wife and children, or if no wife, in favor of such child or children." It is true that that part of § 138 which gives rise to the present controversy was passed subsequent to § 148, supra; but we do not think that the latter section was thereby repealed. In the first place there are no express words of repeal, and it ought not to be construed as working any change further than its direct terms require. There is no direct conflict between the acts, and "presumption has no room to work." We do not think that §§ 8088 and 8089, 1 Hill's Code, have any bearing on this case. In substance, they require children to support their indigent parents. The obligation which these sections impose do not extend to all heirs, but only those in close relationship with the indigent person. For instance, a nephew is not required to support his uncle, and yet if the word "heirs," as used in § 188, supra, is to be rendered literally, not only nephews, but many other heirs, can maintain actions like the present. While, in general, the term "heirs" includes collateral kindred and those who take under the statute of distribution, we think that, in view of the entire legislation upon the subject, it never was intended that parents or remote ancestors might maintain actions like the present, and that the word "heirs," as used in § 188, should be held to include only those persons who are thereinbefore specifically mentioned, viz., "the widow, or widow and her children, or child or children, if no widow." It follows that the demurrer was improperly sustained. The other assignments require no attention.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to the lower court to overrule the demurrer.

Scott, Ch. J., and Anders and Reavis, JJ., concur.

Dunbar, J., dissenting:

I dissent. I think the right is conferred by the plain language of the statute, which is not susceptible of construction.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Emily SLAUSON, Appt.,

v.

GOODRICH TRANSPORTATION COMPANY, Respt.

(.....Wis.....)

1. To succeed in an action of ejectment plaintiff must connect himself with the govern-

NOTE.—Effect of prior decision on statutory new trial in real actions.

In Smyth v. Neff, 128 Ill. 310, it was held that a holding on appeal that a tax deed was valid and sufficient, and should have been held good, precludes any objections to its validity on a subsequent trial which were before made, or might have been made, on the record.

And in Roberts v. Baumgarten, 128 N. Y. 386, it was held that a stipulation on an appeal to the court of appeals on which an order is affirmed, that in case of affirmance judgment absolute should be rendered against the party making it in an action of ejectment, precludes such party from claiming a new trial as a matter of course, upon payment of costs and damages awarded against him under the New York statute.

So, in Ohio any defendant between whom and the plaintiff an issue of fact had been joined, which either party thereto has the right to have tried by a jury, has the right to a second trial, and the perfecting of his right to such trial by one of several defendants sued jointly does not open for retrial the issues which have been found between the plaintiff and the other defendants who have not taken a second trial. Sprague v. Childs, 16 Ohio St. 107.

And where the losing party in an action for the recovery of real property, tried on appeal in the district court, is entitled to a new trial of course in the same manner as in the court below, in estimating the number of trials to which he may be of right entitled in the district court no regard will be had to the number or to the result of the trials had in the court below. Marietta v. Emerson, 5 Ohio St. 288.

The general rule supported by a preponderance of authority, however, which would appear to be 40 L. R. A.

ment title, or with some grantor who was the common source of title of both parties.

2. When any document is offered in evidence and excluded, it must be brought into the record to have its competency determined on appeal.

3. An appellate court can take notice of papers which are not part of the judgment analogous to that of the principal case, is that where a statutory new trial is granted in an action of ejectment it stands as though there had never been a trial or judgment so far as the subsequent trial is concerned, and the action is fully open to be tried de novo. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Hewitt, 62 Wis. 316; Donahue v. Klassner, 22 Mich. 252; Sheldon v. Van Vleck, 106 Ill. 45.

The only difference being that after such trial and judgment the plaintiff cannot, as a matter of right, demand another new trial under the statute. Sheldon v. Van Vleck, 106 Ill. 45.

The awarding of a new trial as matter of right, in an ejectment suit, wipes out the verdict so that no judgment can be rendered on it, and prevents it from being a bar to a second ejectment suit. Edwards v. Edwards, 22 Ill. 121.

The granting of a statutory new trial in an action to recover the possession of land operates as a vacation of the former judgment without any special order setting it aside. Maxwell v. Campbell, 45 Ind. 360.

Thus, a judgment declaring a lien entered on a cross-complaint in a suit to quiet title is not a bar to a further prosecution of the suit in a case in which a new trial, as a matter of right, has been granted on the issue joined on the complaint. Bisel v. Tucker, 121 Ind. 249.

And a verdict and judgment in an action of ejectment is not conclusive on the parties, and the plaintiffs therein are not precluded on the second trial from controverting the evidence on the former trial on which a recovery was had; and where title depends upon a question of relationship, the verdict and judgment in the former trial do not establish the fact in the subsequent trial. Gehr v. Miller, 20 W. N. C. 367.

Nor is a judgment against the plaintiff, in an action of ejectment, after the rendition of which he roll only when they have been preserved and properly identified in the bill of exceptions.

4. A deed calling for land in a certain block, in a plat on file in a certain office, cannot be extended by parol evidence to embrace land not in that block as shown by the plat.

5. On a new trial in an ejectment suit, taken by the defeated party as matter of right under the terms of a statute allowing it, rulings upon the admissibility of evidence have no binding force.

(March 22, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Racine County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Affirmed.

Statement by Bardeen, J.:

Ejectment. The complaint is in the ordinary form, alleging that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of the premises described, and that defendant unlawfully withholds possession. The answer is a general denial and a further defense that plaintiff nor her ancestors or grantors had been possessed of the premises within twenty years preceding the commencement of the action. A judgment for plaintiff on the merits was affirmed in this court. 94 Wis. 642. Within the time limited by statute, defendant paid the costs, and took a new trial. At the opening of the trial, plaintiff's counsel made the following statement: "It is conceded for the purposes of this trial that Isaac Taylor, in his lifetime, owned all the lands between Second street and Root river that lay east of a point 140 feet east of the east line of Chatham street." Counsel for defendant responded: "I will examine the abstract of title and the deeds of the lands referred to, and I will inform you [addressing Mr. Fish, plaintiff's counsel] to-morrow morning whether I will agree to your requested stipulation or not." No further reference to this stipulation appears in the bill of exceptions. Plaintiff's counsel then offered in evidence a deed from one Taylor and wife to William Waterman, said to describe a piece of land immediately west of the lands in controversy. The date or place of record of this deed does not appear. Next, the will of Isaac Taylor, in which Emeline Taylor is named as devisee, was offered. Then followed a deed from Emeline Taylor to James H. Kelly, George Murray, and George W. Slauson. This deed purports to convey parts of block 7 of the original plat of Racine, and is assumed by plaintiff's counsel to cover the land in suit, but there is no evidence in the bill of exceptions from which this fact can be definitely determined. Plaintiff's counsel then called a witness for the purpose of showing "where Root river was at the time this deed was made." This testimony was objected to, and the objection sustained. Plaintiff's counsel then offered to make further proof along that line, and to show title from Kelly and Murray, through mesne conveyances, to plaintiff, of the property claimed in her complaint. References were made to plat No. 1 and map No. 8, which obtains a new trial under the statute and brings in a new party defendant by amendment, and, before a second trial, dismisses his suit, a bar to a second action brought by him against the defendant thus brought in. Sheldon v. Van Vleck, 106 Ill. 45.

So, an amendment to an answer in an action of ejectment, made after the granting of an application for the vacation of a former judgment, and for a new trial under Wis. Rev. Stat. § 3082, setting up an equitable counterclaim for the reformation of a deed under which the defendant claimed so as to make it convey only the undivided half of the premises therein described according to the intention expressed in a limiting clause therein contained, alleging a mistake in the granting clause in that respect, where the court decided on the previous trial that the deed conveyed the whole tract, is not inconsistent with the defense relied upon on the former trial, and the decision in the former case does not estop the plaintiff from setting up such mistake and asking for reformation. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Hewitt, 62 Wis. 316.

And under the Texas law that a judgment against a plaintiff in an action for the possession of real property is conclusive, unless he commences a second action within a year, the grantees of such a plaintiff are not precluded by the judgment in the original action from setting up their claim to the land in an action commenced within the year by the former defendant against them. Brownsville v. Cavazos, 100 U. S. 188, 25 L. ed. 574.

The doctrine of res judicata has no application to an action of ejectment where a second trial is provided for by statute, providing that at any time within a designated time after judgment either upon default or upon verdict the party against whom it is rendered, his heirs or assigns, upon the payment of all costs shall be entitled to have the judgment vacated and a new trial granted. Hammond v. Carter, 161 Ill. 621.

40 L. R. A.

And the rule that where the United States Supreme Court renders its decision, and remands the case to the court below with directions to enter the appropriate judgment, the judgment thus entered becomes in effect the judgment, not of the court to which it was remanded, but of the supreme court, and that it is not within the power of the lower court to change its results or directions in any respect, does not apply to an action of ejectment where the party is entitled by the law of the state in which the action arose to a new trial without showing cause, and in regard to which the trial court possessed no discretion. Smale v. Mitchell, 143 U. S. 99, 36 L. ed. 90.

In Hammond v. Carter, 161 Ill. 621, supra, Smyth v. Neff, 123 Ill. 310, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that it nowhere appears in that case that a new trial had been granted under the statute, and also that evidence not introduced on the first trial was introduced and considered on the second.

So, two verdicts and judgments in an ejectment suit, in one of which an undivided moiety of the land in question was recovered, and in the other the whole was recovered, are only conclusive so as to bar a third ejectment as to the undivided moiety, under a statute permitting two new trials as of course. Kinter v. Jenks, 43 Pa. 445.

And in Ives v. Leet, 14 Serg. & R. 301, it was held that one verdict and judgment, and one award of arbitrators, under Pa. act March 20, 1810, in favor of the same party, are not a bar to another ejectment by the other party under a statute, the intention of which is that to bar the right there must not only be two verdicts but a judgment on each, and not only two judgments but a verdict preceding each.

So, where, after a new trial under the statute has been awarded in an action of ejectment, the plaintiff dismisses his suit, all proceedings in the cause were offered by plaintiff, but which are not preserved in the bill of exceptions. Plaintiff thereupon rested her case. A nonsuit was granted, and judgment was entered for defendant, from which this appeal is taken.

Messrs. Quarles, Spence, & Quarles for appellant.

Mr. Thomas M. Kearney, for respondent.

When a judgment has been vacated it ceases to exist for any purpose, and the parties are relegated to the same position that they would have been in if the action had never been tried. Any estoppel created by the judgment as entered, or arising from it while existing, ceases with the order setting aside the judgment.

2 Black, Judgm. § 683, and cases cited; Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Hewitt, 55 Wis. 96, 42 Am. Rep. 701; Hewitt v. Wisconsin River Land Co. 81 Wis. 546; Edwards v. Edwards, 22 Ill. 121; Sheldon v. Van Vleck, 106 Ill. 45; Preachers' Aid. Soc. v. England, 106 Ill. 125; Hawley v. Simons, 102 Ill. 116; Hammond v. Carter, 161 Ill. 626; Donahue v. Klassner, 22 Mich. 252; Gehr v. Miller, 20 W. N. C. 387; Eichert v. Schaffer, 161 Pa. 519; Brownsville v. Cavazos, 100 U. S. 138, 25 L. ed. 574; Butterfield v. Walsh, 25 Iowa, 263; Smale v. Mitchell, 143 U. S. 99, 36 L. ed. 90; Newell, Ejectment, p. 833.

The original plat of Racine as recorded, having been referred to in the deed, and the land therein described having been conveyed according to it, the plat becomes an essential part of the description, to the same extent as though it were in fact incorporated therein.

3 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. p. 459; Lampe

v. Kennedy, 45 Wis. 28; Shufeldt v. Spaulding, 37 Wis. 662; 2 Devlin, Deeds, ¶ 1020; Powers v. Jackson, 50 Cal. 429; Alton v. Illinois Transp. Co. 12 Ill. 88, 52 Am. Dec. 479; Baxter v. Arnold, 114 Mass. 577; Noonan v. Lee, 2 Black, 499, 17 L. ed. 278; Doe, Miller, v. Cullum, 4 Ala. 576; Llewellyn v. Earl Jersey, 11 Mees. & W. 183; Heaton v. Hodges, 14 Me. 66, 30 Am. Dec. 731; Magoun v. Lapham, 21 Pick. 185; 1 Greenl. Cruise Real Prop. p. 223; Kenyon v. Knipe, 2 Wash. 394, 13 L. R. A. 142, and note.

If it be true that the description in the deed, read in connection with the plat, does not include the lands intended to be conveyed, then the plaintiff should seek reformation of the conveyance in equity before instituting this action.

Elofrson v. Lindsay, 90 Wis. 203; Miller v. Tracers, 8 Bing. 244; Gillespie v. Sawyer, 15 Neb. 536; Jones v. Johnston, 18 How. 150, 15 L. ed. 320; Newell, Ejectment, p. 556; Michigan Land & Iron Co. v. Thoney, 89 Mich. 226; Muldoon v. Deline, 135 N. Y. 150; Holcomb v. Mooney, 13 Or. 503; Campbell v. Johnson, 44 Mo. 247; Prentice v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 63, 38 L. ed. 947.

Parol evidence is inadmissible in an action in ejectment to vary the boundaries shown in a plat to which express reference is made in a deed for the boundaries of the premises conveyed, or to give construction thereto.

Davidson v. Arledge, 88 N. C. 326; Orton v. Harvey, 23 Wis. 99; Chapman v. Polack, 70 Cal. 487; Wood v. West Boston & C. Bridge Comrs. 122 Mass. 395; Proprietors of Kennebec Purchase v. Tiffany, 1 Me. 219, 10 Am. Dec. 60; Jones v. Johnston, 18 How. 150, 15 L. ed.

up to that time are wiped out, and are as if they never had been, and the judgment thus wiped out cannot be pleaded or given in evidence for any purpose in any subsequent suit. Preachers' Aid Soc. v. England, 106 Ill. 125.

And a record showing that the plaintiff in an ejectment suit filed his declaration in ejectment according to law against the defendant seeking to recover the possession of certain premises, alleging his seisin and ouster, is not admissible in evidence on a statutory new trial in an action of ejectment. Edwards v. Edwards, 22 Ill. 121.

So, restitution of the premises in question obtained on a former judgment in ejectment, does not change the burden of proof on a new trial, and compel the defendant to prove his own case. Donahue v. Klassner, 22 Mich. 252.

And a judgment in an action of ejectment, founded upon a stipulation of the attorneys for the respective parties as to the facts affecting the title, rendered by direction of the court, does not affect the right of the defeated party to contend upon a second trial that the facts admitted did not warrant a judgment against him. Hewitt v. Wisconsin River Land Co. 81 Wis. 546.

And a party to an action of ejectment applying for a new trial may be relieved from the effect of the stipulation of facts made by his counsel so that it will not be allowed to operate against him on the second trial. Hewitt v. Wisconsin River Land Co. 81 Wis. 546.

In Hewitt v. Wisconsin River Land Co. 81 Wis. 546, supra, Roberts v. Baumgarten, 128 N. Y. 336, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the unsuccessful party was held to have waived his right to a new trial under the statute by having stipulated, in order to maintain an appeal, that in case the judgment should be against him on the whole controversy, judgment absolute should be entered against him.

So, in Hawley v. Simons, 102 Ill. 115, it was held that a judgment in an action of ejectment in favor of the defendant, based on want of legal title in the plaintiff, is no bar to a second suit in ejectment by him upon a title subsequently acquired, the two titles not being the same; but it does not appear whether the second trial was a statutory new trial or not.

And in Eichert v. Schaffer, 161 Pa. 519, it was held that the fact that the defendants in an ejectment suit had testified in a previous ejectment suit that a testatrix under whom they claimed was non compos mentis does not estop them from changing their ground and insist that she was of sound mind at the time the deed under which they claimed was made; but in this case it does not appear whether the subsequent trial was a statutory new trial or not.

In some of the states it is provided by statute that upon a new trial granted as prescribed by law the defendant may show any matter in an ejectment suit which he might show to entitle him to recover the possession of the property, if he was plaintiff in the action. See N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1530; Mich. Comp. Laws, § 6244.

But the provisions of Mich. Comp. Laws, § 6244, that upon a new trial in ejectment the defendant may show any bar of a recovery in matters which, if he were plaintiff, he might show to entitle him to possession, is applicable only to cases where the plaintiff has taken possession, by virtue of a recovery, and a new trial is had under the statute, Cook v. Bertram, 37 Mich. 124. F. H. B.

320; Diedrich v. Northwestern Union R. Co. 42 Wis. 248, 24 Am. Rep. 399; Arnold v. Elmore, 16 Wis. 509.

A description of a block of land by number, according to the official map, will prevail over a description of the block by metes and bounds or courses and distances, if there be a conflict.

Masterson v. Munro, 105 Cal. 481. See also Hudson v. Irwin, 50 Cal. 460; Wolfe v. Scarborough, 2 Ohio St. 362; Birmingham v. Anderson, 48 Pa. 253; Gillespie v. Sawyer, 15 Neb. 536.

Messrs. Dodge & Fish also for respondent.

Bardeen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We are placed at some disadvantage by reason of a dispute having arisen between counsel as to the actual facts that were before the trial court at the time the motion for nonsuit was granted. A reference to the bill of exceptions, however, seems to settle the contention adversely to the claims of appellant. Neither have we been favored by any definite assignment of error upon which appellant relies, unless it be the broad statement that the court erred in the granting of a nonsuit. This requires an examination of the evidence received and offered on the trial, and the rulings of the court thereon. A party claiming title and right to possession of land, under a very familiar rule, must recover upon the strength of his own title, rather than upon the weakness of the title of his adversary. Ordinarily, the plaintiff must connect himself with the government title, unless both parties claim from a common source, as was the case in Sexton v. Rhames, 18 Wis. 99. But here neither the pleadings nor the proof offered show a common grantor. There is not a whisper in the evidence indicating from what source respondent claims title. Neither does the answer disclose any information from which a deduction can be made as to the source of respondent's title, nor does the evidence received or offered show that respondent was, or ever had been, in possession of the land. Such being the state of the record, it became necessary for the appellant either to connect herself with the government title or with some grantor who was the common source of title. Such necessity seems to have been in the mind of counsel for appellant when he asked for the stipulation referred to in the statement of facts. The stipulation not having been consented to, and there being a failure of appellant to connect herself with the original title, it follows, as a necessary conclusion, that her title failed, and the nonsuit was properly ordered.

Still further, there was no evidence that appellant or her grantors had ever been in possession of the disputed premises, so as to give rise to any presumptions which such possession might give. Ablard v. Fitzgerald, 87 Wis. 516. But, if this were not so, there is still another reason why, under the situation presented, the conclusion of the trial court was right. When evidence was offered to show the condition of things at the time of the execution and delivery of the deed from Emeline A. Taylor to Kelly, Murray, and Slauson, counsel referred to a certain plat marked "Plat

No. 1," and a map "No. 8," which were ruled out. These papers, taken in connection with this deed, it is argued, would have shown the condition of the land at the time the deed was executed, and were essential to plaintiff's case. Whether this be so or not, the failure to preserve them in the bill of exceptions leaves us powerless to determine their competency. When a document is offered and excluded, it must be brought into the record, in order that the court, on appeal, may determine its competency. Elliott, App. Proc. § 748. Map No. 8 seems to have been a paper that was used on the hearing of this case in this court on the former appeal. At the trial it does not appear to have been marked or identified, nor is it attached to or referred to in the bill of exceptions on this appeal, any further than has been stated. This court can take cognizance of papers or documents which are not a part of the judgment roll only when they have been reserved and properly identified in the bill of exceptions. The deed from Emeline A. Taylor to Kelly, Murray, and Slauson purports to convey a tract of land being "part of block 7 according to the original plat of the village, now city, of Racine, made by Moses Vilas, surveyor, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said Racine county." Respondent's counsel objected to the reception of this deed unless the plat referred to therein was produced. Appellant's counsel refused to produce the plat, because "it did not show the condition at the time the deed was made." The deed was admitted. A witness was then produced, who testified that Root river flowed into Lake Michigan at different places at different periods. Counsel announced that the purpose of this testimony was to show where Root river was at the time the deed was made. Further testimony along this line was objected to because the tract conveyed by the deed was in block 7, while the land sought to be recovered was not included therein, but was adjacent to block 87. In the colloquy which ensued between the court and counsel it must be assumed that, if the plat referred to in the deed should govern, the deed conveyed no portion of the disputed premises. This was the conclusion of the trial court, and upon which he sustained the objection. With this decision we certainly agree. The deed in question purported to cover only a portion of block 7, according to the original plat made by Moses Vilas, surveyor. "A deed containing a description, and referring to a map having lines drawn upon it, and marking natural boundaries, and the natural objects delineated on its surface, should be considered as giving the true description of the land, as much as if the map were marked down in the deed." 2 Devlin, Deeds, §§ 1020, 1021; Chapman v. Polack, 70 Cal. 487. And see Masterson v. Munro, 105 Cal. 481; Schenley v. Pittsburgh, 104 Pa. 472. In this case, the deed calling for a tract of land in block 7, according to a specific survey, cannot be extended to cover land in some other block by the evidence received or offered at the trial. If the deed in question does not convey the disputed tract when read with reference to the plat, then the grantee should seek its reformation. The fact, if it be a fact, that this deed was offered and received in evidence on the former trial, cuts no figure in this case. Under Rev. Stat. § 3092, respondent was entitled to a new trial upon compliance with its terms. When the judgment was vacated, the action stood for trial as if it had never been tried. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Hewitt, 62 Wis. 316; Hewitt v. Wisconsin River Land Co., 81 Wis. 548; Edwards v. Edwards, 23 Ill. 121; Hammond v. Carter, 161 Ill. 621; Dona-hue v. Klassner, 22 Mich. 253; Eichert v. Schaf-fer, 161 Pa. 519; Brownsville v. Cavazos, 100 U. S. 188, 25 L. ed. 574.

The view we have taken of this case renders it unnecessary to determine the motion of respondent to strike out a part of the record sent to this court. The provisions of rule 7½ are plain, and easily understood, and at this late day there is no excuse for a violation of it.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Anna BECKER, Respt.,

v.

City of LA CROSSE, Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

A city cannot accept a grant from another state to operate a toll road beyond its limits and the limits of its own state, or be held liable for defects in such road if operated by it, when it is not authorized to do so by the laws of its own state, although the toll road is made to connect with a city toll bridge that the city has constructed under lawful authority.

(May 3, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for La Crosse County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Bardeen, J.:

Chapter 37, Laws 1889, authorizes the city of La Crosse to construct a bridge across the Mississippi river from some point in the corporate limits to some point in the county of Houston, in the state of Minnesota, opposite the city, with all necessary approaches thereto, and to charge and collect a reasonable rate of toll. By chapter 325 of the Special Laws of Minnesota for the year 1889, the city of La Crosse was authorized to construct and maintain a wagon road commencing at any point on a lawful highway in the said county of Houston north of the south line of the Pine Creek road, and extending thence, by the most feasible route, to the boundary line between Minnesota and Wisconsin, opposite the corporate limits of the city, and to charge a reasonable rate of toll for travelers thereon. By § 5 of said act it was also provided that the city should be liable for all damages sustained by any person traveling upon said road caused by the improper construction of said road or want of reasonable diligence in keeping the same in repair. The city accepted the provisions of the act, and built a road, with the necessary bridges, from a point within its corporate limits westward to a point in Minnesota, a distance of about 2½ miles. The road runs across the Mississippi river bottom lands, and is built on a grade from 8 to 16 feet above the adjoining land. At the point where the accident to plaintiff is alleged to have occurred, which is about 65 feet west of the main bridge, the roadway is on a grade 16 feet above the adjoining land, 20 feet wide on the top, with a descending slope of about 1 foot perpendicular to 1½ feet horizontal, and without any rail or guard at the sides. On March 23, 1896, the plaintiff and her husband passed over this road from La Crescent to La Crosse, driving a single horse and buggy. Upon their return, the plaintiff was driving, seated on the left side of the buggy. Near the place of the accident they met two teams loaded with what is known as "Minnesota fencing." The first team was passed in safety, but, as they met the second team, the horse shied at a man wearing a fur overcoat, walking immediately in the rear of the wagon, cramped the buggy suddenly, and backed off the embankment. In attempting to jump out, the plaintiff was caught in the buggy in some way, and was dragged down the embankment, and injured. Notice was duly given to the city, and this action was commenced in the circuit court of La Crosse county, to recover damages for the injury sustained. The place of the accident is admitted to have been outside the corporate limits of the city, and within the boundaries of the state of Minnesota. The liability of the city is based upon the manner in which the road was constructed and maintained, there being no railing or barriers along the sides thereof. The jury found a verdict for plaintiff for $1,000. From a judgment entered thereon the defendant appeals.

Mr. Martin Bergh, for appellant:

This state cannot exercise any authority or jurisdiction over the territory of the state of Minnesota, nor can it authorize a municipality to exercise any such authority or jurisdiction.

If the officers of a municipality assume to act in excess of the authority conferred by the legislature, the municipality cannot be rendered liable for the results of such unauthorized action, either in contract or in tort.

See Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. § 338, p. 676; Albany v. Cunliff, 2 N. Y. 165; Morrison v. Lawrence, 98 Mass. 219; Cavanagh v. Boston, 139 Mass. 426, 52 Am. Rep. 716.

The language of a statute imposing liability upon a municipality for damages in an action of this nature will not be extended by implication.

Detroit v. Putnam, 45 Mich. 268; Facs v. Ionia, 90 Mich. 104; Bogie v. Wauvun, 75 Wis. 1, 6 L. R. A. 59.

The only act of negligence upon which the plaintiff claims a right of action is the failure to erect and maintain guard-rails or barriers along the side of the roadway.

Negligence is the proximate cause of an injury only when the injury is the natural and probable result of it, and, in the light of attendant circumstances, it ought to have been foreseen by a person of ordinary care.

NOTE.—The question involved in the above case seems to be here decided for the first time.

40 L. R. A.

Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co. 92 Wis. 164; Andrews v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 96 Wis. 348; Beall v. Athens Twp. 81 Mich. 536; Kingsley v. Bloomingdale Twp. 109 Mich. 340; Block v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 89 Wis. 371, 27 L. R. A. 365; McGowan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 91 Wis. 147; Davis v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 93 Wis. 470, 33 L. R. A. 654; Hawes v. Fox Lake, 33 Wis. 488; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256; Huber v. La Crosse City R. Co. 92 Wis. 686, 31 L. R. A. 588; Schillinger v. Verona, 96 Wis. 456.

If the proximate cause of the accident to the plaintiff, in this case, was attributable to anything else than the negligence of the defendant in failing to erect barriers or guards along the road in question, the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover.

Beall v. Athens Twp. 81 Mich. 536.

Messrs. Higbee & Bunge, for respondent:

If the horse of a traveler upon a highway becomes momentarily frightened and out of his control, and the traveler is injured by reason of a defect, the traveler is entitled to recover.

Hein v. Fairchild, 87 Wis. 265; Titus v. Northbridge, 97 Mass. 258, 93 Am. Dec. 91; Olsen v. Chippewa Falls, 71 Wis. 558.

All voluntary enterprises, and those from which the city derives profit, such as gas works, docks, waterworks, wash houses and ferries, are held to be within the corporate sphere of municipal enterprise.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 964.

And for its negligence in reference to the conduct of such business it is liable in the same manner as private persons and corporations.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, § 1141; Mulcairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 24; Wilkins v. Rutland, 61 Vt. 336; Welsh v. Rutland, 56 Vt. 228, 48 Am. Rep. 762; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 844, 28 Am. Rep. 332; Murphy v. Lowell, 124 Mass. 564; The Giovanni v. Philadelphia, 59 Fed. Rep. 303; Guthrie v. Philadelphia, 73 Fed. Rep. 688; Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 175, 72 Am. Dec. 780; Augusta v. Hudson, 88 Ga. 599; The F. C. Latrobe, 28 Fed. Rep. 378; Philadelphia v. Gavagnin, 17 U. S. App. 642, 62 Fed. Rep. 619, 10 C. C. A. 552; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 108, 23 L. ed. 822.

Bardeen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

From the statement of the facts involved in this litigation, it will be observed that the accident to the plaintiff happened on an embankment, some little distance west of the west end of the bridge across the Mississippi river, outside of the corporate limits of the city of La Crosse, and beyond the limits of this state; and it is insisted that the city of La Crosse built and maintained the road in question without any charter or legislative authority from the legislature of this state. It is not claimed that the charter gives the city any authority or power in the premises. The only power granted by the legislature is such as is contained in chapter 37, Laws 1889. 1 Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 4th ed. § 89, says: 40 L. R. A.

"It is a general and undisputed proposition of law that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers, and no others: First, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation,—not simply convenient, but indispensable." This declaration of the law meets with express approval in Trester v. Sheboygan, 87 Wis. 496. It is also a rule of law as universal in its application that the agents, officers, or even the city council of a municipal corporation cannot bind the corporation by the assumption of powers beyond those granted by the sovereign authority, except within the limitations above stated. It would seem like a truism to state that the legislature cannot grant authority to a municipal corporation to assume obligations or to charge itself with permanent duties to be performed outside of the state limits. Section 1, art. 9, Wis. Const., declares that "the state shall have concurrent jurisdiction on all rivers and lakes bordering on this state, so far as such rivers or lakes shall form a common boundary to the state and any other state or territory now or hereafter to be formed, and bounded by the same." The boundary line between this state and Minnesota is the main channel of the Mississippi river. Const. art. 2, § 1. In the exercise of its "concurrent jurisdiction" over the Mississippi river, this state saw fit, by chapter 37, before mentioned, to grant to the city of La Crosse the right to construct a bridge across the river to some point in Minnesota with all necessary approaches thereto. Admitting that this authority was properly conferred, for the purposes of this suit, the act referred to did not and could not grant the right to the city to build and maintain a highway 2½ miles long, on the bottom lands of the river in the state of Minnesota. There is therefore nothing in the charter of the defendant city, or in chapter 37, giving it authority to keep up, or making it its duty to maintain, the highway upon which the plaintiff was injured.

The question, then, recurs: Had the city the authority or right to accept the privilege granted it by the state of Minnesota? We have been referred to no case, and after careful search we are not able to find one, in which this precise question has been determined. Such a decision may be in the books, but the industry of both counsel and court has been unavailing to find it. While it may be admitted that the maintenance of this bridge and highway may be of material advantage to the city, and may add largely to the commerce of its inhabitants, it cannot be said to be of such paramount importance as to require any stretch of legal principles to sustain that right. It is true that municipal corporations are often granted proprietary or private rights, which they may exercise under the same perils and obligations as a private person; but these rights can only come from the source that gave it corporate existence. By the acceptance and exercise of these rights, the corporation assumes the same obligations and responsibilities, and the same duty to so exercise them as not to invade the rights of others, as fall upon private persons. The distinction between the rights which the corporation possesses in its governmental or public character, and those which fall to it in its proprietary or private character, originated in the courts, to promote justice, and has been frequently applied to escape technical difficulties, in order to hold such corporation liable to private actions. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 67. The general doctrine is clear that such corporations cannot usually exercise their powers beyond their own limits. The right to exercise extraterritorial powers can only arise by express grant of authority, as indicated in Thompson v. Moran, 44 Mich. 602, or by necessary implication from other powers granted, as is pointed out in Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474, 24 Am. Rep. 601. And the powers so exercised must be directly within the range of corporate purposes. Considerations of local policy, no doubt, induced the legislature to grant the city of La Crosse the right to build the bridge mentioned. The movers in this enterprise evidently appreciated the serious difficulties attending the erection and management of expensive public works situated partly in this state, and partly in Minnesota. It was to remove, in some degree, these difficulties, that the legislation referred to was obtained from the state of Minnesota. The corporation of La Crosse exists only by the grace of the legislative grant of this state. As before suggested, it possesses no power and can assume no obligations except such as may come from the original source. To permit it to accept rights, and to assume duties beyond the power of its creator to enforce or to regulate, would be an innovation we are not prepared to sanction. From the very necessities of the situation, it would have no power to regulate or protect its erections in a foreign jurisdiction. The noted case of Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 531, and 3 Denio, 438, illustrates some of the complications that might arise in that regard. To permit the city, no matter how desirable it may be, to expend its money, and to obtain rights and privileges beyond its own limits and beyond the limits over which its creator has jurisdiction, would be unwise and dangerous, to say the least, and against public policy. Its acts in this regard being ultra vires, the municipality cannot be held liable therefor, or for failure to perform such acts, to the injury of others. Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. § 338. And see Trester v. Sheboygan, 87 Wis. 496; Cavanagh v. Boston, 139 Mass. 426, 52 Am. Rep. 716.

In arriving at this conclusion, we have not overlooked the rule laid down in the celebrated case of Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274, to the effect that a corporation created by one sovereignty may, by comity; do business, hold property, and sue in the courts of other sovereignties of the Union, nor the line of decisions that hold that a city may take and hold the title to property outside of its corporate limits. In the first instance, the rule must be confined to trading or commercial corporations in contradistinction to municipal corporations; and, in the second line of cases referred to, the decisions are based upon the rule that the right to own property is not a sovereign right, and that the title to property may vest in the municipality even though it may not exercise the rights of sovereignty over it. Lester v. Jackson, 69 Miss. 887; Re New York, 99 N. Y. 569. And see McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. 867, 14 L. ed. 732. We therefore hold that the city of La Crosse was without authority, under its charter or the law of this state, to accept privileges or assume duties and obligations to be performed outside of the limits and beyond the jurisdiction of this state, and, owing no duty to the plaintiff with reference to this highway, cannot be held liable in this action.

The cases of The Giovanni v. Philadelphia, 59 Fed. Rep. 308, and Guthrie v. Philadelphia, 73 Fed. Rep. 698, cited to support the plaintiff's recovery, are quite unlike the case at bar. We have no quarrel with the proposition that, when a municipal corporation engages in things not municipal in their nature, it acts as an individual, and is responsible accordingly. In each of these cases the corporation defendant engaged in the performance of duties strictly within its chartered powers, and the recovery against it was based entirely on that ground.

There is another feature of this case that raises a most serious question,—Should the liability of the city to keep up this highway be conceded? The road in question was 20 feet in width on the top, in perfect condition, and, so far as the evidence shows, with ample room for the accommodation of the public, in view of its use. The only imperfection in the highway is the alleged failure to erect and maintain guards or barriers along this embankment. The city is not an insurer of travelers on its streets. It is only required to keep its highways in a reasonably safe condition for travel. Here, the way was broad and ample for the passage of teams, and it may reasonably be claimed, as a matter of law, that this highway met all the conditions required in such cases. That question however, we leave for future determination.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded with directions to dismiss the complaint.

Mary O'BRIEN, Respt.,

v.

City of LA CROSSE, Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

An examination by instruments to determine the condition of plaintiff's bladder, in an action for injury thereto, cannot be ordered without abusing the discretion of the court, where the purpose of it is to empty the bladder, and the evidence of plaintiff's physicians is that the examination would not be prudent, and that of defendant's physicians is that it would be safe if the bladder was healthy.

NOTE.—For the question of compelling a physical examination of the plaintiff, see also McQuigan v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 466, and note; Lyon v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 25 L. R. A. 402; Graves v. Battle Creek (Mich.) 19 L. R. A. 641; Carrico v. West Virginia, C. & P. R. Co. (W. Va.) 24 L. R. A. 50; Hall v. Manson (Iowa) 34 L. R. A. 207; and Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Huddleston (Ind.) 36 L. R. A. 681.

but would be absolutely dangerous in some conditions.

(May 3, 1888.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for La Crosse County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Martin Bergh, for appellant:

Trial courts have the right to order an examination of plaintiff by physicians, in personal injury cases.

White v. Milwaukee City R. Co. 61 Wis. 536, 50 Am. Rep. 154.

The power to compel a physical examination of the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries has been likened to the power to compel the opposite party to produce books and papers.

Walsh v. Sayre, 52 How. Pr. 384.

A majority of the courts which have expressed an opinion upon the question are, doubtless, in favor of recognizing the existence of such right and power.

Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 90 Ala. 71, 9 L. R. A. 442, 31 Cent. L. J. 376, and note 379; Schroeder v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 375; Devanbagh v. Devanbagh, 5 Paige, 554, 28 Am. Dec. 443; Anonymous, 89 Ala. 291, 7 L. R. A. 425; McQuigan v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 466, note; Baynton's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 634; Reg. v. Wycherley, 8 Car. & P. 262, note; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Thul, 29 Kan. 473, 44 Am. Rep. 665; 10 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 791, note; Newell v. Newell, 9 Paige, 25; Le Barron v. Le Barron, 35 Vt. 365; Anonymous, 35 Ala. 226; 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 590 et seq.; 1 Thomp. Trials, § 551; Hess v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 7 Pa. Co. Ct. 565; Sibley v. Smith, 46 Ark. 275, 55 Am. Rep. 584; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Dobbins, 60 Ark. 481; Miami & M. Turnp. Co. v. Baily, 37 Ohio St. 104; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Childress, 82 Ga. 721, 3 L. R. A. 808; Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 19 L. R. A. 641; Langworthy v. Green Twp. 95 Mich. 93; Hatfield v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 33 Minn. 190, 53 Am. Rep. 14; Loyd v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 53 Mo. 509; Sidekum v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 93 Mo. 400.

In some cases courts have refused the examination on the ground that the application therefor was not made at the proper time, or in a proper manner, or because of objections to the physicians who were proposed for the work, and not because they did not possess such power, and the right to exercise it in proper cases.

St. Louis Bridge Co. v. Miller, 138 Ill. 465; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Brunner, 128 Ind. 542; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 72 Tex. 95; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Finlayson, 16 Neb. 578, 49 Am. Rep. 724.

Messrs. Higbee & Bunge, for respondent:

The combined testimony of all the experts called in the case is that under such a condition as was found, the introduction of a catheter is dangerous and liable to produce cystitis. Plaintiff's attending physician regarded the operation as dangerous, and advised that it should not be permitted. The medical authority upon this subject is abundant and overwhelming.

Eichhorst, Professor of Pathology and Therapeutics, of Zurich, vol. 2, p. 326.

In courts which have been most pronounced in favor of the right of a defendant to require an examination, whenever the question as to the limitations of the examination have come before such court they have universally denied that the right extends to the application of any tests, or to the performance of any operation.

Schroeder v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 375; Shepard v. Missouri P. R. Co. 35 Mo. 629, 55 Am. Rep. 390; Strudgeon v. Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496; Chadron v. Glover, 43 Neb. 732.

Cassoday, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for a personal injury sustained by reason of a plank in an alleged defective sidewalk suddenly flying up and striking plaintiff across the abdomen, and throwing her down and permanently injuring her bladder, or muscles connected with the bladder. Issue being joined, and trial had, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and assessed her damages at $500. From the judgment entered thereon the defendant brings this appeal.

There is plenty of evidence to support the verdict. The principal contention is that it was error for the court not to compel the plaintiff to submit to further examination by physicians on the part of the defendant to ascertain the exact nature of her injuries and how long they had existed. When the first medical witness on behalf of the plaintiff was sworn, the defendant asked that before he should be examined, the defendant's experts should be allowed to make a personal examination of such injuries. It was then agreed, without any objection being made, that an arrangement would be made for such examination after the evening adjournment of the court. It appears that a full and complete examination was had by the defendant's physicians before the opening of the court the next morning, except that the plaintiff, under the advice of her physicians, refused to permit the introduction of a catheter into her bladder, for the reason that it would endanger her health. After the defense had sworn and examined four witnesses, the defendant asked for an order compelling the plaintiff to submit to an examination by instruments, to determine the condition of her bladder. A statement having been made as to the examination which had in fact been made, the court stated that, while the court had power to order an examination, it had no power to determine the extent of such examination. No exception was made to such ruling. The defendant's physicians testified to the effect that their object was to withdraw all the urine from the bladder; that, in a healthy bladder it was safe to do so; that there were conditions of the bladder where it was absolutely dangerous to withdraw all the urine therefrom at one time, and by so doing the walls of the bladder were certain to come together, and excite inflammation; that a coming in contact with the urine in the bladder would produce decomposition, and the decomposition had the effect of producing cystitis,—a cause that was very frequent. The plaintiff's physician testified to the effect that he objected to the introduction of a catheter, because he did not consider it prudent; that cystitis (inflammation of the bladder) was liable to follow. After the defendant rested its case, and the plaintiff's rebutting testimony had been put in, the defendant renewed its motion for an order that the plaintiff be compelled to submit to such further examination, which request was denied by the court, and the defendant excepted; and this is the only exception in the record on that subject. Was such refusal error? This court has held that "in an action for personal injuries, the court may, in a proper case, at the trial, direct the plaintiff to submit to a personal examination by physicians on behalf of the defendant."

White v. Milwaukee City R. Co. 61 Wis. 537, 50 Am. Rep. 154. It seems that courts differ widely as to the absolute right to such personal examination, in the absence of statute, by physicians or experts of the opposite party. Some courts deny the right altogether. Some hold that an absolute right to such examination exists at common law. Such differences of opinion may be accounted for in part by the difference in the circumstances under which such examinations were requested. The better opinion, in our judgment, makes the right, in the absence of statute, to rest in the sound discretion of the trial court. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 90 Ala. 71, 9 L. R. A. 442; Shepard v. Missouri P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 629, 55 Am. Rep. 390; Sidekum v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 98 Mo. 400; Owens v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 95 Mo. 169; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Dobbins, 60 Ark. 485, 486; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Childress, 82 Ga. 719, 8 L. R. A. 808; Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 19 L. R. A. 641; Strudgeon v. Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496; Hatfield v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 33 Minn. 180, 53 Am. Rep. 14; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Thul, 29 Kan. 466, 44 Am. Rep. 659; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Brunner, 128 Ind. 542; Chadron v. Glover, 48 Neb. 732.

In some of these cases the application was refused because not made in time to avoid the interruption of the ordinary course of the trial. In the case at bar there was no abuse of discretion. On the contrary, it would have been an abuse of discretion to force the plaintiff to submit to such an experiment with instruments, under the circumstances stated. There is no reversible error in the record.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Mary J. FOSTER, Recept.,

v.

FIDELITY & CASUALTY COMPANY of New York, Appt.

(..... Wis.)

1. Notice of an accident causing death.

NOTE.—On the question of forfeiture of insurance by failure to furnish proofs of loss immediately, see also Ermentrout v. Girard F. & M. Ins. Co. (Minn.) 30 L. R. A. 346.

For failure to furnish within time stipulated, see 40 L. R. A.

given to an insurance company twenty-nine days after knowledge of the facts was obtained, is not "immediate" within the meaning of the policy.

2. Waiver need not be specially pleaded in order to admit evidence thereof, but can be shown under an allegation of performance.

3. Correspondence and affidavits are not admissible to prove the fact of accident or cause of death, in an action on an insurance policy, although admissible to show compliance with or waiver of a condition as to furnishing proofs of death.

4. An opinion of a physician that death was occasioned by injuries, based on evidence before him, cannot be allowed, when the action does not show the facts upon which the opinion was based.

(May 3, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Portage County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on an accident insurance policy. Reversed.

Statement by Winslow, J.:

This is an action to recover upon an accident insurance policy issued by the defendant. The policy was in the principal sum of $1,600, and was issued June 29, 1895, to one Thomas F. Foster, a car repairer by occupation, in favor of his mother, the plaintiff, Mary J. Foster, in case of his death resulting from bodily injuries sustained through external, violent, and accidental means. The policy also contained a provision for the payment of weekly indemnity to the assured himself, resulting from injuries not producing death. The clauses of the policy which are material upon this appeal are as follows: "Against bodily injuries sustained through external, violent, and accidental means, as follows: If death shall result within ninety days from such injuries, independently of all other causes, this company shall pay the principal sum of this policy to Mrs. Mary J. Foster, his mother, if surviving, or, in event of her prior death, to the legal representatives of the assured: (a) or, if the loss by actual separation at or above the wrist or ankle of both hands or both feet, or of one hand and one foot, or the irrecoverable loss of the sight of both eyes shall so result within ninety days, the company shall pay the assured the principal sum before named, which payment shall terminate the policy; (b) or if the loss by actual separation at or above the wrist or ankle of one hand or of one foot shall so result within ninety days, the company shall pay the assured one half the principal sum before named, which payment shall terminate the policy." "This insurance does not cover disappearances, nor war risks, nor voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, nor injuries, fatal or otherwise, resulting from poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled; nor injuries, fatal or otherwise, received while or in consequence of having been under the influence of, or affected by, nor resulting, directly or indirectly, from intoxicants, anaesthetics, narcotics, sunstroke, freezing, vertigo, sleepwalking, fits, hernia, or any other disease or bodily infirmity." Among the conditions to which the policy was made subject were the following: "(4) Any medical adviser of the company shall be allowed to examine the person or body of the assured in respect to any alleged injury as often as he requires. (5) Immediate written notice must be given said company at New York city of any accident and injury for which a claim is to be made, with full particulars thereof, and full name and address of the insured. Affirmative proof of death, or loss of limb or of sight, or of duration of disability must also be furnished the said company within two months from the time of death, or of loss of limb or of sight, or of the termination of disability. Legal proceedings for recovery hereunder may not be brought till three months from date of filing proof at this company's home office, nor brought at all unless begun within six months from time of the death, loss of limb or sight, or the termination of disability. Claims not brought in accordance with the provisions of this clause shall be forfeited to the company." The insured died on the 5th of September, 1895, at Hurley, in this state, being then in the employ of the Wisconsin Central Railway Company as car repairer. The complaint alleged that he died by reason of injuries received by him by an accidental fall from a freight car at Hoyt's station, on or about August 31, 1895; and, further, that the said insured in his lifetime, and the plaintiff after his death, each fulfilled all the conditions of the policy; and that the plaintiff, on the 15th of October, 1895, and more than three months before the commencement of this action, gave the defendant notice in writing of the said injury to and death of Thomas F. Foster. The answer admitted that Foster died at Hurley, September 5, 1895, and that the defendant received from the plaintiff notice of such death on October 17, 1895, and not before, and further alleges that Foster died of disease and infirmities, and not by accident, and that no affirmative proof that his death was caused by accident has ever been furnished. At the time of the death of the insured, the plaintiff lived at Stevens Point, Wisconsin, and was not present when her son died. His death took place at an hotel in Hurley, and apparently as a result of a severe attack of cholera morbus. There was no direct evidence that the insured had met with an accident, but bruises were found upon his back, and certain testimony was given by the physician who attended him which, it was claimed, was sufficient to entitle a jury to find that his death was caused by an accident or fall which produced the bruises. A motion for nonsuit was made at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, which was denied, and a motion to direct a verdict for the defendant at the close of the entire evidence was also denied. A verdict was returned for the plaintiff for the full amount of the policy, and a motion to set the same aside upon exceptions, and because contrary to the law and the evidence, was denied. From judgment for the plaintiff upon the verdict the defendant appeals.

Steele v. German Ins. Co. (Mich.) 18 L. R. A. 35, and note; also Tripp v. Provident Fund Soc. (N. Y.) 22 L. R. A. 432; Cooper v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. (N. Y.) 16 L. R. A. 138.

40 L. R. A.

Messrs. Curtis, Reid, & Smith, for appellant:

The giving of "immediate notice" was a condition precedent to the right of action.

Blakeley v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 20 Wis. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 388; Knudson v. Hekla F. Ins. Co. 75 Wis. 198; Inman v. Western F. Ins. Co. 12 Wend. 459; Harriman v. Queen Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 71; Carberry v. German Ins. Co. 51 Wis. 605; Scheiderer v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 58 Wis. 18, 46 Am. Rep. 618; Heilner v. China Mut. Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. S. R. 578, 28 Jones & S. 362; Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 39 N. Y. S. R. 820.

Such a construction should be placed upon the word "immediate" as not to fritter away the substantial rights of the parties, nullify contracts, and promote fraud. The word "immediate," in this connection, is construed to mean such "convenient time as is reasonably requisite for doing the thing."

Richardson v. End. 43 Wis. 318; Stevens v. Breen, 75 Wis. 599; Kentzler v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. 88 Wis. 589; Harnden v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 164 Mass. 382.

It means as soon as possible, with due diligence.

Note to Ostrander, Fire Ins. p. 519; Baker v. German F. Ins. Co. 124 Ind. 490; Home Ins. Co. v. Davis, 93 Pa. 280; St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Kyle, 11 Mo. 278, 49 Am. Dec. 74; Griffey v. New York Cent. Ins. Co. 100 N. Y. 417, 53 Am. Rep. 202.

Where the facts are undisputed, it is a question of law for the court, whether the notice given was "immediate."

Peele v. Provident Fund Soc. 147 Ind. 543; Pickel v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 119 Ind. 291; Railway Pass. Assur. Co. v. Burwell, 44 Ind. 460; Mellen v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 606; St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Kyle, 11 Mo. 278, 49 Am. Dec. 74; Baker v. German F. Ins. Co. 124 Ind. 490; Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Brim, 111 Ind. 281; McFarland v. United States Mut. Am. Asso. 124 Mo. 204; Bennett v. Lycoming County Mut. Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 274; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 128 Pa. 392.

An unexcused delay of any length approaching forty days is not "immediate," and avoids all claim.

Niblack, Ben. Soc. 416; Inman v. Western F. Ins. Co. 12 Wend. 452; Trask v. State F. & M. Ins. Co. 29 Pa. 198, 72 Am. Dec. 622; Railway Pass. Assur. Co. v. Burwell, 44 Ind. 460; Mellen v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 606; Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 39 N. Y. S. R. 820, 183 N. Y. 356; Weed v. Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. 183 N. Y. 894; Whitthurst v. North Carolina Mut. Ins. Co. 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 485, 78 Am. Dec. 246; Edward v. Lycoming County Mut. Ins. Co. 75 Pa. 340; Inland Ins. & Deposit Co. v. Stauffer, 33 Pa. 402; LaForce v. Williams City F. Ins. Co. 42 Mo. App. 518; Pickel v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 119 Ind. 291; Green Bros. v. Northwestern Life Stock Ins. Co. 87 Iowa, 358.

It was error to admit in evidence, against defendant's special objections, the long line of correspondence between plaintiff's attorneys and the defendant which took place after plaintiff had submitted her proofs of death.

Where a waiver of conditions precedent to a right of action is relied upon it must be pleaded.

Home Ins. Co. v. Lindsey, 26 Ohio St. 848; Warren v. Bean, 6 Wis. 120; Warder v. Baldwin, 51 Wis. 450; Freeland v. Ritz, 154 Mass. 257, 12 L. R. A. 561; Baker v. German F. Ins. Co. 124 Ind. 490; People's Bank v. Etna Ins. Co. 42 U. S. App. 81, 74 Fed. Rep. 509, 20 C. C. A. 680; Cott v. Miller, 10 Cush. 49; Pomroy v. Gold, 2 Met. 500; Palmer v. Sawyer, 114 Mass. 1; Diehl v. Adams County Mut. Ins. Co. 58 Pa. 443, 98 Am. Dec. 307; Gill v. Rice, 13 Wis. 549.

The defendant must be guilty of occupying inconsistent positions, or of calling upon the plaintiff for something causing trouble and material expense to the plaintiff while leading the plaintiff to believe the policy still valid, in order to effect a waiver.

Kidder v. Knights Templars & M. Life Indemnity Co. 94 Wis. 588; Knudson v. Hekla F. Ins. Co. 75 Wis. 198; Engbretson v. Hekla F. Ins. Co. 58 Wis. 301; Connell v. Milwaukee Mut. F. Ins. Co. 18 Wis. 887; Devens v. Mechanics & T. Ins. Co. 83 N. Y. 168; St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Kyle, 11 Mo. 278, 49 Am. Dec. 74; Ermentrout v. Girard F. & M. Ins. Co. 68 Minn. 805, 80 L. R. A. 846; Ostrander, Fire Ins. § 229; May, Ins. §§ 507, 508.

Without restriction the admission of the documents was error, even though they might have been admissible for some particular purpose.

Mead v. Hein, 28 Wis. 539; Bonner v. Home Ins. Co. 13 Wis. 677; Hiles v. Hanover F. Ins. Co. 65 Wis. 585, 56 Am. Rep. 637; Kalk v. Fielding, 50 Wis. 389.

An expert opinion can be based only on facts given in evidence, and those facts must be definitely specified or pointed out by the question calling for the opinion, or by the opinion given.

Rogers, Expert Testimony, 2d ed. § 86; Maitland v. Gilbert Paper Co. (Wis.) 72 N. W. 1124; Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 69, 46 Am. Rep. 26; Kreuziger v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 73 Wis. 158; VanDeusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 120; Burns v. Barenfield, 84 Ind. 43; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Falvey, 104 Ind. 409.

No "immediate" notice of death was given to the defendant at New York city, and a verdict for defendant should have been directed on that ground.

There could be no reason for the delay other than to allow the body of the deceased to decompose and thus destroy the last means of determining with certainty the cause of the death. No argument can bolster up the claim that a period of thirty days was "reasonably requisite" to enable the plaintiff to do so simple an act as giving notice to the defendant.

A nonsuit should have been granted because the plaintiff gave no evidence as to the manner in which the insured received the bruises alleged to have caused his death, nor as to any of the circumstances thereof, and consequently did not show that his death was caused by such an accident as was covered by the terms of the policy.

Sohier v. Norwich F. Ins. Co. 11 Allen, 886; Coburn v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 145 Mass. 226; Freeman v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 572; 40 L. R. A.

LaPoint v. Cady, 2 Pinney, 515; Central Bridge Corp. v. Butler, 2 Gray, 180; Bremmer v. Green Bay, S. P. & N. R. Co. 61 Wis. 114; Bennett v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 19 Wis. 146. Messrs. Cate, Sanborn, Lamoreux, & Park, for respondent:

When immediate notice is required by the policy, how far the notice given complies with the conditions of the policy is a question for the jury.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 92, note 4; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 938; Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Gould, 80 Ill. 888; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Seammon, 100 Ill. 644.

"Immediately" means such convenient time as was reasonably required for giving the notice after discovery of death.

Kentzler v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. 88 Wis. 589.

The claim of waiver need not be pleaded in the complaint.

Zielke v. London Assur. Corp. 64 Wis. 442; McBride v. Republic F. Ins. Co. 80 Wis. 562; Parker v. Amazon Ins. Co. 84 Wis. 363; Killips v. Putnam F. Ins. Co. 28 Wis. 472, 9 Am. Rep. 506; O'Conner v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 81 Wis. 160.

A waiver of proofs of loss may be proved under the allegation of performance.

Murphy v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 70 Mo. App. 78; Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Winfield (Kan. App.) 51 Pac. 567.

The proofs of loss were retained by the defendant, without objections as to time or sufficiency, and afterwards the company entered into negotiations and solicited interviews with the plaintiff looking to an adjustment of the policy. The jury might find from such conduct that the appellant waived all objections to the time the notice of death proofs was furnished.

Messmer v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 24 App. Div. 241.

The evidence before the court was sufficient to show a waiver of proofs of death and loss.

Warner v. Peoria Marine & F. Ins. Co. 14 Wis. 319; Parker v. Amazon Ins. Co. 84 Wis. 363; Harriman v. Queen Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 71; McBride v. Republic F. Ins. Co. 80 Wis. 562; Fauat v. American F. Ins. Co. 91 Wis. 158, 80 L. R. A. 783; Dyer v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 108 Iowa, 524, 72 N. W. Rep. 681; McCarrel v. Phenix Ins. Co. 64 Minn. 193; Levine v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 66 Minn. 188; Alston v. Phenix Ins. Co. 100 Ga. 287; Killips v. Putnam F. Ins. Co. 28 Wis. 472, 9 Am. Rep. 506.

Winslow, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There are several reasons why this judgment must be reversed.

1. The policy provides that immediate written notice must be given to the company of any accident and injury for which a claim is to be made, with full particulars thereof. This was a condition precedent to a recovery. The word "immediate," in this connection, means such convenient time as was reasonably necessary under the circumstances to do the thing required. Kentzler v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. 88 Wis. 596. Where the facts are uncertain or disputed, and the inferences doubtful, the question whether timely notice was given is one for the jury under proper instructions; but, where the facts are not in dispute, and the inferences are certain, it is a question of law for the court. Kimball v. Howard F. Ins. Co. 8 Gray, 38; Baker v. German F. Ins. Co. 124 Ind. 490; Mellen v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 609. Here the facts as to the diligence used in giving the notice are not in dispute. The accident is claimed to have taken place somewhere from the 1st to the 5th of September. The death of the insured occurred September 5. The plaintiff went to Hurley to ascertain the cause of her son's death, September 14, and remained until the 17th. She herself testifies that while there she became satisfied as to the cause of his death. We have discovered nothing tending to show that she ever obtained any further information. She took no further steps until October 2, when she employed attorneys, and on October 12 one of her attorneys went to Hurley, and procured affidavits of the attending physician and the undertaker at Hurley, and returned to Stevens Point October 14. On October 16, a notice, stating that the death resulted from an accident, describing it as a fall from a box car on or about August 31, 1895, at Hoyt's station, and an affidavit showing burial of the body by an undertaker at Stevens Point, were mailed to the defendant at New York city, and received not earlier than October 17. Thus the proof is that the beneficiary knew the facts which satisfied her that her son's death was accidental as early as September 17, and gave no notice of the accident to the company until the following 16th day of October, an interval of twenty-nine days. A notice given after the lapse of such a length of time with knowledge of the facts cannot be held "immediate" notice. The decisions to this effect are numerous, and well-nigh unanimous. Niblack, Ben. Soc. § 416. It was argued that the requirement of notice applied only to accidents or injuries not resulting in death, but we think the plain words of the policy cannot be so construed. The provision is that immediate notice must be given of "any accident or injury for which a claim is to be made." An accident resulting in death is certainly as much one for which a claim is to be made as one resulting simply in disablement, and the necessity of a notice is certainly fully as great, if not greater. Under the proofs before us we hold, as matter of law, that the notice given was not an immediate notice.

2. In addition to the notice, the policy in suit requires affirmative proof of death to be furnished to the company within two months from the time of death. After the notice and affidavit of the Stevens Point undertaker, before mentioned, were mailed to the company, October 16, some correspondence took place between the plaintiff's attorneys and the company or its claim agents relative to the claim of the plaintiff. On December 13, 1895, the plaintiff's attorneys wrote that they had additional proofs that Foster's death was accidental, and offered to furnish them. To this the defendant's assistant examiner of claims replied that, "we would be pleased to receive any statements you may have bearing on the matter," whereupon the plaintiff's attorneys mailed to the examiner two affidavits,—one by the undertaker at Hurley, describing the bruises on the body of the deceased, and one by the attending physician, stating his treatment of the case; also stating his belief from information received by him, and also in answer to a hypothetical question, that the death of the deceased was due remotely to injuries received by the deceased. These affidavits appear to have been received at New York about December 20, and to have been retained by the company. January 8, 1896, the examiner wrote, in effect, denying liability, because the death was not the result of accident, and calling attention to the plaintiff's failure to make her claim in accordance with condition 5 of the policy. There was also some subsequent correspondence, and the entire correspondence and the affidavits were offered and received in evidence generally against general objections of incompetency and immateriality as well as the specific objection that no foundation had been laid in the pleadings for such evidence. This evidence, if admissible at all, was admissible only to show that sufficient proofs of death had been furnished, and that the requirement that such proofs be furnished within two months after the death had been waived by the acts of the company. It is said by appellant that no waiver could be shown, because it was not pleaded, and that, if waiver was relied upon, it must be specially pleaded, and cannot be shown under an allegation of performance of conditions. This contention seems to be adversely ruled against by the decision in the case of Zielke v. London Assur. Corp. 64 Wis. 442, and must be overruled upon the authority of that case. But, as before stated, it could only be received to show the fact of waiver, and that the conditions of the policy as to furnishing proof had been thus substantially complied with, and we regard it as sufficient for that purpose; but it was not admissible as substantive proof of any fact as to the accident, or the cause of the death. Hill v. Hanover F. Ins. Co. 65 Wis. 585, 56 Am. Rep. 637. It was, however, introduced, and received generally in the case, and was used and read to the jury as proof tending to show that the death was the result of accident. Both the letters and the affidavits contained many statements of fact and opinions bearing on the cause of death which were well calculated to be regarded by the jury as substantive proof upon the question, and it was error to receive it and allow it to be used for this purpose.

8. Dr. Turner, the physician who treated the deceased, was asked the following question upon his direct examination: "State now whether, in your judgment, his death was occasioned by those injuries, from all the evidence you had before you there at that time." An objection to the question was overruled, and he answered the question affirmatively. This was error, because the question does not show the facts upon which his opinion was based. It may be that it was based largely upon hearsay. Indeed, his further examination tended to show that such was the fact. Such an opinion should be based either on his examination of the case or upon a proper hypothetical question, and not upon a question which allows the witness to base his answer upon his own idea of what is evidence and what is not evidence.

4. We cannot refrain from saying that, in our judgment, the evidence was entirely insufficient to sustain the verdict that the death of Foster was the result of accident, independently of all other causes. It would not be useful to attempt to review all of the evidence, which was very voluminous. It is sufficient to say that there was no direct proof of any accident. The body of Foster had some bruises of recent origin, and one or two small abrasions upon the back, at the crest of the pelvis, and along the spine, but how or when they were inflicted does not appear. The evidence was very strong tending to show that his death was the result of a sudden and severe attack of cholera morbus or dysentery. The medical expert evidence which it is claimed justifies a conclusion that his difficulty resulted from the injuries which produced the bruises was very unsatisfactory in its character and inconclusive. Certainly it comes short of proving that any accident, independent of all other causes, produced his death.

Judgment reversed, and action remanded for a new trial.

MILWAUKEE COLD STORAGE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

Avelyn I. DEXTER et al., Respts.

(.....Wis.....)

1. A sale of land to a corporation by one of its promoters, who purchased the land before anything was done toward the formation of the corporation, for less than the amount for which he transferred it to such corporation, will not be held fraudulent as to the corporation or any subscriber, in the absence of any false statement or misrepresentation, because he personally paid a commission to certain influential persons to induce them to subscribe for the capital stock, nor because he personally paid money to his grantor after the latter's subscription to the capital stock to remove his dissatisfaction at having sold the land so cheaply,—especially where his contract of purchase precluded him from transferring the land without the approval of such grantor.
2. A statement in the prospectus of a corporation prepared by a promoter of the corporation who organized it, with the intention of transferring to it certain real estate previously purchased by him, as follows: "Cost of ground $40,000,"—is not a representation that the land actually cost the promoter such amount, but that it is to be estimated at that amount in the transfer to the corporation.
3. A promoter of a corporation who transfers to it certain land purchased by him before anything was done toward the formation of the corporation cannot be held liable to the corporation for an amount received from it in excess of the amount actually paid by him, in the absence of a misrepresentation or false statement by him, although he did not disclose the amount paid by him to any subscriber, where all the subscribers had the opportunity to ascertain the condition and value of the land, and knew the price charged the corporation.

4. The provision of the Wisconsin supreme court rule 9, that in cases depending on the evidence the brief of appellant must contain a concise statement of the leading facts or conclusions which the evidence establishes or tends to prove, does not mean a recital or re-statement of the evidence, but merely that such facts or conclusions should be stated with a reference to the names of the witnesses and the places in the printed cases where the evidence which establishes or tends to prove such facts or conclusions may be found.

(April 12, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Milwaukee County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover profits which defendants were alleged to have made as promoters of the plaintiff company out of transactions in regard to its organization. Affirmed.

Statement by Cassoday, Ch. J.:

This action was commenced February 29, 1896, to recover from the defendants, Dexter and Godfrey, $18,187.50, with interest thereon from February 24, 1893, and have the same declared to be a lien upon their shares of stock in the plaintiff company, and that the same be sold to satisfy the amount so found due to the plaintiff from them, or, on default, their stock, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy such decree, be canceled, and that the plaintiff have judgment against them for any deficiency. The defendants separately answered, by way of admissions, denials, and counter allegations. The cause having been tried by the court, the facts found or proved and admitted are to the effect: That April 15, 1892, Lindsay Bros. had possession of the land in question, under a land contract from the Milwaukee Land Company. That on that day the defendant Dexter applied to Lindsay Bros. for the purchase of the land. That they at first asked $30,000 for the land, but finally agreed orally to take $22,500, on the conditions stated in a written contract to be drawn therefor. That the defendant Dexter then paid Lindsay Bros. $1,000 as a part of such purchase price. That April 17, 1892, he paid them thereon the further sum of $5,000. That April 20, 1892, such land contract from Lindsay Bros. was drawn up and executed by them to the defendant Dexter, and the same is to the effect that Lindsay Bros., for and in consideration of $22,500 to be paid by the defendant Dexter as thereafter specified, and the keeping of other promises, agreements, and stipulations by him therein made and contained, thereby agreed to convey a good title to the defendant Dexter, by warranty deed or deeds, to the real estate therein described, and further agreed to procure the construction of a suitable switch for the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway Company on the right of way belonging to the company, so that the center of the track would be 6 feet east of the east line of NOTE.—For duties and liabilities of promoters to the corporation, and its members, see note to Yale Gas Stove Co. v. Wilcox (Conn.) 25 L. R. A. 90.

40 L. R. A.

As to relations and rights of syndicate members, see note to Baltimore Trust & G. Co. v. Hambleton (Md.) ante, 216.

the land described, and suitable for receiving and shipping merchandise from the building or buildings to be erected on said land. That in consideration of such agreements the defendant Dexter did therein covenant and agree to purchase and pay for the land described $22,500, as follows, to wit: The $6,000 at the time of the execution and delivery of such agreement, and which had in fact already been paid, as mentioned, and $16,500 in six equal instalments of $2,750 each, payable on or before December 1st in each of the years 1892 to 1897, inclusive, with interest at 6 per cent per annum, payable annually, on the deferred payments. That the defendant Dexter did therein further covenant and agree that he would, on or before December 10, 1893, improve the premises by erecting thereon substantial and new buildings, machinery, and outfits, and use the same until April 20, 1899, in conducting a cold-storage business; that all such improvements should remain on the premises, and not be removed therefrom or destroyed until the final payment for the premises, and that he would promptly pay as so agreed, and would regularly pay all taxes and assessments, general or special, lawfully imposed upon the premises prior to the return thereof; that in case the defendant Dexter should fail to make the payments aforesaid, or any of them, punctually, or should fail to perform all of his agreements and stipulations aforesaid, strictly and literally (times of payment and performance being of the essence of the contract), then Lindsay Bros. were to have the right to declare the contract null and void, and all the rights and interests thereby created or then existing in favor of defendant Dexter should thereupon utterly cease and determine, and the premises, and the right to the possession thereof, should revert to and revest in Lindsay Bros. as absolutely, fully, and perfectly as if such contract had never been made. That the defendant Dexter did thereby covenant and agree that he would make no transfer of the contract, nor of his rights or interests in the premises, without the approval of Lindsay Bros. That it was thereby further mutually covenanted and agreed that the covenants and agreements therein specified should be binding upon the successors, heirs, legal representatives, and assigns of the respective parties. That April 20, 1892, the defendant Dexter entered into the possession of the real estate, and the several tenants occupying buildings on the premises thereafter attorned and paid rent therefor to him. That the defendant Dexter was then, and had been for a long time prior thereto, engaged in the business of cold-storage warehousing at Whitewater, and the same had been very profitable. That he was also the inventor of certain devices used in such business, and the owner of letters patent on the same, and had for a long time theretofore been engaged in the business of erecting and constructing cold storage warehouses, upon contract, for others. That such real estate was not purchased by the defendant Dexter for or on behalf of the plaintiff corporation, nor with the intention of turning the same over to, or disposing of the same in any manner to, the plaintiff or any corporation. That he first conceived the idea of forming a corporation for the purchase of the land in question from himself, and the carrying on upon the land the business of cold-storage warehousing, May 5, 1892, and that prior to that date neither of the defendants did anything looking towards the formation of the plaintiff corporation, or any other corporation, and did not consult any person relative to the formation of the corporation, or ask any person to become in any way interested therein. That the defendant Dexter so purchased the land from Lindsay Bros. for the purpose of building and operating thereon a cold-storage warehouse himself, but after failing to dispose of some other property owned by him, from which he hoped and expected to secure funds necessary for that purpose, he, on May 5, 1892, proposed to the defendant Godfrey, who carried on a large commission business in Milwaukee, and whose patronage of such cold-storage warehouse would add much to the probable success of the enterprise, that a corporation be formed, with a capital stock of $100,000, to take from the defendant Dexter the land, and for the sum of $40,000, and build and operate a cold-storage warehouse thereon; that he (the defendant Dexter) would subscribe for $60,000 of such capital stock; that in case he (the defendant Godfrey) would give his own subscription, or procure the subscription of other commission men, together with his own, to the remaining $40,000 in capital stock, he (the defendant Dexter) would pay him (Godfrey) for such services in obtaining such subscriptions, and also (to induce the defendant Godfrey to become such stockholder, and thus secure his valuable patronage for such warehouse business) the sum of $4,000. That a part of the $4,000 was added to the purchase price which the projected corporation was to pay for the land, but was to be paid by the defendant Dexter, out of his own money, to the defendant Godfrey, for the consideration aforesaid. That the purpose thereof was to carry the projected business in the manner aforesaid. That after May 5, 1892, the defendant Dexter also solicited E. J. Lindsay, of the firm of Lindsay Bros., to subscribe for and take stock in the plaintiff corporation for the purpose of purchasing the land at $40,000. That E. J. Lindsay subscribed for and agreed to take 40 shares of the stock, and pay therefor $5,000. That some time after such subscription E. J. Lindsay claimed that, under the circumstances of the recent sale of the land by Lindsay Bros. to the defendant Dexter at such reduced price, he thought it was unfair to charge him for his interest at so high a price. That thereupon the defendant Dexter thought he would make it right, and afterwards gave him his check for $550; that is to say, to charge him for his interest at the rate of $30,000 for the land, — the price first exacted by Lindsay for the land. That both the defendant Godfrey and Lindsay subscribed for stock in the plaintiff corporation prior to June 4, 1892. That articles of incorporation of the plaintiff were executed May 5, 1892, and filed and recorded, as required by law, May 9, 1892. That at the time the first meeting of the corporation was held for the purpose of organization (June 4, 1892), and prior to that at that time, the following persons had subscribed to the stock of the corporation, and agreed to take and pay for the number of shares set opposite their names, as follows:

A. I. Dexter	500 shares	$50,000
E. R. Godfrey	160 "	16,000
E. R. Godfrey, Jr.	40 "	4,000
W. H. Stevens	20 "	2,000
I. P. Tichenor	20 "	2,000
N. L. Kneeland	20 "	2,000
G. C. Rogers	20 "	2,000
E. K. Dexter	50 "	5,000
E. J. Lindsay	50 "	5,000

Making an aggregate of 880 " am'tg to $88,000

—That up to that time no other person had subscribed for such stock. That between May 7, and May 9, 1892, a prospectus of such proposed corporation was prepared by the defendant Dexter, to be presented to, and which was in fact presented to, each of the persons so subscribing for such stock, before making such subscription. That such prospectus stated, among other things, that the proposition was for the Milwaukee Cold-Storage Company to have capital stock to the amount of $100,000; that the value of the capital stock to be so issued would be $55,000; that a mortgage bond would be given for $45,000; that the cost of the ground would be $40,000; that the cost of building and fittings would be $60,000. That each one of the persons so subscribing knew that the land in question belonged to the defendant Dexter; that Dexter was not purchasing, and had not purchased, the land for the projected corporation. That each one of the foregoing persons signed the subscription to the stock with the understanding that, as to him, such property should be purchased by the plaintiff corporation from the defendant Dexter for $40,000, but without knowledge of, and without inquiry as to, what the property cost the defendant Dexter, except that the defendant Dexter and said Lindsay had such knowledge, and the defendant Godfrey and said Lindsay each had knowledge, of the payments to be made to him as aforesaid. That said Godfrey had reason to believe, and did believe, that the defendant Dexter was selling the land to the corporation for more than it cost him, though he did not know, and never inquired, what Dexter had paid, or agreed to pay, for the land, nor what profit he was making, and Dexter never told him. That at the first meeting, for the purpose of organizing the plaintiff corporation by the election of officers and the acceptance of stock subscriptions, June 4, 1892, there were present the subscribers for stock mentioned, and it was then and there voted that the plaintiff purchase the land in question for $40,000. That the defendants Godfrey and Dexter, and also said Lindsay, with the other subscribers, attended at such meeting. That each of such nine subscribers subscribed with the understanding and agreement that the land in question should be bought by the plaintiff from the defendant Dexter for $40,000. That neither the defendants Godfrey nor Dexter nor said Lindsay in any way acted for the plaintiff, or its subscribers, as agent to negotiate or make the purchase of said land for it or them, except by joining in the vote aforesaid. That such purchase by the plaintiff of the land in question from the defendant Dexter was authorized by a resolution passed by its board of directors. That at the time of the passage of such resolution, and sale of the land, the defendants, Dexter and Godfrey, and said Lindsay, were acting directors, and then constituted a majority of such board. That the defendant Dexter was then acting as president thereof, and the defendant Godfrey as the treasurer thereof. That the defendant Dexter did not at any time disclose to the other subscribers what the land cost him, nor what profit he was making in turning the land over to the plaintiff, but never made to any of them any misstatement or misrepresentation whatever about the same. That the defendant Godfrey did not disclose to any of the other subscribers that he was to receive $40,000 from Dexter. That Lindsay did not disclose to any of the other subscribers that he had received $550 from Dexter. That each of the subscribers, excepting Dexter, Godfrey, and Lindsay, was ignorant of the amount of profit made by Dexter, the money so agreed to be paid by him to Godfrey, and the rebate paid by him to Lindsay, but the land was a known piece of property in the city of Milwaukee, and each of the subscribers knew the price asked, and knew, or could have ascertained, the condition and value of the land, and each agreed that the said land be taken by such corporation at the price aforesaid, without regard to what it might have cost Dexter, and without regard to what it might have cost any other subscriber for his subscription to the capital stock of the corporation. That subsequently to June 4, 1892, Carrie W. Thayer subscribed for 20 shares of such stock, and F. W. Wyman subscribed for 20 shares, Thomas & Schaus subscribed for 20 shares, A. B. Meyer subscribed for 20 shares, and William Plankinton subscribed for 40 shares, of the plaintiff's stock, which with the 880 shares obtained on and prior to June 4, 1892, made 1,000 shares, being the whole capital stock of the corporation. That the subscriptions after June 4, 1892, were obtained by E. R. Godfrey, and each one of the subscribers last referred to knew that the land in question had been purchased by the corporation for $40,000, before subscribing, and subscribed with that understanding, and on that basis, and without being led or induced to do so by any false statement or representation whatever. That there was no intention to defraud the plaintiff, or any of the subscribers to its capital stock, by the defendants or either of them, in any or either of the transactions mentioned. That all persons who subscribed for stock in the corporation did so without relying on what others were paying, or what the land had cost any purchaser prior to its purchase by the corporation. That no proof was offered by the plaintiff, nor is in any way before the court, that the land was worth less than $40,000 when it was bought by the corporation from Dexter, nor that at the time of the trial it was worth less than that sum. That January 30, 1898, the Milwaukee Land Company conveyed the premises to Lindsay Bros. by deed dated on that day, reciting a consideration of $10,000, and the same was recorded February 16, 1898. That Lindsay Bros. conveyed the same to the defendant Dexter by deed dated February 15, 1898, and recorded February 24, 1898, reciting a consideration of $25,000. That the defendant Dexter and wife conveyed the same to the plaintiff by deed dated February 15, 1898, and recorded February 24, 1898, reciting a consideration of $40,000. That the plaintiff corporation made calls on its subscribers to pay in their subscriptions to the capital stock,—one of 10 per cent June 4, 1892; one of 20 per cent October 29, 1892; one of 10 per cent December 13, 1892; one of 10 per cent January 14, 1893; and one of 10 per cent May 6, 1893; making 60 per cent in all,—and such calls were paid, and the plaintiff erected and completed a cold-storage warehouse on the land in question, and began and was engaged in carrying on the business of warehousing thereon in May, 1893. That the plaintiff had in January, 1893, procured a loan of $40,000, secured by mortgage on the land in question so improved, and out of the proceeds of the loan paid the balance due to the defendant Dexter on the land in question. That May 17, 1893, and after 60 per cent had been paid in on such capital stock subscription, one John A. Hill and his father Robert Hill, began negotiations for the purchase of 350 shares of stock in the plaintiff corporation, and June 3, 1893, an arrangement was made whereby the defendants, Dexter and Godfrey, and also Thomas & Schaus, E. J. Lindsay, W. H. Stevens, and G. C. Rogers, relinquished each a part of his subscription aforesaid amounting to 350 shares in all, and said John A. Hill came in as a stockholder, although making no formal subscription, and paid the same into the treasury of the plaintiff at the rate of $102.50 per share for said 350 shares of stock, and received said stock from the plaintiff corporation, and that subsequently the said John A. and Robert Hill purchased from the other subscribers aforesaid other stock in the plaintiff corporation, until said John A. and Robert Hill at the time of the trial owned all of the stock in the plaintiff corporation except 80 shares owned by the defendant Godfrey, and 290 shares by the defendant Dexter and his wife. That part of the stock so acquired by John A. and Robert Hill was 180 shares, which they held as the transferees of the defendant Godfrey, 50 shares as the transferee of the said E. J. Lindsay, and 810 shares as the transferee of the defendant Dexter, and the remainder of the stock so held by John A. and Robert Hill was so held by them as transferees of the subscribers aforesaid, who acquiesced in the purchase of the property as stated. That the shareholders of the corporation at the time this action was commenced, and at the time of the trial, were: E. R. Godfrey, 30 shares; the defendant Dexter and wife, 290 shares; and John A. and Robert Hill, 680 shares. That by subsequent corporate action, without the consent of the defendants, the plaintiff corporation reduced its capital stock, first to $80,000, by making the par value of each share $80, instead of $100, and later, and since the commencement of this action, reduced its capital stock to $50,000, by making the par value of each share $50, instead of $80. That the $4,000 so paid by the defendant Dexter to the defendant Godfrey, and the $550 so paid by the defendant Dexter to Lindsay, were so paid and received, in good faith, out of the funds of the defendant Dexter, and not out of the corporate funds or property belonging to the plaintiff, and the payment thereof was fairly compensated by the advantage derived by the corporation and its then subscribers on account of such payment, and there was never any agreement or representation to the said subscribers, or either of them, that they, or either of them, were getting their stock in the corporation upon the same terms as all the other subscribers, nor were there any misrepresentations whatever made to any of the subscribers, nor to the said John A. Hill, nor to Robert Hill, at the time he purchased it, in June, 1893, or prior thereto, or at any time: nor were the payments by Dexter to Godfrey or Lindsay, or either of them, or any part of either of them, added to the purchase price of said property paid by the plaintiff corporation, nor was the said purchase price in any way or to any extent increased or enhanced thereby. That there was no evidence before the court that the plaintiff corporation had suffered any damage or injury whatever by reason of any act or thing done by the defendants, or either of them. As conclusions of law upon the facts stated, the court found that the plaintiff could not maintain this action, and that the defendants were entitled to judgment dismissing the complaint herein, and for their costs and disbursements, and ordered judgment to be entered accordingly. From the judgment so entered the plaintiff brings this appeal.

Messrs. Quarles, Spence, & Quarles, for appellant:

If it was Dexter's duty to disclose all the facts to his principal, and he did not disclose them, there results suppression veri, which is the equivalent of fraudulent concealment.

Bishop, Contr. § 660.

Such was his duty. Any subscriber to whom he presented the prospectus, showing the "cost of land," had a right to rely upon the proposition that Dexter would perform his duty, and would disclose the fact of profit, if such fact existed.

If actual fraud resulted, absence of intention to defraud is immaterial.

Chandler v. Bacon, 80 Fed. Rep. 538.

The fact that John A. Hill made no formal subscription is immaterial, inasmuch as this court has held that a subscription for stock is merely an executory contract, and unnecessary where the contract is executed by the issuance of the stock and payment therefor.

Clark v. Farrington, 11 Wis. 321.

If the defendant Dexter and his associates, being, as they were, promoters of the plaintiff (2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 651; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 415), had either of them purchased the premises with the intention of unloading them upon the corporation, judgment should have gone against them for the profits secretly made.

Pittsburgh Min. Co. v. Spooner, 74 Wis. 307; Hebgen v. Koeffler (Wis.) 72 N. W. 745, and cases cited; Erlanger v. New Sombren-Phosphate Co. L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1218, 6 English Ruling Cases, 777.

It is immaterial whether Dexter conceived the idea of forming the corporation before or after his purchase.

Hebgen v. Koeffler (Wis.) 72 N. W. 745.

Defendants are liable as trustees of the plaintiff. They bought from themselves, and made a secret profit out of their cestui que trust.

Chandler v. Bacon, 30 Fed. Rep. 538; Pusey v. Senior, 9 Wis. 370; Re Taylor Orphan Asylum, 36 Wis. 585; Haywood v. Lincoln Lumber Co. 64 Wis. 647; Parker v. Nickerson, 112 Mass. 195; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503, 11 L. ed. 1076; Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 75; Franey v. Warner, 96 Wis. 222; Beatty v. Northwest Transp. Co. 12 Can. S. C. 598; Bennick v. Thomas, 27 U. S. App. 765, 66 Fed. Rep. 104, 13 C. C. A. 457; Wardell v. Union P. R. Co. 108 U. S. 651-658, 26 L. ed. 509-511.

Messrs. Van Dyke, Van Dyke, & Carter, for respondents:

If a promoter purchased the property before he began promoting the company, he may sell to the company at an advance without disclosing his profit.

2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 651; Erlanger v. New Sombbrero Phosphate Co. L. R. 8 App. Cas. 1218; Gover's Case, L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 182; Re Cape Breton Co. L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 795; Ladywell Min. Co. v. Brookes, L. R. 35 Ch. Div. 400; Bergeron v. Miles, 88 Wis. 397; Whitney v. Fairbanks, 54 Fed. Rep. 985; Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 75; Teachout v. Van Hoesen, 76 Iowa, 118, 1 L. R. A. 664; Brewster v. Hatch, 122 N. Y. 349; Whigham's Appeal, 63 Pa. 194; Simons v. Vulcan Oil & Min. Co. 61 Pa. 202, 100 Am. Dec. 628; Pad dock v. Fletcher, 42 Vt. 889; Fountain Spring Park Co. v. Roberts, 92 Wis. 345; Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90; St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. v. Tiernan, 37 Kan. 606; Plaquemines Tropical Fruit Co. v. Buck, 52 N. J. Eq. 219; Brewster v. Hatch, 122 N. Y. 349; Hitchcock v. Barrett, 50 Fed. Rep. 658; Stewart v. St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 736; Re British Seamless Paper Box Co. L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 467.

Practically all of the stock which had been subscribed for was represented at the meeting when the resolution to buy the land was passed, and was voted in favor of the purchase. No one holding any of the stock which was voted at that meeting, unless that stock was voted against that purchase, can be heard to complain.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 785, p. 1188; Barr v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 263; Brown v. Duluth, M. & N. R. Co. 53 Fed. Rep. 889; Re Syracuse C. & N. Y. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 1.

Messrs. Timlin & Glicksman also for respondents.

Cassoday, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts stated are either conceded, or found by the court to be true, and the evidence is sufficient to support the findings. Upon such facts, therefore, the rights of the parties must be determined. Counsel for the plaintiff seek to bring the case within the rulings of this court in Pittsburg Min. Co. v. Spooner, 74 Wis. 307; Fountain Spring Park Co. v. Roberts, 92 Wis. 345; Franey v. Warner, 96 Wis. 222; Hebgen v. Koefler (Wis.) 72 N. W. 745. In the first of these cases the rule of law applicable was tersely stated in a quotation from the opinion of a court in another jurisdiction, as follows: "A trustee or agent cannot purchase on his own account what he sells on account of another, nor purchase on the account of another what he sells on his own account; . . . and, if he does so, the cestui que trust or principal, unless, upon the fullest knowledge of all the facts he elects to confirm the act of the trustee or agent, may repudiate it, or he may charge the profits made by the trustee or agent with an implied trust for his benefit." 74 Wis. 320. In the second case cited it was held that "the promoters of a corporation are accountable to it for any profits which they may receive from a violation of their duty as such." In all of them the persons held liable were promoters of the corporation, or the contemplated corporation, in the purchase and sale of the lands, or agents or trustees of such corporation in making such purchase or sale, or both. This is not such a case. The defendant Dexter had closed his contract for the purchase of the land from Lindsay Bros., and paid $6,000 of the purchase price thereon, more than two weeks before the time when anything was said about, or done towards, the formation of the plaintiff corporation. That contract bound the defendant personally to erect and construct the buildings, machinery, and outfits necessary for the cold-storage business, and to operate the same for seven years, and to pay the balance of the contract price as agreed, and not to transfer the contract, nor his right in the premises, without the approval of Lindsay Bros. We must therefore consider the land as the property of the defendant Dexter at the time the formation of the plaintiff corporation was first contemplated by him. His original purpose of constructing such cold-storage buildings, machinery, and outfits himself, and then to operate the same for the period mentioned, was apparently changed by extraneous circumstances into a purpose of doing the same through a corporation in which he and his wife should own at least a majority of the stock. His prospectus for such corporation stated, "Cost of ground, $40,000." It is contended that this was a representation to the contemplated subscribers for stock that the land had actually cost him that amount. A prospectus is naturally supposed to be prospective in its application. In the instant case it was the summary or outline of the plan or scheme for the proposed cold-storage undertaking. The $40,000 named was manifestly to be the cost of the ground to the proposed corporation, not the amount which it may have cost the defendant Dexter, or some prior purchaser. It is contended that, because the defendant Dexter purchased the land of Lindsay Bros. for $22,500, it was only worth that amount. But Lindsay Bros. had other real estate in the vicinity, and the conditions exacted by them from the defendant Dexter in the contract, to construct and operate such cold-storage plant thereon, may have been regarded as of great advantage to them, and as a sufficient inducement to accept for the land $7,500 less than at first exacted. The location of the land may have been such as to make it of much more value for the purposes of such cold-storage business than for any other use. There is no evidence in the record as to the value of the land at the time of the incorporation of the plaintiff, except such inferences as may be drawn from the contract price and the price exacted. It is true that the defendant Dexter did not disclose to any of the subscribers to the stock in the plaintiff corporation the amount which he had agreed to pay Lindsay Bros. for the land, and none of them knew, except E. J. Lindsay, and the defendant Godfrey had reason to believe that he was to receive more from the corporation than he had agreed to pay; but none of them made any inquiry, and it does not appear that any false statement or misrepresentation was made by Dexter to anyone. The land was open and visible, and well known to all the subscribers; and each knew the price which the plaintiff was to pay for the same, and each knew, or could have ascertained, the condition and value of the land at and prior to the time of subscribing for such stock. The defendant Dexter had large experience in the business of cold-storage warehousing, and owned letters patent on certain devices used in such business, and manifestly believed it would become a profitable enterprise. Since the defendant Dexter had obtained the land, and paid more than one fourth of the purchase price, weeks before there was anything said or done, or apparently contemplated, about the formation of the plaintiff corporation, and since the several stockholders subscribed with such knowledge or means of knowledge in respect to the value of the land, and the price the plaintiff was to pay for the same, and without being influenced by any false statement or misrepresentation, and without any breach of duty or trust on the part of the defendants, or either of them, there seems to be no foundation for claiming that the plaintiff, or any subscriber to its capital stock, was defrauded or injured, merely because the defendant Dexter personally paid to the defendant Godfrey $4,000, to induce him, as a commission man, to subscribe, or procure the subscription of other commission men, for the balance of the $100,000 capital stock, in order that the plaintiff might secure the valuable patronage of such commission men in the proposed cold-storage business; nor because the defendant Dexter personally paid to E. J. Lindsay, after his subscription to the stock, $550, in order to remove his apparent dissatisfaction for having sold the land so cheaply,—especially as the contract precluded Dexter from transferring the same, to the plaintiff or anyone, without the approval of Lindsay Bros. *

The question recurs whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendants, or either of them, upon the facts stated. Certainly there is nothing said in any of the cases cited above to warrant a recovery in such a case as this. In fact, the intimation in some of those cases is strongly to the contrary. Thus, in Franey v. Warner, 96 Wis. 222, Mr. Justice Marshall said: "Cases cited, where a person sells his own property to a company in which he is interested, at an increased price, fairly and openly, free from representations that he is selling the property of another, have no application to this case." Numerous adjudications are there cited in support of that proposition, and it seems to be applicable to the case at bar. In the language of Mr. Justice Sharswood in Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 49: "That any man, or number of men, who are the owners of any kind of property, real or personal, may form a partnership or association with others, and sell that property to the association at any price which may be agreed upon between them, no matter what it may have originally cost, provided there be no fraudulent misrepresentation made by the vendors to their associates. They are not bound to disclose the profit which they may realize by the transaction." The defendant Dexter was not the agent or trustee of the plaintiff or anyone at the time he obtained the land of Lindsay Bros. Ibid. Neither of the defendants stood in any confidential relation to any of the subscribers to the capital stock until some step was taken towards the formation of the plaintiff corporation. These views are supported by Re Cape Breton Co. L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 795; Ladywell Min. Co. v. Brookes, L. R. 85 Ch. Div. 400. Thus, in the recent case in the House of Lords the lord chancellor, Herschell, said: "It is of the very essence of such a case as this to show that the price at which the property was sold to the company was in excess of what has been called the real price, or the true value. . . . I admit that there may be considerable ground for suspicion that the price was in excess of it. But, obviously, for such a case as the appellant seeks to make out here much more than that is necessary. It is of the very essence of the case, which rests upon his proving what he claims, namely, a secret profit improperly made, that he should prove that there has been that excess which he alleges." Bentinck v. Fenn, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 659. There is nothing in the celebrated case of Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1218, in conflict with the principles stated. That case is clearly distinguishable from the one at bar upon its facts, but the principles which govern this case are recognized in that. Upon the facts found or admitted, the trial court properly held that this action could not be maintained.

The brief and supplement on the part of the defendant Dexter cover 135 printed pages, and are in violation of the rules of this court. If the printed case is incomplete or inaccurate in any substantial particular (but not otherwise), the opposite party may serve a supplemental case with references to the record, as in the principal case, making the corrections; but no costs shall be taxed for the printing of any case or supplemental case failing to comply with the rule. Rule 8 (87 Wis. V.) "The brief of the appellant or plaintiff in error must contain a concise statement of (1) the nature of the action and the issues involved; (2) the result of the trial or hearing in the court below. (3) the several errors relied upon for reversal; (4) in cases depending upon the evidence, the leading facts or conclusions which the evidence establishes or tends to prove; (5) the principles of law applicable to the case, and the authorities in support of the same." Rule 9 (87 Wis. VI.) "The 'leading facts or conclusions which the evidence establishes or tends to prove' does not mean a recital or restatement of the evidence, but merely that such facts or conclusions should be stated, with a reference to the names of the witnesses, and the places in the printed case where the evidence which establishes or tends to prove such facts or conclusions may be found. The rule prohibits extended discussion upon a mere question of fact in any brief. To reprint in a brief what is printed in the case merely encumbers the record and increases the expense, without being helpful to the court. A party failing to comply with the rules takes the chances of losing costs. The defendant Dexter is only to be allowed for fifty pages of printed brief.

The judgment of the Superior Court for Milwaukee County is affirmed.

STATE of Wisconsin, ex rel. Edward GOEBEL, Appl.,

v.

S. W. CHAMBERLAIN, Treasurer of Langlade County, Resp't.

(.....Wis.....)

1. The English language must be used in all legal and official notifications or proceedings, in the absence of any statute authority to the contrary.
2. Publication of a delinquent tax list in the English language, but in a newspaper which is otherwise printed in the German language, is not a legal publication, when no authority therefor has been given, in accordance with Rev. Stat. § 675, by the county board.

(May 3, 1898.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Langlade County denying a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to publish the delinquent tax list in the plaintiff's newspaper. Affirmed.

Statement by Pinney, J.:

This is an appeal by Edward Goebel from an order of the circuit court for Langlade county denying the writ of mandamus prayed for in said relator's petition. The petition stated, in substance, that said relator was the proprietor, editor, and publisher of the Antigo Herold, a German weekly newspaper printed and published at the city of Antigo, in Langlade county; that said paper had been regularly and continuously published in said county for more than six years then last past, and still continued to be so published; that March 25, 1897, the number of descriptions in the list of lands to be advertised for sale by the county treasurer for the year 1896 for taxes exceeded 4,000; that the respondent, S. W. Chamberlain, then county treasurer of said county, and acting as such, March 25, 1897, delivered to and left with the relator a printed notice, notifying him, in substance, that the number of descriptions of lands to be advertised for sale for the nonpayment of taxes for the year 1896 exceeded 4,000, and that he would let by contract the publication of the list to the lowest bidder, at his office in the court house in the city of Antigo, in said county, on April 6, 1897, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and that all publishers proposing to bid on such publication must comply strictly with the provisions of law concerning the same, and that no bids would be considered which failed so to do; that on the same day said Chamberlain delivered to and left with each and all the editors and publishers of papers in said county qualified to publish said tax list a similar notice; that thereafter, and prior to the time of opening said bids and letting of the contract, the said relator, as editor and publisher of the Antigo Herold, delivered to and left with the said county treasurer his bid, duly signed and sealed as by law required, agreeing to publish said list in the English language in said Antigo Herold for the sum of 18 cents for each and every description in said list contained, and at the same time, accompanying said bid, was said relator's bond for $5,000, duly executed as provided by statute, conditioned, among other things, that the work would be properly performed, and signed by five sureties, who each justified in the sum of $2,000. It was further alleged that the only other bid for said work was one made by John A. Ogden, editor and publisher of the Antigo Republican, who agreed to print and publish said list for 25 cents for each and every description therein, and these were the only bids submitted to said county treasurer; that, although the bid of the relator was the lowest, said county treasurer, S. W. Chamberlain, refused to act upon and accept said bid, and refused to award the publishing of said list to the relator, solely for the reason that the said Antigo Herold was a newspaper printed in the German language, and publishing said list in the English language in said paper would not be a legal publication; and that he still refused to award said relator said contract. Wherefore he prayed that a peremptory writ of mandamus might issue out of, and under the seal of, the court, requiring and commanding said S. W. Chamberlain, county treasurer aforesaid, to award said contract to the relator in accordance with his said bid. An alternative writ was issued as prayed, to which the defendant, in answer, alleged that the Antigo Herold was a newspaper printed and published in the German language, and not, in law, in the absence of the proper action of the county board of said county, authorized to bid, contract for, or publish said list, and prayed that the peremptory writ asked for be denied. Said matter coming on to be heard by the court upon argument, the court made an order that the writ prayed for be denied, without costs, from which order the relator appealed.

Mr. T. W. Hogan, for appellant:

Kellogg v. Oshkosh, 14 Wis. 623, this court held: "It was competent for the common council of the city of Oshkosh, under § 9, chap. 8, of its charter (Priv. Laws 1856, p. 230), to designate a newspaper printed in the German language as the official paper of the city, and the notice required by that section and published in such official paper was good if published therein in the English language also.

In Wakeley v. Nicholas, 16 Wis. 568, this court held that the publication of a summons in a German newspaper in the English language was a legal publication.

NOTE.—For official publications in foreign languages, see State, North Orange Baptist Church, v. Orange (N. J. L.) 14 L. R. A. 62, and note on page 64; also Rasmussen v. Baker (Wyo.) 33 L. R. A. 773, 40 L. R. A.

Mr. John E. Martin, for respondent:

There is no law in the statutes requiring a county treasurer to publish the tax list in a paper printed in a foreign language.

English is the language of this country, and in the absence of a statute requiring this publication in a paper printed in a foreign language there would be no authority for such publication.

Pinney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question to be determined is whether, under the statute, a delinquent county tax list can be lawfully published in a German newspaper, in the English language, if the newspaper is in every other respect lawfully qualified as a means of making such publication. Section 1130, Rev. Stat., requires the county treasurer, "on the 1st Monday of April in each year, to make out a statement of all lands upon which the taxes have been returned as delinquent, and which there remain unpaid, except public lands held on contract, and lands mortgaged to the state, containing a brief description thereof, with an accompanying notice stating that so much of each tract or parcel of land described in said statement as may be necessary therefor, will, on the 3d Tuesday of May next thereafter, and the next succeeding days, be sold by him at public auction, at some public place, naming the same, at the seat of justice of the county, for the payment of taxes, interest and charges thereon; and if in any county no seat of justice shall be established, then at such public place therein as he may select; and cause such statement and notice to be published in a newspaper printed in his county, if there be one, . . . which statement and notice shall in all cases be published once in each week for four successive weeks prior to said 3d Tuesday of May; . . . but it shall be unlawful for any county treasurer to publish such statement and notice in any newspaper in his county that has not been regularly and continuously published in such county once in each calendar week for at least two years immediately before the date of such notice, if there be a newspaper which has been so published in such county;" and any county treasurer violating the provisions of this section is subject to a specified forfeiture. The statute thus defines, in one respect, what shall constitute a legal newspaper for the publication of such statements and notices. Section 1131, Rev. Stat., provides that, "in every county where the number of the descriptions in the list of lands to be advertised for sale for the nonpayment of taxes by the county treasurer shall exceed 4,000, the county treasurer shall let by contract the publication of such list to the lowest bidder, upon a notice, written or printed, to be delivered to and left with the publisher or one of the publishers of each newspaper in his county, at least ten days prior to the time at which such contract shall be let; but no such contract shall be made to publish such list in any newspaper which has not been regularly and continuously published once in each week in such county 40 L. R. A.

for at least two years prior to the time at which such publication shall be by law required to be made, unless there be no such newspaper so published in such county." It will be observed that the statute uses the words "a newspaper," without limiting it to any particular kind of newspaper, either German or English. The only express qualification is that the paper must have been regularly and continuously published once in each week in such county for at least two years prior. By § 675 it is provided that "the county board may order public notices relating to tax sales, redemption, and other affairs of the county, to be published in a newspaper, printed in any other than the English language, to be designated in such order, whenever they shall deem it necessary for the better information of the inhabitants thereof, and it shall appear from the last previous census that one fourth or more of the adult population of such county are of a nationality not speaking the English language, and that there shall have been a newspaper published therein continuously for one year or more in the language spoken by such nationality: provided, that all such notices shall also be published in a newspaper published in the English language as provided by law. The compensation for all such publications shall be paid by the county ordering the same, and shall be the same as that prescribed by law for publication in the English language, and no extra charge shall be allowed for translation in any case." The power of the county board to make the order is discretionary, and it must appear from the last previous census that one fourth or more of the adult population of such county are of a nationality not speaking the English language, and that there shall have been a newspaper published therein for one year or more in the language spoken by such nationality; and it is also made necessary that "all such notices shall also be published in a newspaper published in the English language, as provided by law." Section 1130, supra, authorizes the county treasurer to use his discretion in selecting the newspaper in which he shall publish the delinquent tax list if the number of descriptions is less than 4,000, but requires him to let the printing of it to the lowest bidder when it exceeds 4,000 descriptions. He has in such case no discretion. He is required to notify each newspaper in the county to file bids; that is to say, each newspaper qualified to make such publication. The statute, when construed in the light of the common law, invites bids from only qualified newspapers, and a paper printed in the German language is not within the statute. In Kellogg v. Oshkosh, 14 Wis. 624, the common council, under the charter (§ 9, chap. 3, p. 230, Priv. Laws 1856), had power to designate a newspaper printed in the German language as the official paper of the city; and it was held that the notice required by that section, and published in such paper was valid, if published therein in the English language. Also, in Wakeley v. Nichols, 16 Wis. 588, it was held that the publication of a summons in a German newspaper, in the English language, was a legal publication. In that case the person to be served was an American, and the officer making the order for its publication directed that it be published in a German newspaper, to wit, the Wisconsin Zeitung, published at Madison, and the summons was published therein in the English language. The court held it was a sufficient publication, and the officer granting the order had a discretion to determine in what paper it should be published. Dixon, Ch. J., rendering the opinion of the court, says: "Upon affidavit, as prescribed by statute, the court, or a judge thereof, or a court commissioner, may grant an order that the service of the summons be made by publication. Rev. Stat. chap. 124, § 10. . . . If the circuit judge who granted the order in this case, in the exercise of the discretion vested in him by the statute, directed publication in a German instead of an English newspaper, as being most likely to give notice to the person intended to be served, we see no legal objection to it." The present case is clearly distinguishable from the cases cited, in that in this case the county treasurer had no power or discretion to receive relator's bid, or award him a contract under it. No authority had been given to him by the county board for that purpose under § 675, Rev. Stat. The English language is the language of the country, to be used in all legal and official notifications or proceedings, in the absence of any statute authority to the contrary. It does not appear that the county board had considered or acted upon the subject. We hold that this section is decisive against the validity of the relator's claim, under his bid, to the contract. The publication of said list in the English language in a German paper would not, for the reasons stated, in the absence of such authority, be a legal publication; and the county treasurer rightfully refused to award to the relator a contract for that purpose, upon his said bid. It follows from these views that the order appealed from, denying the writ of mandamus prayed for, is correct, and must be affirmed.

The order of the Circuit Court appealed from is affirmed.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

B. F. ERB

v.

GERMAN-AMERICAN INSURANCE COMPANY of New York, Appt.

(98 Iowa, 606.)

1. Insurance on merchandise kept for an illegal business, such as a stock of drugs

NOTE.—Validity of fire insurance on property illegally used.

- I. General principles.
- II. Violation of excise laws.
- III. Offenses against public order and decency.
- IV. Violation of law taxing occupations.

I. General principles.

The principle applied to cases of insurance upon property alleged to be illegally used is that where the consideration is illegal, immoral, and wrong, or where the direct purpose of the contract is to effect advances or encourage acts in violation of law, it is void, and if the contract sought to be enforced is collateral and independent, though in some measure connected with acts done in violation of law, the contract is not void. Boardman v. Merrimack Mut. F. Ins. Co. 8 Cush. 588.

If a contract of insurance upon property is such that its direct purpose is to effect, advance, or encourage acts in violation of law, it is void; but if it is collateral and independent, though in some measure connected with the acts done in violation of law, it is not void. Carrigan v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687.

The same principles upon which it is held that goods which are carried for an illegal purpose or in an illegal manner cannot be the subject of a valid insurance against the perils of the sea apply with at least equal force to an insurance against fire upon goods which are so unlawfully kept in a store that the owner is liable to fine and imprisonment, and the store may be a nuisance, and the goods subject to seizure and forfeiture. Kelly v. Home Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 288.

II. Violation of excise laws.

With relation to violations of excise laws, there 40 L. R. A.

and liquors kept by a dealer who does not have the permit required by law to sell them, is not void as against public policy.

2. A mere executory agreement to sell insured goods does not constitute any change of interest within the meaning of an insurance policy.

3. An improper statement by counsel in opening a case, which is immediately with-seem to be two conflicting rules. Under what might be termed the New England rule, a fire-insurance policy against loss by fire on intoxicating liquors kept by the assured for sale in violation of law is for the direct purpose of enabling him to continue his offense with the greater safety, and is therefore in contravention of law, and void. Kelly v. Home Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 288.

And a contract directly insuring liquors intended for illegal sale is invalid as one made to afford protection for illegal acts. Carrigan v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687.

So, a fire-insurance policy on a saloon, furniture, fixtures, and stock in trade consisting principally of wines, liquors, and cigars never attaches, and is invalid where the assured was engaged in the unlawful business of selling intoxicating liquor without a license at the time it was issued and for a month afterwards. Lawrence v. National F. Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 557, note.

And a fire-insurance policy containing a proviso that it shall be void if the building insured thereby shall be occupied or used for unlawful purposes is rendered invalid where for two or three months before the fire a number of barrels of intoxicating liquors were stored in the building with intent to sell, and some of which was in fact sold by retail without a license, though such acts were unknown to the owner. Kelly v. Worcester Mut. F. Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 286.

And no action can be maintained upon a fire-insurance policy where the notice and proof of loss furnished to the insurers in compliance with a requirement in the policy that such notice shall show in what manner the building was occupied, state that it was occupied as a hotel, and it appears in proof that no license had been given to keep it as drawn after an exception with an acknowledgment that it was not justified under the existing state of the record, will not be regarded on appeal as prejudicial error, if it was not so considered by the trial judge.

4. Testimony as to the value of property is relevant on the question of damages, under an agreement that these shall not exceed the actual cash value or the cost of repairing or replacing the property.
5. An instruction as to the illegality of keeping liquors for sale in the state is not made erroneous as touching a matter not in issue by adding that keeping them with intent to sell them out of the state would not be unlawful, although there may be no evidence of an intent to sell out of the state.
6. An appellant cannot complain of error in an instruction which was in his own interest.
7. An estimate of the value of insured property by the insured in his proofs of loss will not constitute fraud if he places the amount too high merely through inadvertence or mistake.

(May 27, 1897.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Carroll County in a hotel, and a memorandum of special hazards annexed to the policy prohibits all unlawful business. Campbell v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. 10 Allen, 213.

So, if an illegal traffic in intoxicating liquors is the principal business of a druggist insuring his stock of goods, and his other business is a mere cover for the purpose of enabling him to secrete and disguise his real business, the insurance is a contract to protect him in his illegal ventures, and is therefore void. Carrigan v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687.

But a contract of insurance on a stock of drugs of one who carried on business as a druggist, using alcoholic liquors legitimately in his drug trade, and occasionally selling them in violation of law, where no legal design entered into its inception, would be so far collateral to the illegal acts as to render it valid and binding. Carrigan v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687.

And whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquor by a druggist was the principal part of his business, and his dealing in drugs a mere cover to enable him to secrete and disguise his illegal traffic, so as to invalidate a fire insurance on his stock of goods, is a question of fact for the jury. Carrigan v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687.

So, a policy of fire insurance upon billiard tables, balls, and cues kept by the assured without a license for the purpose of playing at billiards for hire, gain, or reward, in violation of Mass. Gen. Stat. chap. 88, § 70, and on intoxicating liquors owned and kept for sale by both persons to whom the policy issued, while only one of them had a license, and upon the fixtures, furniture, and pictures used by them in furnishing and adorning the room kept by them as a billiard saloon and a bar room, never attaches, and is illegal and void where the whole is carried on as one business. Johnson v. Union Marine & F. Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 555.

But insurance upon a bowling alley and pool table procured while the owner thereof had a license is valid, and recovery may be had in case of loss by fire, though the license afterwards expired and such bowling alley and pool table were continued in use for some time thereafter, where their use was discontinued before the fire. Hinckley v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 140 Mass. 38, 54 Am. Rep. 445.

In Hinckley v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 140 Mass. 38, 54 40 L. R. A.

favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McVey & Cheshire, for appellant:

Under the laws of Iowa, the plaintiff had not the right to own, keep, or vend drugs, medicines, and poisons, because he was not a registered pharmacist.

McClain's Code, § 2580.

Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. DeGraff, 12 Mich. 124, was based largely on the fact that a statute then in force in Michigan did not intend to destroy or affect the property right of spirituous liquors.

Hibbard v. People, 4 Mich. 125; Bagg v. Jerome, 7 Mich. 145.

Messrs. Earle & Prouty and F. A. Charles, for appellee:

Even if there had been a sale, and possession had not been delivered, it would not have invalidated the insurance policy.

See Kempton v. State Ins. Co. 62 Iowa, 83.

If the insurance itself is for the express purpose of aiding and assisting in carrying on an unlawful business, then the policy is void, but Am. Dec. 445, supra, Johnson v. Union Marine & F. Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 555, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the policy was on billiard tables, balls, cues, etc., kept without a license at the time the policy was issued; and Kelly v. Home Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 288, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case there never was a moment when the liquors were not illegally kept, and that therefore the policy never attached, while in the case at bar the business was legal at the time the policy issued.

Upon the other hand, the rule of the principal case is that a contract of insurance upon goods susceptible of legitimate use is collateral to, and too remotely connected with, the illegal use to which such goods are put to be affected by it, where no illegal design entered into the making of the contract at its inception.

Thus, a contract of insurance upon property susceptible of lawful uses, though its sale is prohibited, is a collateral contract in which no illegal design enters, and is not affected by the character of the goods, such a contract not being illegal unless the contract itself is for a directly illegal purpose. Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. DeGraff, 12 Mich. 124.

And spirituous liquors, though kept for sale in violation of law, may be lawfully insured against destruction by fire, as such liquors are capable of lawful use, and the insurance attaches to the property only, and the risks insured against are not the consequences of illegal acts but of accidents. Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. DeGraff, 12 Mich. 124.

And evidence in an action on an insurance policy on the stock of a brewery, that at and before the fire the insured had no license from the government as distillers, is not admissible for the purpose of showing that he was acting in violation of law. People's Ins. Co. v. Spencer, 53 Pa. 363, 91 Am. Dec. 217.

So, a condition in a fire insurance policy, invalidating it if gunpowder or other articles subject to legal restriction should be kept in greater quantities or in a different manner than provided for by law, refers to articles intrinsically dangerous in their nature, liable to cause injury accidentally or from carelessness, and not to liquors the traffic in which is made illegal by law. Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. DeGraff, 12 Mich. 124.

And the right of a person insuring saloon fix-if it is merely collateral to or independent of the conduct of the business itself, then it does not vitiate the policy.

Carrigan v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 58 Vt. 418, 88 Am. Rep. 687; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Fed. 157, 10 L. ed. 105; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468; Martin v. Capital Ins. Co. 85 Iowa, 643.

Granger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 22d day of August, 1898, the defendant company issued to the plaintiff its policy of fire insurance, to the amount of $1,200, on a stock of drugs, patent medicines, etc., at Coon Rapids, Iowa, and on the 9th day of September, 1898, said stock of goods was destroyed by fire, and this action is to recover on the policy. The following are defenses pleaded, to each of which the court sustained a demurrer: "(8) The defendant says that there was conducted, in the building described in the petition, and by means of the property insured in said policy a pharmacy, at the time said insurance was written, and up to the time of said fire, by the said B. F. Erb, and that said B. F. Erb had no permit to do business as a pharmacist, and that this business was conducted in violation of the laws of the state of Iowa, and that this fact the plaintiff concealed from this defendant, at the time this insurance was written and at all times thereafter,—the fact that he was conducting a pharmacy contrary to the laws of the state of Iowa, and without a permit to conduct such a pharmacy, and in violation of the statutes of Iowa,—which concealment was a material fact concerning this insurance, and by the terms of the policy renders the same void. (9) Defendant further says that said Erb was engaged, at the place described in the petition, and by means of the appliances and property insured in the policy, in illegally selling intoxicating liquors, at the time said policy was written, and thereafter up to the time of the fire, and that said Erb was not a registered pharmacist, neither had he any permit to sell or deal in intoxicating liquors, and these facts were all concealed from the defendant, and which facts are each and all of them material facts concerning this insurance; and by the express terms of this policy the same is rendered void by such concealment." An amendment to the answer was filed, having reference to some particulars to tures to recover on the policy in case of loss is not prima facie affected by the fact that he had no license to sell liquor. Manchester F. Assur. Co. v. Feibelman (Ala.) 23 So. 759.

The question whether spirituous liquors are included in the term "groceries" since the passage of the Michigan prohibitory liquor law, as used in a policy of insurance upon a stock of groceries kept for sale, in an action upon the policy, is one of fact for the jury. Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. DeGraff, 12 Mich. 124.

In Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. DeGraff, 12 Mich. 124, the lottery insurance cases were distinguished as not at all parallel, as insuring a lottery ticket requires the lottery to be drawn, which constitutes the illegal act, in order that the insurance shall attach to the risk.

III. Offenses against public order and decency.

The insurance of lottery tickets is invalid as against public policy, and under N. Y. act April 7, 1807, declaring it to be a public misdemeanor to insure tickets in lotteries, and the act of February 17, 1809, extends the provisions of that act to all lotteries whatever, whether foreign or domestic. Mount v. Waite, 7 Johns. 434.

But while insurance upon lottery tickets is void, the insured violates no statute, and does not stand in pari delicto, and is entitled to recover back the premium paid for the insurance. Mount v. Waite, 7 Johns. 434.

And a fire-insurance policy upon a shoe factory and the stock therein is not invalidated by the drawing of a lottery in a single room therein in which no stock was kept, with the consent and participation of the assured, where it does not appear that such drawing had anything to do with the fire, as such act was wholly independent of and disconnected from the subject-matter of the insurance. Boardman v. Merrimac Mut. F. Ins. Co. 8 Cusb. 583.

And the owner of property may insure it though he is a member of a trust for the purpose of controlling the price of property of that kind. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Cannon (Tex. Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 375.

So, a fire-insurance policy, the application for which refers to and states that the property insured is used as the private dwelling of the applicant, which names the use, and provides that it shall be void if used for any other purpose, is rendered invalid by the conversion of the dwelling into a house of prostitution. Cedar Rapids Insurance Co. v. Shimp, 16 Ill. App. 248.

The conversion of ordinary sleeping apartments into a house of assignation and prostitution kept in a disorderly manner constitutes such a change of occupancy of insured premises as will require notice to the insurer under a policy providing that failure to give notice of any change in the occupancy thereof shall invalidate it. Indiana Ins. Co. v. Brehm, 88 Ind. 578.

And a fire-insurance policy, the application for which states that the house to be insured was kept as a hotel, which is made a part of the policy and constitutes a warranty, is invalid, and no recovery can be had thereon where it was occupied as a house of ill-fame to the knowledge of the owner or his agent who made the representation; but if the building was leased as a hotel, and apparently used as such, and the fact that it was otherwise used was without the knowledge or consent of the owner, he can recover in case of loss. Hall v. People's Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 185.

And the fact that premises insured by the owner and occupied by a tenant were used as a place of prostitution does not invalidate the insurance thereon where the owner did not authorize and had no knowledge of such use, and the property was not rented for that purpose, and was converted to such use by the tenant. Nebraska & I. Ins. Co. v. Christensen, 29 Neb. 572.

So, in Loehner v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 17 Mo. 247, the fact that the premises insured were used as a house of prostitution was treated as not affecting the validity of the policy, the question of its validity being made to turn upon the question whether the suppression of that and other facts enhanced the risk.

But a policy of fire insurance on a stock of fire-works, containing a provision that it shall be null and void whenever any article shall be kept in quantities greater than the law allows, or in a manner different from that prescribed by law, unless said use or keeping is specially provided for, is to be construed to mean that the assured may keep only such fire-works as it is lawful to keep under municipal regulations; and where he kept dangerous colored lights contrary to the provisions of a the defenses in question; but it deals mainly with conclusions of law, and as to facts it seems to add nothing to the sufficiency of the defenses pleaded, and hence it need not be set out.

The proposition for consideration, as presented by appellant, is: "Can there be a recovery on an insurance policy covering articles of merchandise which are owned and kept and used in violation of the laws of the state?" It is urged that to permit such a recovery would be against public policy. The line of authorities coming to our notice, to aid in the solution of the question, is quite limited. Those nearest to sustaining appellant's view are in Massachusetts. In Kelly v. Worcester Mut. F. Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 284, the insurance was on a building that, in violation of the conditions of the policy that the building should not be occupied or used for unlawful purposes, was used for gambling in violation of law, which avoided the policy. The case seems to have no bearing on the facts of this case. Kelly v. Home Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 288, is a case in which the insurance was on a stock of liquors kept by the assured for sale in violation of law. The policy covered the liquors and casks containing them. The opinion holds the policy void, and, speaking of the assured, it closes with the words: "His contract was in contravention of law, and void as to him, because he entered into it in order to protect himself in his illegal acts." The case, as to authority, is grounded on holdings in cases involving marine insurance. In such cases the rule is announced that "the illegality of the voyage in all cases avoids the policy, and the voyage is always illegal when the goods or trade are prohibited, or the mode of its prosecution violates the provisions of a statute." In Boardman v. Merrimack Mut. F. Ins. Co. 8 Cush. 583, it was sought to avoid policies of insurance on a building and personal property, consisting of leather and materials for the manufacture of shoes. The evening before the fire persons assembled in a room in the building and conducted a lottery, which was a use of the room for an unlawful purpose. The rule of the case is stated as follows: "The drawing of a lottery, with the consent and participation of the assured, in a city ordinance, which caused a fire, he cannot recover. Jones v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 2 Daly, 807.

IV. Violation of law taxing occupations.

A policy of insurance upon the stock of goods of a merchant is a contract with reference to his business, within the meaning of Miss. Code 1892, §§ 3390, 3401, imposing a privilege tax, graded in accordance with the value of the stock of goods to be carried during the year, and providing that all contracts made with any person who shall violate that act in reference to the business carried on in disregard thereof shall be null and void so far as such person may base any claim upon them. American F. Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 73 Miss. 469.

And one who exercises the privilege of keeping a store without paying the price and obtaining the license prescribed by law, and effects an insurance upon the stock of goods so employed, cannot recover on the policy in case of loss, under Miss. Code, § 589, imposing a tax upon such privilege, and requiring a license for the exercise thereof, and providing that all contracts made with any person who shall violate that act with reference to the business carried on or in disregard of that law shall be null and void. Pollard v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 63 Miss. 244, 56 Am. Rep. 865.

So, a contract of insurance upon a stock of goods is one made with reference to the business, which will be rendered invalid by the fact that the stock insured exceeds the limits covered by the license paid under the Mississippi statute, though at the time of the payment thereof it was sufficient. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Searles, 73 Miss. 62.

And one who with knowledge that his stock of goods would vary during the year from a value of $2,000 to $7,000, and intending that the stock should vary between such sums, pays a privilege tax under Miss. Code 1892, § 3390, etc., upon a basis that the stock never exceeds $3,500, violates the provisions of that law, and a contract of insurance upon such goods is rendered invalid thereby. American F. Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 73 Miss. 469.

And a change, by an insurance company, of a policy issued by it, by substituting the words "as used solely for warehouse purposes" in the place of the words "it is understood and agreed that this building is to be occupied as a warehouse only during the continuance of this policy," does not create a new contract which will be rendered valid by the proper payment by the assured of the privilege tax required by the Mississippi statute, where the policy as formerly issued had been rendered invalid by a failure to make sufficient payment. American F. Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 73 Miss. 469.

And where a merchant has paid the proper privilege tax under the Mississippi statute taxing occupations, but between the date of payment and the date of making a contract of insurance his stock increases and exceeds the limit covered by the license, his business instantly becomes one conducted in violation of law, and is illegal and not protected by his license, and the contract of insurance is rendered invalid thereby. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Searles, 73 Miss. 62.

In Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Searles, 73 Miss. 62, supra, Sneed v. British America Assur. Co. 72 Miss. 51, infra, was distinguished upon the ground that that case merely held that where a merchant has paid the proper privilege tax, and his stock has been kept within the limit covered by that privilege tax up to the time he makes the contract of insurance, his business was legally licensed for the whole time from the taking out of the privilege-tax license, up to and including the day of making the contract of insurance, and it was therefore valid, and not rendered invalid by an increase of the stock over the legal limit subsequent to the making of the contract of insurance.

Insurance upon a stock of goods is not invalid, however, on the ground that the business was carried on in disregard of Miss. Code, §§ 3390, 3401, providing for a tax thereon, where at the time the contract of insurance was made the insured had paid the tax required by that statute for transacting a business with a stock of goods he then had, though before the loss occurred his stock had been so increased that thereafter he might not lawfully conduct the business without the payment of an additional tax. Sneed v. British America Assur. Co. 72 Miss. 51.

And a payment of a sufficient privilege tax at any time during the month has a retroactive effect, under Miss. Code 1892, § 3408, requiring a tax collector, when a privilege tax is paid during any month, but after the first day thereof, to date the license as of that day, and providing that it shall be good for one year from that day, so as to validate a contract of insurance on the stock of goods made during that month, though the tax was not in fact paid until after the contract was made. American F. Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 73 Miss. 469.

F. H. B.

building insured against loss by fire, as a shoe manufactory, does not avoid the policy on the building, nor on the stock therein." In the opinion is the following language: "The distinction between cases where contracts are or are not void as against law, is well stated by Marshall, Ch. J., in Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 271, 6 L. ed. 472. The principle established is, that where the consideration is illegal, immoral, and wrong, or where the direct purpose of the contract is to effect, advance, or encourage acts in violation of law, it is void. But if the contract sought to be enforced is collateral and independent, though in some measure connected with acts done in violation of law, the contract is not void." This rule is followed in Johnson v. Union Marine & F. Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 555, in which a policy was held void. In Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124, the policy included, among other things, groceries, among which were liquors, and the policy was claimed to be void, because to sustain the policy with liquors included would be insuring an illegal traffic. The case is quite in line, on principle, with the one at bar. The case briefly treats of the rule as to marine insurance, holding it to be inapplicable, and, as suggesting a state of facts that would be applicable, it is said: "If this policy were, in express terms, a policy insuring the party selling liquor against loss by fire or forfeiture, it would be quite analogous. But this insurance attaches only to property, and the risks insured against are not the consequences of illegal acts, but of accident." In the opinion it is further said: "By insuring his property, the insurance company has no concern with the use he may make of it, and, as it is susceptible of lawful uses, no one can be held to contract concerning it in an illegal manner unless the contract itself is for a directly illegal purpose. Collateral contracts, in which no illegal design enters, are not affected by an illegal transaction with which they may be remotely connected." The case cites Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. 157, 10 L. ed. 105; and Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468. It is there said: "It is difficult to perceive how public policy can be violated by an insurance of any kind of property recognized by law to exist." In Carrigan v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687, the Massachusetts cases and the Michigan cases are noticed, and the case quotes much of the language we have quoted from them. The policy in that case covered a stock in trade consisting of groceries, provisions, drugs, . . . including wines and liquors. In the case at bar, as in that one, liquors are included in the terms of the policy. In that case it is said: "If the purpose of the contract in question had been to protect the assured in the sale of intoxicating liquors, it would have been null; but the greater part of the property insured consisted of goods, insurance upon which was subject to no objection. The contract was legal upon its face, nothing appearing to show that the wines and liquors were intended for illegal sale; and it is a fact, not needing proof, that in compounding medicines, liquors, especially wines and alcohol, are of daily use, and for that purpose their possession and use by druggists are legitimate.

The assured was a dealer in drugs and medicines, and in that respect legitimately and presumably using liquors. There was evidence tending to show that he illegally sold them, including those not used in compounding medicines; and the fact may have been that the latter trade was the larger and his main one. If such illegal traffic was the business of the assured, and his legal traffic and transactions with other property a mere cover, ostensibly carried on for the purpose of enabling him to secrete and disguise his iniquity, the purpose of the contract would be to protect him in his illegal ventures, and it would therefore be void; but if he carried on business, using alcoholic liquors legitimately in his drug trade, and occasionally sold them in violation of law, we think that, if no illegal design entered into the making of the contract in its inception, that it would be so far collateral to the illegal acts that it would be inconsistent, and in accordance with no well-adjudged case, to hold it null." The case of Pollard v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 63 Miss. 244, 56 Am. Rep. 805, is determined upon a statute making contracts void, and is of no force as authority in this case. This case, in some respects, differs from any we have noticed or cited; but we think the rule of the Michigan and Vermont cases announces the correct doctrine.

The following is the property insured, as stated in the policy: "$1,200 on his general stock of drugs, patent medicines, lamps and lamp goods, paints, oils, stationery, books, wall paper, liquors, fancy and toilet articles, and druggist's sundries." It shows much property insured, outside of liquors and drugs, for which permits to sell must be obtained. The facts to bring the policy within the rule to make it void are wanting. The drugs and the liquors are recognized property in this state, and as legitimate subjects of insurance as other property. It is the illegal use of them that gives rise to the questions before us. We have not seen a case in which, because of the mere use of property for illegal purposes, not increasing the hazard, in the absence of stipulations to that effect, a policy has been held void because of such use. It is not a case in which the contract itself is against public policy, by the parties, at the inception of it, intending it to be in aid of purposes or designs to violate the law. This case simply presents the question whether, where a party uses property for an unlawful purpose that is susceptible of legitimate use, such use will render the insurance contract void, as against public policy. We think that no authority sustains such a rule, and it does not seem to be dictated by reason.

2. A condition of the policy is that it shall be void "if any change take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, . . . whether by legal process or judgment, or by voluntary act of the assured or otherwise." On the 22d day of July, 1898, the plaintiff entered into a written contract with one Funk to sell to him the stock insured in exchange for land, the exchange to be effected not later than August 1, 1898. The agreement was never executed. Defendant pleads the facts setting out the contract, and to that division of the answer there was a demurrer, which the court sustained, and complaint is made of that ruling. Appellant concedes that, under the holdings of this court, such a sale as is pleaded does not avoid a policy that contains a provision against the "sale of the property or exchange of title;" but it is said that this policy goes further and renders it void "if any change . . . takes place in the interest of the subject of insurance," etc., and it is urged that "to some extent" there was, by the contract, a change of interest. The conclusion of appellant's argument is that plaintiff's only liability for a failure to perform the contract would have been a judgment for damages for breach of his contract. There was no change of possession, no right of use. Speaking of the interests contemplated by the policy, we fail to imagine any change therein because of the contract. It was a simple agreement to in the future make such a change, which was never done. It is true that the policy stipulates against a change of interest, or a change of title, or a change of possession. There was not a change of either. Plaintiff's interest in the safety of the property was as great after the contract as before, for the purchase price depended on an invoice to be taken before the transfer; so that there was, because of the contract, no increase of hazard. It may be said that the only interest contemplated by the contract was that of ownership. Its terms could give rise to no contingency under which Funk would assert any other interest than that of ownership. These facts bring the case in line with the holdings under which appellant concedes the policy would be valid.

3. The following appears in the record as occurring during the opening statement to the jury by plaintiff's counsel:

What I undertake to say is this, that they have had a foreign fellow running around here with a bottle of whisky in his pocket, that they called a "detective;" that the defendants have had—

Mr. Cheshire: To this statement the defendant objects and excepts.

Mr. Prouty: If I don't prove it, it will reverse your case. What I undertake to say is this, gentlemen,—I will stand by what I said,—that I understand that they have had a fellow running around here looking up testimony.

Mr. Cheshire: And to all this the defendant excepts.

Mr. Prouty: But I undertake to say the testimony they will have, if they do have any here, that we burned this property,—that it is based upon improper motives, and is improper testimony; that there is not a particle of truth in it; that Mr. Erb, at the time the fire occurred, was at the time in bed, sound asleep, at 4 o'clock in the morning, and I guess a little bit sounder than any other man in town.

Mr. Cheshire: And to all of this statement to the jury the defendant excepts and objects.

Mr. Prouty: Upon reflection, I am inclined to think that my remarks concerning the manner of obtaining evidence on the part of the defendant were improper, under the present state of the record, and that I would not be permitted to prove the things which I attempted to say, on account of the condition of the record just now,—a matter that I did not fully consider when making the statement,—and I therefore, in the presence of the court and the jury, withdraw all statements, at this time, as to the manner of obtaining testimony on the part of the defendant.

It is thought that the appellant was prejudiced by the statement, notwithstanding the words withdrawing it. It is true that the withdrawal does not acknowledge that the statement as to what could be proved was false, but it followed so soon after the other statement that the jury must have clearly understood that it would not be relied on as a fact, and there was a practical acknowledgment by counsel that he was wrong, in view of the record, in making the statement. It is always to be regretted when matters occur that cast suspicions on the fairness of a trial; but it was in the presence of the trial judge, who could know, better than we can, the probabilities of prejudice because of it. We are not warranted in saying that prejudice resulted. In fact, we are inclined to the view that it could not.

4. To show the damages sustained, the plaintiff was used as a witness, and, for the purposes of the examination, the stock was itemized, as goods, chemicals, syrups, etc., patent medicines, lamps, lamp goods, paints and oils, etc. The witness, under objections stated the value of the different items. The following is a provision of the policy: "The company shall not be liable beyond the actual cash value of the property at the time any damage or loss occurs, and the loss or damage shall be ascertained and estimated according to such actual cash value, with proper deductions for depreciations, and shall in no event exceed what it would cost the insured to repair or replace same with material of like kind and quality." It is urged that the questions asked did not establish the measure of damage agreed upon. We think it tended to. The witness was asked to state the value which is presumed to mean the cash value, of the goods at the time of the loss; and that would include any depreciation. Such cash value would also fix, presumably, the cost of replacing, in a case where resort must be had to the markets for that purpose. A different rule as to replacing might obtain as to some classes of property.

5. The following is the second instruction given to the jury: "Plaintiff has alleged that the liquors named in the policy of insurance were not owned or possessed by him for the purpose of sale in violation of law. The question is an issue, and you are told that, before plaintiff can recover the value of such intoxicating liquors, it must appear in addition to all other necessary conditions, and that by a preponderance of the evidence, that plaintiff did not own or possess such liquors with intent to sell the same within this state. If he has not so established such facts, then you should find for the defendant on this issue. Plaintiff had the right to keep said liquors if he did not intend to sell them within this state, or if he kept them with intent to sell the same outside of the state, his ownership and possession would not be unlawful." The complaint as to the instruction is that it tells the jury that plaintiff had the right to keep the liquors in the state with intent to sell them outside the state, and it is said that there is no evidence of an intent to sell outside of the state. There was evidence that they were kept for sale in Iowa in violation of law. The court, by the instruction, told the jury that, before there could be a recovery for the liquors, it must appear that they were not kept for sale in Iowa. It then, with a view evidently to make plain the law, informed the jury that the keeping of the liquors in Iowa with intent to sell elsewhere would not be unlawful. Conceding there was no evidence of an intent to sell elsewhere, there was no error. The instruction merely guarded the jury against an impression that keeping with an intent to sell anywhere would be unlawful. It was not, as appellant urges, submitting to the jury a question not at issue in the case.

There is a further complaint as to the same instruction, in that it holds the reverse of the holding on demurrer, wherein it is claimed the policy is void because of the keeping of liquors for sale in violation of law; and it is said that, if there could be no recovery for the liquors, there could be none on the policy, because, if it was void as to one item, it would be as to all. In view of our holding as to the demurrer, appellant cannot well complain of the instruction; for the error, if any, is in its interest by excluding from the amount of the recovery, if the facts were found, one item for which, under the ruling on the demurrer, there might be a recovery. It is not to be understood that we hold to the rule suggested, that because there might be one item of property as to which the policy would be void, on account of the acts of the assured after the policy issued, the entire policy would be void. The case in this respect is quite different from Garver v. Hawkeys Ins. Co. 69 Iowa, 202, where the wrongful acts of the assured went to the inception of the policy.

6. A defense pleaded is that the plaintiff was not the sole and unconditional owner of the property. Issues were taken thereon, and the court instructed that there was not sufficient evidence to establish the defense. In this there was no error. It was an affirmative defense, and the evidence did not support it, so that a finding for defendant could have been sustained.

Another defense pleaded is that, in making the proofs of loss, the plaintiff swore falsely, with intent to defraud the defendant. The court instructed that, if he did so, he could not recover. The complaint is as to the value fixed on the property. The proofs show the value to be $3,960. The jury found the value at $3,600. The court said to the jury that, if the plaintiff, in the proofs of loss, placed the amount too high through inadvertence or mistake, with no intent to defraud the defendant, the statement would not necessarily defeat plaintiff's right to recover. It is urged that there is no claim that the statements were made through inadvertence or mistake. The difference between the actual value as found, and that stated in the proofs of loss, would, alone, suggest the thought and justify the instructions given. Without some such qualification of the rule as was given, the correctness of the instruction might be doubted. The very proposition to be considered was as to an intentional misstatement. The jury was very properly told what the effect would be if the statement was intentionally false, and just as properly told its effect if not intentionally so.

There are some other questions argued that we have not noticed, that are based on misapprehensions of the record, or that, we think, cannot be seriously relied on to reverse the case.

The record seems to be without prejudicial error, and the judgment is affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

NORTH POINT CONSOLIDATED IRRIGATION COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

UTAH & SALT LAKE CANAL COMPANY et al., Respts.

(.....Utah.....)

*1. The plaintiff claimed the right to receive water through the Surplus canal, owned by a corporation, and that its purposes were irrigation and drainage, while the defendants claimed its purpose was to carry seep-

*Headnotes by ZANE, Ch. J.

NOTE.—As to disposal of water brought in unnatural quantities on land, see note to Baltimore Breweries Co. v. Ranstead (Md.) 27 L. R. A. 224, and note.

As to prior appropriation, see note to Isaacs v. Barber (Wash.) 30 L. R. A. 665.

40 L. R. A.

age water from lands irrigated by them through their drain ditches, though unfit for irrigation, as well as other drainage water, and introduced witnesses to state their understanding of its purpose. Held, that the purpose of the canal, and the powers the corporation was authorized to exercise, must be determined from its charter, not from the opinions of witnesses.

2. Articles of incorporation under the general law of the state, with the provisions defining their effect, constitute the charter of a corporation; and from them the purposes of the corporation, and the uses to which its property may be put, must be ascertained and limited.

3. Two purposes are enumerated in the charter of the Surplus Canal Company: (1) The diversion of a portion of the water of the Jordan river to prevent the overflow of adjacent lands; (2) irrigation and cultivation of lands. To these ends, the construction and maintenance of dams, head gates, flumes, and maintain all necessary dams, head-gates, weirs, flumes, pipes, or other means that may hereafter be considered necessary to carry out the objects of this association." "Art. 5. The capital stock of this association shall consist of the several interests of the corporations hereof in the North Point Canal Company, together with the water rights thereto through the Surplus canal from the river Jordan as they now exist and appear of record in the office of the secretary of the North Point Irrigation district of Salt Lake county, Utah territory [names of incorporators omitted], and the same be, and is hereby, transferred and made to represent the capital stock of this association, and declared fully paid up, and subject to assessment by the association from time to time, as may be required." It also appears that the members of the North Point Canal Company and the stockholders of the North Point Irrigation Company, relying upon the agreement that the North Point Canal Company, and its successor, the North Point Irrigation Company, might take water, from and through the Surplus canal, from the Jordan river, for domestic and irrigation purposes, constructed a new canal a distance of 1 mile, connecting the two canals, at a large expenditure of time and money; that they also contributed a considerable sum to the building of the Surplus canal. It also appears: That the canal of the North Point Canal Company, and its property, and the interest of the members in the unincorporated association, were transferred and passed to the North Point Irrigation Company, and became a part of its capital stock. That on the 9th day of December, 1886, a written contract was entered into between the Jordan & Salt Lake Surplus-Water Canal Company and the North Point Irrigation Company, in the following language:

Agreement between Surplus Canal Company and North Point Canal Company, Salt Lake City, 1886. Know All Men by These Presents: That, whereas, at a meeting of the board of directors of the Jordan and Salt Lake Surplus-Water Canal Company, held in Salt Lake City on the 27th day of February, 1886, the privilege to take water from the said Jordan and Salt Lake Surplus-Water Canal Company by the North Point Canal Company was granted on condition that the said North Point Canal Company assist materially in the construction of the said Jordan and Salt Lake Surplus-Water canal; and whereas, the said North Point Canal Company, by its stockholders in and landowners under the said North Point canal, have contributed the sum of $600 (six hundred dollars) to the construction of said Jordan and Salt Lake Surplus-Water canal, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged,—the North Point Canal Company is hereby granted the privilege to take water from said Surplus canal at a point a little north of the county bridge constructed across said Surplus canal at a point where Third South street, of Salt Lake City, produced westward, crosses said Surplus canal, subject only to the following conditions: (1) No obstruction injuriously affecting the flow of water shall be put in the Surplus canal during the time of high water. (2) During the times of low water the North Point Canal Company may hold the water in the Surplus canal at a point two (2) feet above the present grade line of the Jordan and Salt Lake Surplus-Water canal. (3) The top of the overflow of the gate, dam, or flume placed in the Jordan and Salt Lake Surplus-Water canal by the North Point Canal Company shall be two (2) feet below the present grade line of the Jordan and Salt Lake Surplus-Water canal. In witness whereof, the said parties have hereunto caused their corporate seal to be affixed, and these presents to be subscribed by their vice-president, this 9th day of December, A. D. 1886.

T. E. Jerremy, Jr.,
Vice-President Jordan and Salt Lake Surplus
Canal Co.
Witness: N. W. Clayton.
Attest: George Q. Cannon,
Secretary.

In this agreement the name of the North Point Canal Company was, by mistake, used in the place of its successor, North Point Irrigation Company. That the intention of both parties was to make the grant to the last-named company, to whom the instrument was delivered, and who duly filed it for record on December 9, 1886.

It appears further that the Jordan & Salt Lake Surplus-Water Canal Company transferred, by deed bearing date December 12, 1886, its canal to Salt Lake City and Salt Lake county, in the following language: "And whereas, the said city and county have signified their willingness to take control and management of said canal, and to operate the same for the uses and purposes for which it was constructed, and thereby relieve this company from further expense or liability arising from the operation and management of the same: Now, therefore, in consideration of $12,000 paid by said city and county of Salt Lake, and of the further consideration that said city and county will covenant to keep said canal open and free to accomplish the purposes for which it was constructed during the period of ten years from date hereof, we, the stockholders of said company, hereby signify our willingness to relinquish all our right, title, and interest in and to said canal to said city and county, to be by them held and operated for the uses and purposes aforesaid; and we authorize and direct the proper officers of this corporation to make, execute, and deliver to said county and city, jointly, a good and sufficient deed. [Then follow the conveyance and description.] Conditioned, however, that the parties of the second part, Salt Lake City and Salt Lake county, keep said canal open and free to accomplish the purposes for which it was constructed for the period of ten years from the date hereof." It also appears that the North Point Consolidated Irrigation Company, the plaintiff, was incorporated on August 15, 1889, and that the canal of the North Point Irrigation Company, and all its franchises, and interests in its property, were then transferred to the plaintiff. The seventh article of plaintiff's charter is as follows: "Art. 7. This corporation is organized for the purpose of owning and acquiring, making, building, and maintaining irrigation canals and ditches in the county of Salt Lake, territory of Utah, to provide for irrigating agricultural land; to provide for irrigation, culinary, and other purposes through the canals and ditches now controlled by the North Point Irrigation Company and the West Point Canal Company, the so-called Surplus canal, and such other canals and ditches as may be hereafter constructed or acquired by this corporation; to manage and control its legitimate proportion of the waters of the river Jordan, and to construct, own, maintain, and control all necessary dams, head gates, weirs, flumes, pipes, or any other means necessary to carry out the purposes of this organization; to acquire all the cash on hand, rights, privileges, franchises, choses in action, accounts, deeds, liens, leases, goodwill, money due, books, and papers, and all property of every nature, now owned, enjoyed, controlled, or possessed by the North Point Irrigation Company and the West Point Canal Company. It being expressly intended hereby to consolidate said last-named companies, and to merge them into this corporation." It appears further that large tracts of land owned by the stockholders of the plaintiff and others depend for irrigation upon its canal; that after it was connected with the Surplus canal, up to 1892, its waters were used for irrigation and domestic purposes; that some of the land would be productive and valuable if irrigated with water suitable for irrigation, such as is taken from the Jordan river; that other portions contain alkali, that renders it unsuitable for growing crops, but that it would be improved through irrigation with pure water. It appears: That the plaintiff's canal connects with the Surplus canal about 4 miles below its mouth at the Jordan river. That above that portion of the Surplus canal, and, to the south and west, the canals of the defendants the Utah & Salt Lake Canal Company, the South Jordan Canal Company, and the North Jordan Irrigation Company are situated. That these canals take water from the Jordan river miles above the head or mouth of the Surplus canal—one as much as 17. That drain ditches were constructed and are used further up the river to carry the seepage from the lands irrigated back to the Jordan river, but the seepage from large tracts of land irrigated by water from these canals flows into Hunter's and Silver lakes. Much of it is conducted there by artificial ditches, and the seepage so collected is conducted into these small lakes or ponds, and into Decker's lake, and from the latter, a distance of about 2 miles, by means of a drain ditch, into White lake, which forms part of the Surplus canal. Much of this seepage is from alkali or mineralized lands. This seepage so conducted to and emptied into the Surplus canal is unfit for domestic or irrigation purposes. In fact, it kills vegetation, and renders the land irrigated by it unproductive.

Upon a final hearing of the case upon the pleadings, evidence, and arguments of counsel, the court rendered a decree denying the prayer for an injunction, dismissing plaintiff's action, and awarding costs against the plaintiff to the defendants. From this decree plaintiff has appealed, and assigns numerous errors, upon which a reversal is asked, and that the court below may be ordered to enter a decree perpetually enjoining the defendants as prayed in plaintiff's complaint, and for costs.

Messrs. E. W. Taylor, C. F. Loofbourow and F. C. Loofbourow, and Moyle, Zane, & Costigan, for appellant:

The physical acts in the appropriation, together with the fact that the water is taken for a beneficial purpose and the actual use thereof (Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, § 50), are sufficient to establish an appropriation.

Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 28.

That grant related back to the date of the original agreement, February 27, 1886.

Jackson, Rensselaer County New Loan Officers, v. Bull, 1 Johns. Cas. 81; Johnson v. Stagg, 2 Johns. 510.

A conveyance to a copartnership or association, simply under the name of such copartnership or association and without specifying any or all of its members, is a valid grant, providing it can be shown who is the grantee.

Neo Vienna Bank v. Johnson, 47 Ohio St. 306, 8 L. R. A. 614; Sherry v. Gilmore, 58 Wis. 324.

A deed with a fictitious name, if actually delivered to the grantee intended, is a good conveyance.

David v. Williamsburgh City F. Ins. Co. 88 N. Y. 265, 88 Am. Rep. 418.

An appropriator's right begins at the head of the ditch where it connects with the natural source.

Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, § 57.

The actual date of appropriation relates back to the primary acts of the appropriator.

Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, § 55.

And the appropriation of water can be made through artificial ditches.

Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, §§ 65, 66; Barnes v. Sabron, 10 Nev. 217.

The powers of a corporation are limited to such as are expressly defined in their articles, except such as are incidental.

4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 208-215; Davis v. Flagstaff Silver Min. Co. 2 Utah, 74; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5638.

Compiled Laws of Utah 1888, § 2785, expressly provides that irrigating companies shall reconvey their surplus water into the natural source of supply.

Surface water cannot be collected in artificial channels, and discharged upon the property of an adjoining owner.

Gould, Waters, § 271; Wood, Nuisances, § 396; Livingston v. McDonald, 21 Iowa, 160, 89 Am. Dec. 563; Buller v. Peck, 16 Ohio St. 334, 88 Am. Dec. 452; White v. Chapin, 12 Allen, 516; Foot v. Bronson, 4 Lans. 47; Hicks v. Silliman, 93 Ill. 255; Kauffman v. Griessmer, 26 Pa. 407, 67 Am. Dec. 437; Martin v. Riddle, 26 Pa. 415; Miller v. Laubach, 47 Pa. 154, 86 Am. Dec. 521; Davis v. Londgreen, 8 Neb. 43; Porter v. Durham, 74 N. C. 767; Templeton v. Voshloe, 72 Ind. 134, 37 Am. Rep. 150; Cairo & V. R. Co. v. Stevens, 73 Ind. 278, 88 Am. Rep. 139; Goldsmith v. Elsas, 53 Ga. 186; Boynton v. Longley, 19 Nev. 69; Taylor v. Fickas, 64 Ind. 167, 81 Am. Rep. 114; Gillis v. Nelson, 16 La. Ann. 275; Sowers v. Shiff, 15 La. Ann. 800; Jutte v. Hughes, 67 N. Y. 267; Martin v. Jett, 12 La. 501, 82 Am. Dec. 120; Crabtree v. Baker, 75 Ala. 91, 51 Am. Rep.

424; Adams v. Walker, 34 Conn. 466, 91 Am. Dec. 742; Yerez v. Eineder, 86 Mich. 24; Patoke Twp. v. Hopkins, 131 Ind. 142.

Surface water which the lower estate is bound to take is that which accumulates on the surface from natural causes, such as falling rain and melting snow, and not such as is created or brought upon the higher land by the hand of man.

Wood, Nuisances, §§ 385-387, 389, 397; Washb. Easem. p. 23.

Admitting, for argument, that the natural drainage, when Decker's lake overflows, is toward White lake, and that the natural drainage must be endured, such natural drainage cannot be added to by artificial means.

Livingston v. McDonald, 21 Iowa, 160, 89 Am. Dec. 563; Hooper v. Wilkinson, 15 La. Ann. 497, 77 Am. Dec. 194; Delahoussaye v. Judice, 13 La. Ann. 587, 71 Am. Dec. 521; Martin v. Jett, 12 La. 501, 32 Am. Dec. 120.

Surface water must run naturally.

Washb. Easem. p. 450; Lughes v. Anderson, 68 Ala. 280, 44 Am. Rep. 147; Crabtree v. Baker, 75 Ala. 91, 51 Am. Rep. 426.

Irrigation water must not be deteriorated in quality to the damage of any other person.

Crane v. Winsor, 2 Utah, 248; Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, §§ 76, 77; Bear River & A. Water & Min. Co. v. New York Mining Co. 8 Cal. 327, 68 Am. Dec. 325; Hill v. Smith, 27 Cal. 476, 32 Cal. 166.

The pollution of water of an artificial course to the use of which water in a pure state a right has been acquired, is a nuisance.

Wood, Nuisances, §§ 115, 116, 118, 446-448.

In order to establish an easement by adverse possession, the defense should have conclusively shown that plaintiff had express knowledge that its rights were being invaded. This the defendants have failed to do.

Washb. Easem. 4th ed. pp. 180, 181, ¶ 86; also p. 163, ¶ 43; Zigefoose v. Zigefoose, 69 Iowa, 391; Carbrey v. Willis, 7 Allen, 368, 83 Am. Dec. 688.

Adverse possession is not tenable unless exclusive.

Washb. Easem. p. 163, ¶ 43.

To establish a prescriptive right it must be shown that a nuisance was maintained for the full period with equally offensive results.

Boynton v. Longley, 19 Nev. 69; Wood, Nuisances, § 708; Matthews v. Stillwater Gas & E. L. Co. 63 Minn. 493.

The changing or enlarging a drain ditch avoids a prescriptive claim.

Totel v. Bonnefoy, 123 Ill. 653; Boynton v. Longley, 19 Nev. 69; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 16-19; Cotton v. Pocasset Mfg. Co. 13 Met. 429; Stein v. Burden, 24 Ala. 130, 60 Am. Dec. 453; Matthews v. Stillwater Gas & E. L. Co. 63 Minn. 493.

A prescriptive or adverse title for a nuisance cannot be acquired by a secret user only from the time the nuisance is known to the plaintiff and he was damaged thereby.

Wood, Nuisances, § 706; Crosby v. Bessey, 49 Me. 539, 77 Am. Dec. 271; Grigsby v. Clear Lake Waterworks Co. 40 Cal. 396; Washb. Easem. §§ 26, 26a, p. 150.

The rule is not changed even though the plaintiff came to the nuisance.

Boston Ferrule Co. v. Hills, 159 Mass. 147, 40 L. R. A.

20 L. R. A. 844; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 394, note 1.

Nor is the rule changed by the fact that there is an absence of actual damages or even actual benefit from this drainage water.

Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454; Cooper v. Randall, 53 Ill. 24; Gleason v. Garg, 4 Conn. 418; Call v. Buttrick, 4 Cush. 345.

No prescriptive or adverse right can ever be acquired by the defendants in this action to the Surplus canal, because the Surplus Company had no power to grant to the defendant canal companies the right to discharge their drainage water into the Surplus canal. The purpose of the Surplus canal was for irrigation and the taking of the Surplus water from the Jordan river and the Surplus Company never acquired any further or greater right, hence the defendants could take no greater right than the Surplus Company enjoyed; therefore, the invasion of the defendant canal companies was entirely illegal, and its adverse claim untenable.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 146; Burbank v. Fay, 5 Lans. 397; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 7; Watkins v. Peck, 13 N. H. 360, 40 Am. Rep. 156.

A prescriptive right cannot be maintained against a prohibitory law.

See Green, Ultra Vires, p. 35; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 212; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 16; State v. Krebs, 64 N. C. 604.

Not only are the acts complained of against the defendant canal companies a private, but they are also a public, nuisance, and no person can gain a prescriptive right to maintain a public nuisance.

Ashbrook v. Com. 1 Bush, 139, 89 Am. Dec. 616; Wright v. Moore, 38 Ala. 593, 82 Am. Dec. 781; Jenkins v. Hooper Irrigation Co. 13 Utah, 100.

Plaintiff gained its right through a written conveyance duly recorded, and its right is not lost, even though it was a nonuser for several years.

Dill v. Camden Bd. of Edu. 47 N. J. Eq. 421, 10 L. R. A. 276; Arnold v. Sterens, 24 Pick. 106, 35 Am. Dec. 305; Bannon v. Angier, 2 Allen, 128; Owen v. Field, 102 Mass. 90; Barnes v. Lloyd, 112 Mass. 224; Smyley v. Hastings, 22 N. Y. 217; Wiggins v. McCleary, 49 N. Y. 346; Nitzell v. Paschall, 3 Rawle, 76.

An injunction as prayed for is a proper remedy.

Wood, Nuisances, §§ 777, note 2, 779, 781-783, 789.

Messrs. Richards & Richards, for respondents, canal companies:

The plaintiff has no right or privilege in the Surplus canal or in the waters thereof, either by grant or appropriation. Its alleged grant is void for want of authority in the officers to execute the same. Under no circumstance could it take effect on the 27th day of February, 1886, for the reason that there was then no grantee to receive the grant, and it could not affect persons acquiring intervening rights who are not parties thereto.

In the absence of express authority conferred by the board of directors neither the president nor secretary, nor any other officer of the corporation, has the right to execute such a document for and on behalf of the corporation.

2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, p. 716; Mott v. Danville Seminary, 129 Ill. 403; People's Bank v. St. Anthony's Roman Catholic Church, 109 N. Y. 512; Blenn v. Bear River & A. Water & Min. Co. 20 Cal. 602, 81 Am. Dec. 132; Corbett v. Woodward, 5 Sawy. 403; England v. Deerborn, 141 Mass. 590; Jesup v. City Bank, 14 Wis. 332; Titus v. Cairo & F. R. Co. 37 N. J. L. 98; Leggett v. New Jersey Mfg. & Bkg. Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 541, 23 Am. Dec. 728; Wait v. Nashua Armory Asso. 66 N. H. 581, 14 L. R. A. 356; Lyndon Mills Co. v. Lyndon Literary & Biblical Inst. 63 Vt. 581; Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Fire Ins. Co. 7 Wend. 31.

An unincorporated association cannot take a grant in its association name or hold title to realty.

1 Devlin, Deeds, § 190; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 379; Jackson, Cooper, v. Cory, 8 Johns. 886; German Land Asso. v. Scholler, 10 Minn. 838; Hornbeck v. Westbrook, 9 Johns. 75; Jackson, Potter, v. Sisson, 2 Johns. Cas. 321; Sloane v. McConahy, 4 Ohio, 157; Thomas v. Marshfield, 10 Pick. 368; Barlett v. King, 12 Mass. 537, 7 Am. Dec. 99; Hamblett v. Bennett, 6 Allen, 140; Tucker v. Seaman's Aid. Soc. 7 Met. 188.

Rights in water for irrigation can only be acquired by the actual appropriation of the water to that beneficial use.

Munroe v. Irie, 2 Utah, 535; Crane v. Winsor, 2 Utah, 248; Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, § 52; Osgood v. El Dorado Water & D. G. Min. Co. 56 Cal. 571; Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Carpenter, 4 Nev. 534, 97 Am. Dec. 550.

Any right or privilege the plaintiff took was subject to the rights of the owners of the Surplus canal and of the defendant canal companies.

1 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 379, and cases cited. In the construction of the drain ditch, the defendant canal companies and the county of Salt Lake disposed of the drainage according to its natural disposition, and made that portion of the country which was naturally subservient bear its part of the drainage burden.

As a right incidental to their corporate power and to the business of irrigation, defendants could and did lawfully construct and maintain a drain ditch from the Decker lake into White lake, connecting this chain of lakes for the purpose of carrying away the seepage water and surface drainage necessarily incidental to the irrigation of the lands watered from their canals; said water being conveyed in the course in which the drainage would naturally flow.

Conrad v. Arrowhead Hot Springs Hotel, 103 Cal. 399; Earl v. DeHart, 12 N. J. Eq. 280, 72 Am. Dec. 395.

The drainage, in connection with the irrigation of land, is a reasonable use of the property of the canal companies, and one which they were entitled to enjoy.

Barnard v. Sherley, 185 Ind. 547, 24 L. R. A. 568; Panton v. Holland, 17 Johns. 99, 8 Am. Dec. 369; Gibson v. Puchta, 33 Cal. 310; Townsend v. Bell, 70 Hun, 537.

The prior right of the defendants to use the White lake and Surplus canal for the purpose of drainage commenced in June, 1886, and continued, to the same extent, from that time till the commencement of this suit; and the drain ditch was not enlarged, nor the flowage thereof increased.

40 L. R. A.

Jacob v. Lorenz, 98 Cal. 332; Ramelli v. Irish, 96 Cal. 214.

The defendant canal companies have obtained a prescriptive right in the Surplus canal and the waters thereof, by an open, notorious, peaceable, continuous, uninterrupted adverse use for a period of over seven years.

Such a right may be acquired.

Goddard, Easem. pp. 68, 69, 258, and note G; Wood v. Sutcliffe, 2 Sim. N. S. 163, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 253; Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, § 152; Wood, Lim. Act. § 181; 1 Wood, Nuisances, p. 719; McCallum v. Germantown Water Co. 54 Pa. 40, 98 Am. Dec. 656; Prentice v. Geiger, 74 N. Y. 341.

The right is acquired in the period prescribed by the statute of limitation of actions, in this state seven years.

Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, § 152; Angell, Watercourses, § 208; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 11; Washb. Easem. p. 140; Harkness v. Woodmansee, 7 Utah, 227.

Such a right may be acquired for drainage.

Earl v. DeHart, 12 N. J. Eq. 280, 72 Am. Dec. 395.

The acts were of such a character as to give notice to all parties of the defendants' claim of right, and plaintiff, having had the means of knowledge, cannot say that it did not know.

Close v. Samm, 27 Iowa, 508; School District No. 8 v. Lynch, 33 Conn. 330; Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 517; Poignard v. Smith, 6 Pick. 172; Scruggs v. Scruggs, 43 Mo. 142; Samuels v. Borrowdale, 104 Mass. 210; Wilson v. Williams, 52 Miss. 488.

The adverse possession of the defendants was of such a character that the plaintiff will be presumed to have know of it, and hence no notice was necessary.

Key v. Jennings, 66 Mo. 367; Bushey v. San-tiff, 86 Hun, 384.

A party must take notice of the existence of a ditch.

Cook v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 40 Iowa, 451; Hodgson v. Jeffries, 52 Ind. 334; Baldock v. Atwood, 21 Or. 73.

The law does not require the use to be in all respects identical and the same, both in manner and extent, in order to acquire an easement, and a change, if any, must be such as would cause some injury to others.

Washb. Easem. p. 171; Jacob v. Lorenz, 98 Cal. 332; Ramelli v. Irish, 96 Cal. 214.

The plaintiff is not entitled to an injunction.

1 High, Inj. § 7: 1 Spelling, Extraordinary Relief, § 26; Atty. Gen. v. Manchester & L. R. Co. 1 Railway Cas. 436; Wicks v. Hunt, Johns. V. C. (Eng.) 372; 1 High, Inj. § 2; Drewry, Inj. p. 265; Kerr, Inj. 230, 231; Bispham, Eq. § 400; Iseberg v. East India House Estate Co. 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 392; Ward v. Kelsey, 14 Abb. Pr. 106; Audrenied v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 68 Pa. 370, 8 Am. Rep. 195; Durell v. Pritchard, L. R. 1 Ch. 244; City of London Brewery Co. v. Tennant, L. R. 9 Ch. 219; Jacorub v. Knight, 82 S. R. Ch. App. 601; Rogers Locomotive & Mach. Works v. Erie R. Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 379.

Messrs. W. Van Cott, G. F. Putnam, and Ray Van Cott for respondent Salt Lake County.

Messrs. William McKay and D. B. Hempstead for respondent Salt Lake City.

Zane, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff claims the legal right to take and use water from the Jordan & Salt Lake Surplus canal for irrigation and domestic purposes; that it has an interest in and right to the Surplus canal, and to its waters, to that extent; and that, in view of the pleadings and evidence, the court should protect that right by a writ of injunction; while the Utah & Salt Lake Canal Company, the South Jordan Canal Company, and the North Jordan Irrigation Company, three of the defendants, deny that plaintiff has any interest in the Surplus canal, or any right to take water therefrom for irrigation or other purposes, and they claim the right to use the same canal to carry the seepage and surplus waters from the lands irrigated by them, from their canals, though its waters may be thereby so polluted and befouled by alkali or other substances as to render it unfit for irrigation or domestic purposes. It is plain that the Surplus canal cannot be used for both purposes. It cannot be used to carry water fit for irrigation, and water unfit for irrigation, at the same time. The use of the Surplus canal to carry water unfit for irrigation or domestic purposes is, in effect, an exclusive right to the use of it, so far as the use of it to carry water for irrigation or domestic purposes goes; and the right to use it to carry water for irrigation or domestic purposes, in effect, excludes the use of it to carry water unfit for irrigation or domestic purposes. The two rights are perfectly inconsistent, and cannot be enjoyed together.

This brings us to the question, Has the plaintiff the right to take or use water from the Surplus canal for irrigation, culinary, or other domestic purposes? The plaintiff insists that the Surplus canal was constructed to relieve the Jordan river during freshets or high water; to carry a portion of its water and overflow water at such times, and as a drainage canal, to that extent; and also for the purposes of irrigation and domestic purposes; while the defendants claim it was constructed alone for the purpose of drainage to carry the seepage and surplus water from the lands irrigated by the defendant canal companies and others, as well as to relieve the Jordan river and adjacent lands submerged by it in times of freshets and high water. The understanding of various persons as to the object of the incorporation known as the Jordan & Salt Lake Surplus-Water Canal Company was received in evidence by the court below. While a special charter was not granted by the legislature of the late territory to the Jordan & Salt Lake Surplus-Water Canal Company, and it was incorporated under a general law, its articles of incorporation under that law were given the effect of a charter; and in them its purposes and powers must be found,—from them its franchise or franchises must be ascertained. Such a corporation can only use such powers as are expressly mentioned in its charter, and such as may be necessary to execute those expressed. In the case of Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950, the court said: "Conceding the rule applicable to all statutes, that what is fairly implied is as much granted as what is expressed, it remains that the charter of a corporation is the measure of its powers, and that the enumeration of these powers implies the exclusion of all others." The object and business of the Jordan & Salt Lake Surplus-Water Canal Company, expressed in its charter, was "to construct [the canal described] for the purpose of diverting a portion of the said Jordan river from its present channel, and causing it to flow into" Salt Lake at a point named, "thereby preventing the western portion of Salt Lake City and the lands along the Jordan river from being submerged in times of high water, and making practicable the draining, irrigating, and cultivating of large tracts of land hitherto unavailable for agricultural purposes; and to this end the association may construct and maintain all necessary dams, head gates, flumes, and other means which may be necessary to control, regulate, and distribute said water for the purposes herein indicated." The objects were to divert a portion of the waters of the river in times of high water, to prevent the western portion of the city from being submerged, and to make practicable the drainage and irrigation and cultivation for agricultural purposes of large tracts of land; and to those ends the company was empowered to construct and maintain all necessary dams, head gates, flumes, and other means which might be necessary to control, regulate, and distribute the waters of the canal so diverted from the Jordan river. It is apparent that the diversion of water and its distribution for irrigation were intended, as well as the diversion of water from the Jordan river at times of high water. Having the power to construct and use its canal for the purpose of irrigation as well as drainage, the Surplus Canal Company was authorized to enter into the contract with the North Point Irrigation Company dated December 9, 1886, in which it granted to the company the right to take water from its canal for irrigation and domestic purposes, and to construct dams and gates to divert water into the canal of the North Point Irrigation Company to that end. This contract in writing of December 9, 1886, referred to, ratified the verbal contract of February 27 of the same year with the unincorporated company. While the name of the North Point Canal Company is used in the written contract, there is no doubt from the evidence that the North Point Irrigation Company, who had succeeded to the property and rights of the unincorporated company, was intended, and we must hold that the contract was made with the incorporated company.

Defendants also insist that the execution of the contract of December 9, 1886, by the Surplus Water Company, was not proved by a preponderance of the evidence. While the evidence was conflicting, we are disposed to find that it was proved by a clear preponderance, and that it was executed by authority of both parties to it. It purports to be so signed. Two witnesses so state. It was acknowledged and delivered by the proper officers of the Surplus Company, duly filed for record, and recorded.

The North Point Irrigation Company on the faith of it built a new canal the distance of a mile, at considerable cost, thereby connecting their canal with the Surplus canal, constructed a head gate according to the terms of the contract, contributed to the building of the Surplus Canal, and took out water under the contract, whenever desired, until this suit was brought. After the contract was so signed, acknowledged, delivered, accepted, and acted upon by both parties, it would be a breach of faith for the defendants to avoid it now on the ground that it was not authorized and duly executed. After this contract or grant was so executed, acknowledged, delivered, and recorded, the Jordan & Salt Lake Surplus Water Canal Company transferred their canal to Salt Lake City and Salt Lake county, upon the condition that they would take the control and management of it for the uses and purposes for which it was constructed. It appears from the evidence in the record that the North Point Irrigation Company acquired its right to take water from the Surplus canal before its waters were rendered unfit for irrigation by the impure surplus and seepage water discharged through the drain ditch into it from Decker's lake. But the canal company defendants claim that the seepage and surplus water from the lands irrigated by them flows naturally into White lake, a part of the Surplus canal. Undoubtedly a proprietor of higher land is entitled to the benefit of the natural flow therefrom, onto the lands of another, of surface or other water not brought there by artificial means. But, when water is brought onto the higher land by artificial means, the proprietor is not entitled to such natural flow onto the land of another, to his injury. The proprietors of higher lands have not the right to the natural flow of water brought onto their lands by artificial means. If natural forces alone bring water onto a man's land, he may allow natural forces to take it off, though it may be deposited on the land of another, to his injury. Seepage from lands, caused by irrigation water brought in canals or other artificial ditches, cannot be regarded as natural seepage or drainage. It is not brought there alone by natural laws, as water from rain, snow, or springs is. Nor is the water in question conducted by gravitation, in drains or depressions made by natural forces, into the Surplus canal. It appears that the seepage and surplus water complained of is conducted, in small, artificially constructed drains, into the chain of lakes, and some of those are connected by such artificial ditches until it reaches Decker's lake, and from that a drain ditch nearly 2 miles long, of considerable width and several feet deep,—in one place as much as 6 feet,—was made and is maintained by the defendants, through which the waters so collected in Decker's lake flow into the Surplus canal. The defendants have no right to conduct water through their canals onto lands irrigated by them, and then, by means of drain ditches, conduct the seepage and surplus water therefrom, rendered unfit for irrigation or domestic uses, into the Surplus canal, out of which the plaintiff has the right to take water for useful purposes. Butler v. Peck, 16 Ohio St. 334, 88 Am. Dec. 452; Gould, Waters, § 271; Livingston v. McDonald, 21 Iowa, 160, 89 Am. Dec. 563; Adams v. Walker, 34 Conn. 466, 91 Am. Dec. 742; 1 Wood, Nuisances, §§ 386, 387. There is evidence that the waters of Decker's lake, before the drain ditch complained of was constructed, when the water was high, sometimes overflowed its rim, and found its way into the Surplus canal. This, however, did not authorize the defendants to cut a drain ditch through the rim or intervening higher ground, and conduct such water as would not overflow into the Surplus canal. In Butler v. Peck, 16 Ohio St. 343, 88 Am. Dec. 452, the court said: "And it makes no difference that . . . in times of high water a portion of the waters of the basin would overflow its rim, and find their way, along a natural swale, to and upon the lands of the plaintiff below; for, as to those waters which naturally could not surmount nor penetrate the rim of the basin, but were compelled to pass off by evaporation, or remain where they were, the case is the same as if the basin had no outlet whatever." Section 2785, Comp. Laws Utah 1888, declares: "It shall be the duty of all persons using water from any natural source of supply, to provide suitable ditches for conveying surplus water again into the natural channel, or other place of use, to the satisfaction or approval of the water commissioner." It appears that the defendant canal companies divert water from the Jordan river into their canals, several miles above the point where the Surplus Canal Company connects with the same river (one of them as much as 17 miles above), and that they have a number of drain ditches, at different points, carrying the surplus and seepage water back into the river, the natural source of supply; but, when they came down to the chain of ponds or lakes, they constructed their drain ditches into them, and from them into the Surplus canal, whose waters the plaintiff uses for irrigation. They should have carried the seepage and surplus water complained of back into the common source, the Jordan river, as they do further up the river, as the statute contemplates, or to Salt lake. Either way appears practicable, from the evidence.

The canal companies, defendants, also claim a prescriptive right to drain the water complained of into the Surplus canal. The evidence proves that the defendants, the canal companies, first constructed their drain ditch in the spring of 1886, but enlarged and extended it as late as 1892. And it appears that the plaintiff used water from the Surplus canal to the last-named year, when it was found to be unfit for irrigation, culinary, or other domestic use. At that time plaintiff's officers and agents found it was so impure as to be altogether unfit for use. The drainage of pure water, or water suitable for irrigation or other uses to which the plaintiff wished to put it, into the Surplus canal, was not inconsistent with plaintiff's use of it for the purpose of irrigation or other use. So long as the plaintiff obtained water from the Surplus canal suitable for its purposes, it could make no difference whether it all came from the Jordan river, or other source. But as soon as seepage or surplus water was emptied into the canal, that rendered it unfit for use, then such drainage became inconsistent with plaintiff's use of the same canal for irrigation purposes, and the canal companies' use of it became exclusive. It has been held that adverse use of an easement will give title by prescription, when substantially the same, as to length of time, exclusiveness, acquiescence, and in other respects, as the adverse possession that will give title to real estate. If the adverse possession that will give title under the statute of limitations is required to be exclusive, continuous, and uninterrupted for seven, ten, or other number of years, under claim of right, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner, then the same facts must exist to give title in case of an easement. The statute of limitations as to real estate in force in the late territory and in this state at the time it is claimed that canal companies, defendants, gained the right by prescription to drain their seepage and surplus water into the Surplus canal, required the existence and concurrence of facts that do not exist with respect to the alleged easement relied upon in this case. This is apparent from an examination of §§ 3186, 3137, Comp. Laws Utah 1888. There is no analogy between the facts attending the alleged easement relied upon in this case, and the facts required to be shown in order to gain title under the statute of limitations.

The canal companies also rely upon § 2780 of the same compilation, which declares that "a right to the use of water for any useful purpose, such as for domestic purposes, irrigating lands, . . . is hereby recognized and acknowledged to have vested and accrued as a primary right to the extent of and reasonable necessity for such use thereof, under any of the following circumstances: . . . (2) Whenever any person or persons shall have had the open, peaceable, uninterrupted, and continuous use of water for a period of seven years." The facts upon which the easement claimed by defendants must stand are not analogous to those giving the right to the use of water under the statute. The statute relates to the use of water for a useful purpose. The defendants claim a right to drain impure and befouled water into a canal whose waters are used for the purpose of drainage, irrigation, and domestic purposes. The right described by the statute is to take water for useful purposes. The right as described in the pleadings and evidence is to discharge impure water, unfit for use, into a canal whose waters are used for irrigation, culinary, and other domestic purposes. The facts upon which the canal companies rely to establish a right by prescription are not analogous to those required by either of the statutes above referred to. And they can only be applied as to time when analogous in other respects. Harkness v. Woodman, 7 Utah, 227; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 11.

The discharge of impure and foul water into a canal whose waters are used for irrigation or other useful purpose creates a nuisance. It appears from the evidence in this case that the waters of the Surplus canal were rendered totally unfit for irrigation or domestic purposes by the seepage and surplus water from the land irrigated by defendants' canals, discharged through their drain ditch from Decker's lake. Section 3463 of the statutes (Utah Comp. Laws 1888), declares that "anything which is injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, is a nuisance, and the subject of an action. Such action may be brought by any person whose property is injuriously affected, or whose personal enjoyment is lessened by the nuisance; and by the judgment the nuisance may be abated or enjoined, as well as damages recovered." This section declares that anything which is injurious to health, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of property, is a nuisance. The mixing of alkali or mineral with water used for culinary or other domestic use, so that it cannot be used, is certainly offensive to the taste, injurious to health, and interferes with the enjoyment of life. And to befoul water used for irrigation, so that it kills vegetation, is an obstruction to the free use of property, and interferes with its enjoyment. A nuisance may be offensive to the sense of smell, sight, or hearing. In the prosecution of a business, offensive odors may be cast off, unusual and offensive noises may be given out, fluid substances may escape into a neighbor's well, or one may do or cause to be done that which is offensive to the eye. In either case it may become a nuisance. Or the thing done or maintained may be injurious to property, and affect the free use of it, and in that way be a nuisance. Wood, Nuisances, §§ 115, 116; Crane v. Winsor, 2 Utah, 248; Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, § 76. The use that will give a prescriptive right to maintain a private nuisance must be adverse, under a claim of right, uninterrupted and continuous, for twenty years, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the party whose right is invaded. Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 568, 30 Am. Rep. 567; 1 Wood, Lim. Act. 1st ed. § 132. Totel v. Bonnefoy, 123 Ill. 653. The general rule is that there can be no prescriptive right to maintain a public nuisance. Time will not sanctify it. Ashbrook v. Com. 1 Bush, 139, 89 Am. Dec. 616; Wright v. Moore, 38 Ala. 593, 82 Am. Dec. 731.

It appears from the evidence in the record that plaintiff's canal was designed to irrigate various tracts of land owned by different persons, and that a number of them irrigated their lands from the canal for a time, and that stock drank of its waters. The further question is, Did the canal companies create a public nuisance by draining the seepage and surplus water from the lands irrigated by them into the Surplus canal, in that way contaminating its waters with salt and other substances thus rendering it unfit for use? The statute (Utah Comp. Laws 1888, § 4566) declares that "a public nuisance . . . consists in unlawfully doing an act, or omitting to perform a duty, which act or omission either: (1) Annoys, injures, or endangers the comfort, repose, health, or safety of three or more persons. . . . (4) In any way renders three or more persons insecure in life, or the use of property." It appears that various persons were prevented from cultivating or using their property, and the water upon which they relied to some extent for watering stock and for domestic purposes was made unfit for these purposes. It is true that considerable evidence was introduced on the trial tending to show that much of the land situated so that it could be irrigated from plaintiff's canal is impregnated with alkali and salt, and unfit for agricultural purposes. But the evidence establishes the fact that crops grew on some of it prior to 1892, when irrigated with water from the plaintiff's canal, received through the Surplus canal, from the Jordan river, before the drain ditch from Decker's lake was enlarged; and we think the evidence authorizes the inference that a great portion of the land that could be leached and irrigated from plaintiff's canal would eventually become fit for cultivation if irrigated alone with water from the Jordan river, or with water through the Surplus canal, without being mixed with the water from the drain ditch from Decker's lake. There was also evidence tending to prove that the waters of White lake, through which the Surplus canal runs, contain a large per cent of salt; that its waters are unfit for irrigation. That lake is not large, and from the evidence we are of the opinion that a portion of the waters of the Jordan river, running through it, would purify and render it fit for irrigation, when not contaminated with the seepage and surplus water from the lands irrigated by the canals of the defendants, and by waters of the chain of lakes discharged through the drain ditch from Decker's lake.

The defendants finally urge that the findings of the court below should not be disregarded or set aside, and the decree based thereon reversed, unless it appears that they, or some one or more of them, are so essentially and palpably erroneous as to induce a belief that such findings were induced by a mistake, or that the court was misled in some essential respect with respect to them. This appeal was taken on questions of fact as well as of law, and this court has recently held that in equity cases we may go behind the findings, and weigh all the evidence, and decide according to its preponderance. But when the evidence as to a fact found to exist or not to exist is so evenly balanced, or the proof of it is so unsatisfactory, as to cause the mind to hesitate and pause as to the side on which it preponderates, or as to its existence or nonexistence, and to leave it in grave doubt, we are of the opinion the finding of the court below should remain. In the case of Whittaker v. Ferguson (decided at the present term, but not yet officially reported) 51 Pac. 981, this court said: "An appeal may be taken in equity cases on questions of fact as well as of law. The appellate court, therefore, by necessary intendment and implication, has the same jurisdiction and power in equity cases to determine questions of fact as of law, and may go behind the findings and decree of the trial court, consider all the evidence, decide on which side the preponderance thereof is, ascertain whether or not the proof justifies the findings and decree, and modify or set aside the findings and decree, and enter or direct such findings and decree to be entered as the evidence, in the judgment of the appellate tribunal, may justify." We hold that the court below erred in its findings, so far as they conflict with this opinion, and in granting the decree entered upon them. The decree appealed from is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to set aside its findings so far as they conflict with this opinion, and to make additional findings in conformity with it, and to enter a decree perpetually enjoining the three canal companies named as defendants from draining the seepage or surplus water from the lands irrigated from their canals, or any or either of them, or the waters of the chain of lakes mentioned in the pleadings, through the drain ditch from Decker's lake, also mentioned in the pleadings, or otherwise, into the Salt Lake Surplus Water canal, or into White lake, a part of it, and ordering them to fill up said drain ditch, and ordering a writ of injunction to the same effect, against each of the defendants, to be served upon them. Costs are awarded to the plaintiff against the defendants.

Miner, J., and Johnson, District Judge, concur.

Rehearing denied March 30, 1898.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

John H. KNAPP et al., Appts.,

v.

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(56 U. S. App. 452, 85 Fed. Rep. 329, 29 C. C. A. 171.)

1. A mortgagee who sues a purchaser from the mortgagor for a portion of the mortgage debt, which such purchaser has assumed to pay, does not thereby adopt the covenants of warranty in the mortgagor's deed, except as against the part of the indebtedness assumed and sued for, so as to prevent foreclosure of the mortgage against such purchaser for the balance of the debt.

2. The right of a mortgagee to enforce the payment of a mortgage debt as against the grantee of the mortgagor, who has assumed its payment, does not rest upon any contract between the mortgagee and grantee which is enforceable by the mortgagee by a suit at law, but is founded upon the fact that the grantee has become primarily liable to pay the debt, while the mortgagor is surety for its payment, so that the mortgagee may be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagor, and may, by a suit in equity, compel the grantee to keep his engagement.

NOTE.—As to liability of a purchaser subject to mortgage, see note to Jefferson v. Asch (Minn.) 25 L. R. A. on p. 275; also Robinson Bank v. Miller (Ill.) 27 L. R. A. 449; and Hare v. Murphy (Neb.) 29 L. R. A. 851.

40 L. R. A.

February 14, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota in favor of complainant in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Affirmed.

Before Sanborn and Thayer, Circuit Judges, and Philips, District Judge.

Statement by Thayer, Circuit Judge:

This suit was brought by the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, the appellee, against John H. Knapp, Helen W. Knapp, Edgar J. Knapp, and Herbert V. R. Knapp, the appellants, and against certain other persons who have not appealed, to foreclose a mortgage executed by William R. Marshall on October 1, 1889, in favor of the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, which mortgage covered a tract of land situated at the corner of Jackson and Tenth streets, in the city of St. Paul, state of Minnesota. The mortgage, as originally drawn, covered a tract of land fronting 100 feet on Jackson street, and 150 feet on Tenth street, and was given to secure a note executed by said Marshall for the sum of $20,000, payable on October 1, 1894. On June 2, 1890, Marshall paid $5,000 on said note, and obtained a release of a part of the mortgaged premises, the same being a lot of land fronting 48 feet on Tenth street, leaving the mortgage to stand as an encumbrance on the residue of the tract situated at the corner of said streets, which fronted 100 feet on Jackson street, and 102 feet on Tenth street. The appellants above named filed an answer to the bill of complaint, which, by its admissions and averments, discloses in substance the following facts: On November 12, 1891, William R. Marshall and wife sold and conveyed to the appellants, John H. Knapp, Edgar J. Knapp, and Herbert V. R. Knapp, for the sum of $32,000, a part of the mortgaged premises to which the lien of the mortgage then attached, to wit, all thereof except a strip of land 15 feet wide fronting on Jackson street, and extending back of that width a distance of 102 feet, the same being that part of the mortgaged premises which was most distant from Tenth street. The deed last mentioned contained the following clause by virtue of which the grantees above named assumed to pay a part of the mortgage indebtedness then existing on the property: "Subject to a mortgage encumbrance on said property of ten thousand dollars ($10,000), being two thirds of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000) balance owed to the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Connecticut, under a mortgage made by said William R. Marshall, dated October 1, 1889, recorded in the office of register of deeds of said Ramsey county, October 31, in book 228 of Mortgages, page 106, which sum of $10,000 with 6 per cent per annum interest from the date hereof said parties of the second part assume and agree to pay as part of the consideration hereinbefore stated." The deed in question also contained the following covenant made by the grantor: "And the said William R. Marshall, one of the parties of the first part, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, does covenant with the said parties of the second part, their heirs and assigns, that he is well seised in fee of the land and premises aforesaid, and has good right to sell and convey the same in manner and form aforesaid; that the same are free from all encumbrances except as hereinbefore stated, and the above bargained and granted lands and premises, is the quiet and peaceable possession of the said parties of the second part, their heirs and assigns, against all persons lawfully claiming or to claim the whole or any part thereof, the said party of the first part will warrant and defend." At a later date, to wit, May 25, 1893, William R. Marshall and wife conveyed to the same grantees above named, by a conveyance which was absolute in its terms, the aforesaid strip of land 15 feet in width, which was not covered by the deed of November 12, 1891; but it seems that this latter conveyance was made by Marshall and wife merely to secure the grantees therein named against their liability to pay that part of the mortgage indebtedness, to wit, $5,000, which Marshall had agreed to pay by the deed of November 12, 1891, and was a lien on the property which the appellants had purchased. The mortgage debt having matured on October 1, 1894, and being unpaid, the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, on or about April 1, 1895, demanded payment from the appellants of the sum of $10,000, being the part of the mortgage debt which they had assumed and agreed to pay. Payment was refused, whereupon a suit was brought by the aforesaid insurance company against the appellants in the district court of Ramsey county, state of Minnesota, to recover the sum of money so demanded. In the trial court, and in the supreme court of the state of Minnesota as well (62 Minn. 407) this suit resulted in a judgment against the appellants for the sum claimed. That judgment, it seems, was paid prior to the institution of the suit at bar. In their answer to the bill of complaint, the appellants further charged, in substance, that William R. Marshall was insolvent when the principal of the mortgage indebtedness became due, to wit, on October 1, 1894; that he subsequently died insolvent; that the plaintiff company assented or agreed to the arrangement for the division of the mortgage indebtedness as between said Marshall and the appellants John H. Knapp, Edgar J. Knapp, and Herbert V. R. Knapp, which is disclosed by the deed of November 12, 1891, heretofore mentioned; and that the mortgage sought to be foreclosed had therefore ceased to be a lien on the property, fronting 85 feet on Jackson street, and 102 feet on Tenth street, which they acquired from said Marshall by the aforesaid deed. The answer of the appellants contained no averment, however, touching the value of that part of the mortgaged property, to wit, the strip of land 15 feet in width fronting on Jackson street, which was retained by Marshall when the conveyance of November 12, 1891, was executed. The circuit court overruled the defenses which are disclosed by the appellant's answer, and entered a decree of foreclosure against all of the property covered by the mortgage lien, but it directed that the strip of land fronting 15 feet on Jackson street, and extending back of that width 102 feet from said street, being the property last conveyed by William R. Marshall to the appellants, should be first sold for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. To reverse such decree, the defendants below have prosecuted an appeal.

Messrs. Frank B. Kellogg, Cushman K. Davis, and C. A. Severance for appellants.

Messrs. Markham, Moore, & Markham, for appellee:

Upon the execution of the deed from Marshall to the Knapps containing the covenant on the part of the grantees to assume and pay two thirds of the mortgage indebtedness owing by Marshall to the appellee, the Knapps, as to that part of the mortgage indebtedness, became the principal debtors, and Marshall a surety, the covenant or promise of the Knapps to pay $10,000 became an additional security in the hands of Marshall, the surety, of which the appellee had the right, by virtue of the equitable doctrine of subrogation, to avail itself.

Travers v. Dorr, 60 Minn. 173; Alt v. Banholzer, 86 Minn. 57; Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 625, 33 L. ed. 673; Second Nat. Bank v. Grand Lodge, F. & A. Masons, 98 U. S. 123, 25 L. ed. 75; 1 Jones, Mortg. § 755; 1 Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur. § 455; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1206; Rice v. Sanders, 152 Mass. 108, 8 L. R. A. 315; Willson v. Burton, 52 Vt. 394; Flagg v. Gelmacher, 98 Ill. 293; Dean v. Walker, 107 Ill. 540, 47 Am. Rep. 467; Palmeter v. Carey, 63 Wis. 426; George v. Andrews, 60 Md. 26, 45 Am. Rep. 706; Boardman v. Larrabee, 51 Conn. 39; Figart v. Halderman, 75 Ind. 564; Ellis v. Johnson, 96 Ind. 377; Willard v. Worsham, 76 Va. 392; Marshall v. Davies, 78 N. Y. 414; Ayers v. Dixon, 78 N. Y. 318; Wales v. Sherwood, 62 How. Pr. 413; Thompson v. Bertram, 14 Iowa, 476; Halsey v. Reed, 9 Paige, 446; King v. Whitely, 10 Paige, 465; Hoy v. Bramhall, 19 N. J. Eq. 74; Crowell v. Currier, 27 N. J. Eq. 152; Youngs v. Trustees for Support of Public Schools, 31 N. J. Eq. 290; Crawford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 354; Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10; Booth v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 48 Mich. 299; Pardee v. Treat, 82 N. Y. 385; Coffin v. Adams, 131 Mass. 183; Biddel v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 354; Crowell v. Hospital of Saint Barnabas, 27 N. J. Eq. 650; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mayer, 3 Mo. App. 18; Huyler v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq. 504; Corbett v. Waterman, 11 Iowa, 86.

A provision whereby a grantee "assumes and agrees to pay" a mortgage is a contract, not merely to indemnify the grantor, but to pay the debt, provided it be the debt, of the grantor.

1 Jones, Mortg. 5th ed. § 769; Furnas v. Durgin, 119 Mass. 501, 20 Am. Rep. 341; Locke v. Homer, 131 Mass. 93, 41 Am. Rep. 199; Stout v. Folger, 34 Iowa, 71, 11 Am. Rep. 138; Wilson v. Stihcell, 9 Ohio St. 468, 75 Am. Dec. 477; Lathrop v. Atwood, 21 Conn. 117; Foster v. Atwater, 42 Conn. 244; Belloni v. Freeborn, 63 N. Y. 388; Merriam v. Pine City Lumber Co. 23 Minn. 314; Wicker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 94, 18 L. ed. 752; Gregory v. Hartley, 6 Neb. 356; Gage v. Lewis, 68 Ill. 604.

Thayer, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

No exception is taken by the appellants to the decree of the circuit court, in so far as it directs a sale of the strip of land 15 feet in width fronting on Jackson street; but it is strenuously insisted by them that the decree 40 L. R. A.

was and is erroneous, in so far as it permits a sale of the remaining 85 feet of the mortgaged property which was purchased by the appellants from William R. Marshall, the mortgagor, on November 12, 1891. A critical examination of the answer to the bill of complaint has satisfied us that this contention is based solely on the theory that by suing the appellants in the first instance to compel them to pay the sum of $10,000, being the two thirds of the mortgage debt which they had assumed to pay, the plaintiff company thereby adopted all the covenants contained in the deed of November 12, 1891, and became bound thereby to the same extent as Marshall, the grantor in such deed. The argument is, in effect, that the plaintiff in this manner made itself a party to Marshall's covenant to warrant and defend the title to that part of the mortgaged property which was conveyed to the appellants, except as against that part of the mortgage indebtedness, to wit, $10,000, which the appellants had assumed, and that it cannot be heard to assert a lien against the property which the appellants purchased, for that part of the mortgage debt, to wit, the sum of $5,000, which Marshall undertook to pay. Whether this theory is tenable depends very largely, we think, on the nature of the right which the complainant company acquired, and afterwards enforced by a suit against the appellants, by virtue of their agreement with Marshall to pay a portion of the mortgage debt. In some cases it has been held, in substance, that where the purchaser of an equity of redemption agrees with the mortgagor to pay the whole or a part of the mortgage debt, such a promise may be treated as a contract made by the mortgagor for the mortgagee's benefit, which the latter may adopt as his own, and enforce by a suit of law. See Fitzgerald v. Barker, 4 Mo. App. 103; Beardslee v. Morgner, 4 Mo. App. 139; Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268; Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178, 80 Am. Dec. 327; Rogers v. Gosnell, 51 Mo. 466, and cases there cited. In the opinion of the learned judge of the trial court, which is found in the record, it is stated that this is the rule in the state of Minnesota. The prevailing doctrine, however, is that which is stated and approved in Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 623, 624, 33 L. ed. 667, 673, namely, that the right of a mortgagee to enforce the payment of a mortgage debt as against a grantee of the mortgagor who has assumed its payment does not rest upon any contract existing between the mortgagee and grantee which is enforceable by the mortgagee by a suit at law, but is founded altogether upon the fact that by virtue of the agreement to assume the mortgage debt, the grantee becomes primarily liable to pay the same, while the mortgagor, with respect to his grantee, is merely a surety for its payment. Such being the relation existing between the mortgagor and his grantee, it is held that the mortgagee may be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagor, and, by a suit in equity for that purpose, may compel the grantee to keep his engagement with the mortgagor by paying the mortgage debt. But as the right which the mortgagee thus acquires by virtue of the agreement of a third party with the mortgagor to pay the mortgage debt is purely equitable, and does not rest on privity of contract, it will not be enforced if, for any reason, the contract between the mortgagor and his grantee could not be enforced by the former in a suit at law. If reasons exist which would enable the grantee to defend successfully an action brought by the mortgagor for nonpayment of the mortgage debt, the same reasons will preclude the mortgagee from enforcing his equitable right. Crowell v. Hospital of Saint Barnabas, 27 N. J. Eq. 650; Palmeter v. Carey, 63 Wis. 426; Boardman v. Larrabee, 51 Conn. 39; George v. Andrews, 60 Md. 26, 45 Am. Rep. 706; Biddel v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 854; Flagg v. Geltmacher, 98 Ill. 298; Pigart v. Halderman, 75 Ind. 564; Second Nat. Bank v. Grand Lodge, F. & A. A. Masons, 98 U. S. 123, 25 L. ed. 75; Halsey v. Reed, 9 Paige, 446; Pardee v. Treat, 82 N. Y. 385, 389; Coffin v. Adams, 181 Mass. 138, 137; Jones, Mortg. 5th ed. §§ 740, 770.

In view of the doctrine last stated, which is sustained by the great weight of authority, and is approved by the Federal Supreme Court, we are unable to concede that the complainant company adopted and became bound by the mortgagor's agreement with the purchaser of the equity of redemption to discharge a part of the mortgage debt merely because it sued the appellants to compel them to pay such portion of the mortgage debt as they had themselves assumed. It is obvious that, in bringing such suit, the mortgagee did not intend to release its lien upon any part of the mortgaged property. That proceeding cannot be regarded as an action at law, since the assumption agreement did not create any privity of contract between the complainant company and the appellants which would sustain such an action. Keller v. Ashford, 183 U. S. 610, 621, 622, 33 L. ed. 667, 672, 673. In the state of Minnesota where the suit was brought, there is but one form of action for the enforcement of private rights (Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, § 5131, chap. 66); and, whatever may have been the form of the suit in question, it was essentially an equitable proceeding to reach an additional obligation or security that had been given for the satisfaction of a part of the mortgage debt. The mortgagee was entitled to avail itself of that security by virtue of a well-established equitable doctrine, because the security or obligation was held by the mortgagor, who, with respect to the appellants, had become their surety for the payment of that part of the mortgage indebtedness which the appellants had assumed. This being an equitable proceeding to reach and appropriate the additional security that had been created by the assumption agreement it is undoubtedly true that the appellants were entitled, by way of defense to the claim, to plead any facts or circumstances which rendered the enforcement of the additional obligation either unjust or inequitable. Such a defense was in fact attempted by the appellants but the facts which they alleged and relied upon to defeat the suit were adjudged insufficient for that purpose by the supreme court of Minnesota (62 Minn. 407); and in this proceeding that adjudication must be regarded as conclusive.

The suit at bar proceeds upon the theory that the lien of the mortgage has never been released as respects any part of the mortgaged property, except the 48 feet fronting on Tenth street, which was released by the complainant company on June 2, 1890. The mortgagee seeks to have the lien of its mortgage enforced simply as against the mortgaged property. It did not demand a judgment over against the appellants in case there should be a deficiency in the proceeds of the foreclosure sale; nor was provision made for the entry of such a judgment by the decree of the circuit court. In other words, the complainant company in this proceeding does not ask for any relief under or by virtue of the assumption agreement, because the rights created by that agreement were adjudicated in the suit which was brought in the state court. The relief prayed for in this action cannot be denied, unless it is held that the mortgagor has released its lien upon the 35 feet fronting on Jackson street, which the appellants purchased, or has heretofore entered into an agreement with the appellants not to enforce the lien of the mortgage, as against said property; and for the reasons heretofore indicated, we are unable to so hold.

The result is that the decree of the Circuit Court will be affirmed.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the Fourth Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with October 1, 1897, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS; PERSONAL CAPACITY.
- V. FIDUCIARY RELATIONS.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; WILLS; LIENS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

The right of a court to examine legislative journals to determine whether an alleged statute was passed, is sustained in Wyoming under constitutional provisions requiring each house to keep a journal in which shall be entered the ayes and noes on the final passage of every bill. (Wyo.) 195.

Legislative apportionment.

A legislative apportionment changing one made since the last Federal census is held invalid under a constitutional provision for apportionment every ten years, based on the Federal census. (Ill.) 770.

Money.

A dollar bill, from the upper left-hand corner of which a piece $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches by $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches has been torn, is held not to be a legal tender for car fare. (N. J.) 410.

Use of public money.

A statute for raising a free-scholarship fund to support students who are unable to obtain an education otherwise, while attending the state university, is held unconstitutional as an attempt to raise public money by taxation for a private purpose. (Mo.) 280.

Language of public notice.

The rule that publication of an official notice must be made in the English language is applied to a case where it is held insufficient to publish a delinquent tax list in the English language in a German newspaper. (Wis.) 848

Health.

A contract by a city for the care of a person having leprosy, by laborers who have a family of children and have no experience in such matters, is held unreasonable as tending to spread the disease, and therefore an injunction is granted. (Md.) 494.

Game laws.

Game killed by Indians on a reservation and sold to another Indian is held subject to the game laws of the state after it is taken off the reservation to ship out of the state. (Minn.) 759.

Coroners' verdict.

The verdict of a coroner's jury is held merely advisory and without effect as a judgment or as evidence, so that it cannot be reviewed, set aside, or quashed in a judicial proceeding. (Ga.) 869.

Officers.

The negligence of a sheriff in failing to protect a prisoner from a mob is held to create no right of action against him. (Md.) 628.

On the theory that a reward to a public officer for doing his duty is against public policy, it is held that a statute offering a reward for the arrest of a criminal is not intended to apply to arrests by officers in the course of their duty. (Cal.) 855.

Railroad commission.

An order of a state railroad commission for the abolition of a grade crossing, according to a plan which includes abutments in the highway, is held a defense to a suit by the city for an injunction against such abutments in the street. (Conn.) 479.

School director.

The personal enmity of a school director toward a superintendent who is charged with misconduct, and the fact that he has declared that he will vote for his condemnation and has been a prime mover in the prosecution, are held to disqualify him, and justify a writ of prohibition against his sitting, where there is no appeal from the decision. (Wash.) 317.

Attorneys.

The attempt of an attorney pending proceedings for disbarment, to resign his office without consent of court, is held ineffectual to defeat his disbarment. (Or.) 194.

Posse comitatus.

Members of a posse comitatus are held to have no right to compensation from the county, in the absence of statutory provision therefor. (Mont.) 405.

Municipalities.

The right of a municipality to purchase an electric-light plant, and create a debt therefor, is denied, where the Constitution of the state prohibits the creation of debts except for the necessary expenses of the town. (N. C.) 163.

The right of a municipal corporation to recover indemnity from an abutting owner on account of a judgment against it for injuries due to a defective sidewalk is denied, where the city could itself, if he failed to repair the walk, do so at his expense. (Ohio) 294.

The liability of a city for defects in a toll road which it has built in another state under grant from that state, without authority from its own state, is denied. (Wis.) 829.

A city is held not liable, unless made so by statute, for damages caused by the failure of a bridge tender to open a draw in the bridge because the bridge became caught. (Mich.) 526.

A city is held not to be liable for injury from the explosion of a cannon cracker on the Fourth of July in violation of an ordinance, while persons were assembled on the streets shooting firecrackers, although the statute creates a liability for injury done by a mob or riot. (Wis.) 783.

Discretion as to license.

An ordinance giving a city council discretion as to the issuing of licenses in a certain part of the city is held valid. (Wyo.) 710.

Highways.

The use of a street to a reasonable extent for poles and wires of a telephone company is upheld as proper street use for which compensation is not required to abutting owners. (Ind.) 370.

Awning permit.

An order permitting an awning in violation of a general ordinance is held to be only a license subject to revocation at any time. (Ill.) 621.

Harbors.

The lease of harbor areas for storing and marketing fish is held unauthorized by the Washington Constitution, reserving such areas for conveniences of "navigation and commerce." (Wash.) 698.

Parks.

The erection of a schoolhouse on land dedicated for an ornamental public park is held to be a wrongful use subject to injunction. (Miss.) 402.

License tax.

A license tax on brokers is held to extend to brokers who buy and sell stocks and other securities on the floor of a stock exchange, making actual transfers of possession of the securities or of the payment therefor. (Ill.) 611.

Elections.

Residence on a steamboat while living upon it as a clerk, although he has no other home, is held insufficient to give a person a voting residence. (Md.) 753.

To similar effect, it is held that a purser cannot, by living on the boat, change his voting residence to another district of the same city. (Md.) 752.

The use of paper ballots is held unlawful under the Illinois statute requiring official ballots to be used, on which names of all candidates are printed, except those written by the voter. (Ill.) 617.

Water supply.

The right of a water company to refuse to turn on water for a building until unpaid charges against previous owners or tenants are paid, is held invalid, unless authorized by statute. (Mass.) 657.

The removal of a water meter is held lawful, although the consumer has so arranged his fixtures that on paying for the water without a meter it will cost him twenty times as much as others pay for the same quantity. (Mass.) 171.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Custom.

A custom of the carpet-making business which would give a color mixer exclusive title as against his employer to the shades and combinations of color devised by him is held void for unreasonableness. (Pa.) 550.

Bills and notes.

A written assignment of a negotiable note made on a separate and detached piece of paper is held insufficient to give the transferee the legal title. (Ga.) 244.

The mere nonpayment of the first of two notes secured by a deed of trust without any action on the part of the holders is held not to make the other note due, although the deed of trust provided that both should be due and payable on such default. (Mo.) 154.

Forged note.

Promises to pay a forged note, in the absence of circumstances to create an estoppel, are held not to be binding, when they were made without full knowledge of the facts. (Ariz.) 471.

Bonds.

The loss of public money by bank failure is held not to create a liability on the bond of a state treasurer conditioned to account for the money, and to perform the duties of his office. (Wyo.) 690.

40 L. R. A.

As to medium of payment.

A note "payable" in specified bonds at par is held absolutely payable in such funds, and not to become payable in money on failure to pay or tender the bonds when due. (Ark.) 74.

Gold clause.

An undisclosed gold clause in a mortgage on land bought at auction subject to the mortgage is held not to be a defect in the title for which the purchase can be canceled, where there is no probability that the existing policy of the government to keep all its funds at par will be changed before the mortgage comes due. (N. Y.) 666.

Assumption of risks.

The assumption of risks by express contract of an employee, including all risk of the employer's negligence, is held not contrary to public policy. (Ind.) 101.

Assignment of wages.

An assignment of wages for the period of one year is sustained, where the person was working under a contract, whether it was by the day, the week, or otherwise, if made and recorded as the statute required. (R. I.) 735.

Carriers.

A person having a mileage ticket, who tries to cross the main track to board a train on a siding, without going to the station, is held not to be a passenger. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 746.

The duty of an initial carrier stipulating to forward the property to destination but not to be liable beyond its own line as a common carrier, where there is an agreement for through passenger-train service for a carload of fruit, is held to require the initial carrier to see that proper instructions for such service are given to every carrier on the line, and not merely to the first of them, and for any delay it has the burden of showing that it was not itself in default. (Cal.) 78.

A carrier shipping a carload of orange trees from New Orleans to California by way of Denver, Colorado, and Ogden, Utah, without taking advice from the consignor or consignee, merely because its own more southern route was temporarily broken by storms and wash-outs, is held liable for the destruction of the trees by freezing. (Cal.) 850.

The delivery of goods without surrender of the bill of lading, which stipulates for its surrender, is held proper, if it is made to the consignee, or on his order, or by his direction. (Ga.) 367.

Sale; delivery to carrier.

One who delivers goods to a carrier consigned to himself, to his agent, or his own order, presumptively intends to retain title to the goods, but when he consigns them to a vendee named in the bill of lading, it is presumed that he intends the title to vest then in the vendee, except that, if he prepays the freight, he is presumed to retain title during transit. (Neb.) 534.

Delivery of telegrams.

The delivery of a telegram to the wife of the addressee in his absence is held not to be, as matter of law, either necessary or sufficient to discharge the duty of the telegraph company, but its duty in this respect is a question of fact for the jury. (Tex.) 209.

Storage of game.

A contract for the cold storage of game during the closed season is held void, where the statute makes its possession during such period unlawful. (Mo.) 151.

Innkeepers.

An innkeeper is held liable for goods stolen from a peddler's cart in his stable, although the peddler had no license for his business, as he was lodging at the inn as an individual and not as a peddler. (Me.) 491.

As to care for patient in hospital.

An employer who takes an injured employee to a hospital and promises to pay for his care is denied the right to cancel his arrangement at a time when the employee cannot be safely removed, unless the patient is able to pay his own expenses. (Minn.) 888.

Contracts for racing.

An agreement by the owners of race horses to divide premiums and stake moneys offered by racing associations if awarded to any of their horses is upheld against the claim that it was a wagering contract. (Cal.) 76.

A partnership for the purpose of horse racing on a bet with one who was regarded as a "sucker," and whom the partners deceived by making him think their horse was untrained, is held to be such a conspiracy to defraud that neither partner can compel the other to account for its share of profits. (Mont.) 158.

Insurance.

Keeping a stock of drugs and intoxicating liquors for sale without the permit required by law is held not to make insurance thereon void as against public policy. (Iowa) 845.

The indivisibility of a policy of insurance upon a quantity of furniture as a whole is held to render it entirely void where it is void as to part because of lack of sole ownership and the existence of encumbrances, and of false swearing by the insured. (D. C.) 358.

The express terms of an insurance policy to the effect that it shall be void if there be any encumbrance on the property, "whether inquired about or not," are held insufficient to make the policy invalid because of an encumbrance, if no inquiries were made of the insured, and he made no false representation on the subject. (Neb.) 408.

Return of unearned premiums is held necessary to the cancellation of a standard policy providing, not only for five days' notice of cancellation, but also that the unearned premiums shall be returned on surrendering the policy. (N. Y.) 765.

An abrasion of the skin of a toe, caused by wearing a new shoe, is held to be an accident, within the meaning of an insurance policy. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 658.

Death caused by blood poisoning due to germs in cotton inserted by a dentist in the wound made by removal of teeth, to stop hemorrhage, is held to be within a provision against liability for poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled. (Wis.) 651.

An attempt of a traveling salesman to cross a slough in a public road, which he had often crossed when he thought there was no danger to his life in so doing, is held not to be a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. (Ohio) 453.

Sitting on a bag on a railroad track at a highway crossing, and when warned of the approach of a train, starting away but turning back for the bag, are held not to be a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within the meaning of an insurance policy. (Va.) 482.

A farmer attempting to drive a bull from a calf pasture is held not to expose himself voluntarily to unnecessary danger, if he had no reason to believe that there was danger in so doing. (Mich.) 440.

A bank cashier using a buzz saw to cut boards for his own use is held not to engage in any professional employment or exposure not rated as preferred. (Mich.) 444.

A person hunting prairie chickens with a loaded gun when it is unlawful to kill them, who is injured by an accidental discharge of his gun as he is attempting to climb a bank, is held not to be injured as a result of violating the law, within the meaning of an insurance policy. (N. D.) 487.

Twenty-nine days' delay in giving notice of an accident after knowledge of the facts is held fatal, where the policy required immediate notice. (Wis.) 883.

III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

The power of the state railroad commission to compel intersecting railroads to make a connecting switch and interchange loaded cars and fix joint rates for shipments partly over each is held constitutional. (Minn.) 389.

The invalidity of the scheme of a corporation is held to be no defense to a subscriber against creditors of the company who relied on the subscriptions, when it did not appear in the contract of subscription or the prospectus. (Va.) 240.

A contract between two persons who are equal owners of substantially all the stock of a corporation, attempting to dispose of its property, is held not binding on the corporation. (Ill.) 589.

The pledge for his own debt by a cashier of a bank, of shares of corporate stock intrusted to the bank for safe keeping by a guardian of infant owners who had signed a blank transfer as guardian, is held to give the pledgee no rights as against the infants, even when new certificates had been issued by the corporation. (Mass.) 498.

Forfeiture of franchise.

The forfeiture of the franchise of a water company for flagrant disregard of its duty to furnish wholesome water is enforced notwithstanding an offer after suit is brought to perform the contract. (Tex.) 203.

An insurance organization is held to have forfeited its charter by attempting to issue policies in excess of the amount allowed to be issued on any single life. (Md.) 187.

Alien ownership.

Conveyances to a corporation a majority of the stock of which was owned by citizens are held void when aliens acquire a majority of the stock afterwards, under a constitutional prohibition of alien ownership. (Wash.) 480.

Foreign.

Insurance on the assessment plan, though not authorized to be transacted by stock companies in Ohio, is held a business for which corporations of other states may be licensed if they are authorized to carry on such insurance business by the laws of the state in which they are created; but it is held that such business under the Ohio laws must be for the sole benefit of the policyholders, and its revenue principally derived from post mortem assessments for specific losses. (Ohio) 418.

The right of a foreign corporation to plead the statute of limitations when it has agents and officers on whom service of process can be made in the state is sustained, notwithstanding its failure to comply with the statute by filing its charter in the state. (Tenn.) 768.

State institution.

An agricultural and mechanical college, being a public or quasi corporation is held exempt from being sued, in the absence of statutory authority therefor. (Okla.) 677.

Promoters.

A promoter who transfers land which he had purchased before anything was done toward forming a corporation, to the corporation when formed, is held not to be liable for the profit made by him, in the absence of any misrepresentation or false statement, although he did not disclose the amount paid by him to the subscribers to the corporation. (Wis.) 837.

Syndicate.

A syndicate is defined, and the duties of its members to each other are discussed at length, in a Maryland case which holds that the utmost good faith toward each other is necessary, and that one member cannot be allowed to obtain any secret advantage over the others. (Md.) 216.

A secret agency of members of a syndicate who act as agents for it in purchasing property, whereby they get a commission from the vendor, is held fraudulent on the other members. (Va.) 284.

Lodge.

A mandatory injunction to compel a secret password of a grand lodge to be given to a delegate of a subordinate lodge is held to be beyond the province of equity. (Ky.) 488.

Church.

A bishop of the Roman Catholic Church is held to be under no implied obligation to pay the salary of a priest assigned to duty by his predecessor or by himself, and a decision against the priest by a church tribunal to which he had submitted the controversy is held binding upon him. (N. Y.) 670.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS; PERSONAL CAPACITY.

A right of action to the "heirs or personal representatives" of a person killed by wrongful act or neglect is held not to extend to parents. (Wash.) 822.

A tort committed by a husband upon his wife while they are living together as husband and wife is held not actionable by her, in the absence of statute. (Mich.) 757.

The marriage in a state where it is valid, of a divorced person, who by the law of his domicil was incapable of remarrying, is held not to be void at his domicil unless the statute expressly so provides, although he went out of the state for the express purpose of evading the law, and immediately returned. (Vt.) 428.

A wife's right of action against one who induces her husband to abandon her is upheld, but the husband's parent is held entitled to give him advice in good faith. (Pa.) 549.

Custody of child.

The right of a father to the custody of a child is held subject to the consideration of the child's welfare, where he has for five or six years allowed sisters of the mother, in accordance with her will, to keep and rear the child. (Va.) 623.

Support of child.

The right of the mother of a child, who has been divorced from her husband, to recover from him for the maintenance of the child which has been awarded to her, is sustained. (Wash.) 587.

(FIDUCIARY RELATIONS. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.)

An order for the support of minor children by the father, made in a divorce suit long after the decree had become final and the mother had remarried, was held to be within the jurisdiction of the court, where the decree awarded her the custody of the children without any provision for their maintenance. (Cal.) 585.

Another somewhat striking decision as to an implied promise holds that the father is liable to pay the mother, after their divorce, for keeping a child which the father, by the decree, had a right to, if he was left with the mother, although she refused to surrender him and the father told her he would not pay for the child if she did not. (Wis.) 579.

Insanity.

The payment of the check of an insane person adjudged such in another state, although his insanity was not known to the bank, is held to make the bank liable. (Ga.) 250.

Marriage of a person adjudged mentally imbecile is held absolutely void ab initio. (N. C.) 737.

Mere belief in spiritualism is held insufficient proof of insanity, but where such a belief was made the means of inducing an aged woman to marry a man much younger than herself and notoriously unfit morally to be her husband, when her chief object was to give him the right to her money for philanthropic schemes that he had fraudulently induced her to believe in, the marriage and a will in his favor were held void. (Ill.) 258.

V. FIDUCIARY RELATIONS.

Money due to an estate, collected by one who is afterwards appointed administrator, is held to become a part of the cash assets of the estate for which his bond is liable, but for which the administrator de bonis non cannot bring an action against him or his estate. (Me.) 83.

Negligent injuries.

The negligence of a shipper in piling lumber on a car is held not to make him liable for injury to a brakeman by the shunting of the lumber while coupling cars, where the duty of the railroad company to inspect the car has intervened before the injury. (Mich.) 528.

Injury to passenger.

The intoxication of a passenger standing on the running board of a street car is held not to absolve the carrier from the duty to exercise care toward him, nor prevent his recovering damages if injured by the carrier's negligence. (Mich.) 181.

Injury by train.

A person sitting or lying on a railroad track when struck by a train, between midnight and daylight, is held to be guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, and the presumption of the negligence of the railroad company when a person is struck by a train is overcome. (Ga.) 364.

Defective street car.

The use of a defective electric car which prevented stopping it with reasonable promptness on discovering the danger of a boy on the track is held to render the company liable for the injury, although the boy was guilty of contributory negligence. (Utah) 172.

Employer's negligence.

A servant is held entitled to rely on the promise of his master to repair defects in the place where he works only for a reasonable time to make the repairs. (Ill.) 781.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.

Arrest.

An arrest of a street car passenger by a policeman called by the conductor for that purpose, on the charge of riding without payment of fare, is held not to make the carrier liable, if the conductor was authorized only to put delinquent passengers off the car. (Ark.) 478.

Assault.

An assault with intent to rape upon a passenger, by a baggage master on the train, is held to make the carrier liable in an action for damages. (Ga.) 483.

Libel.

The transmission of a libelous telegram is held to be a publication by the telegraph company. (Minn.) 661.

Malicious fence.

Building a high fence solely for the purpose of annoying and injuring a neighbor is held to be lawful when it is erected on one's own land. (Ohio) 177.

Fraudulent mortgage sale.

Interference with ownership of real property by selling it under a fraudulent mortgage and preventing payment of rents to the real owner is held to constitute an actionable wrong, 40 L. R. A.

but no action is allowed for the resulting damage to the owner's reputation. (Md.) 882.

Screwing down windows which lead to fire escapes is held not to violate the statute, and not to constitute negligence, where the frames are so light that they can be easily broken if necessary, when there is not time to unfasten them. (N. Y.) 411.

Of mine boss.

The negligence of a mine boss, the employment of whom is required by statute, is held to be that of a fellow servant for which the employer is not liable. (W. Va.) 812.

Contractor's negligence.

For injury to a spectator at a free exhibition of marksmanship given by an independent contractor employed by a street-railway company, upon the latter's grounds, the company is held liable. (Mass.) 345.

Injury by dog.

A traveler leaving his team at a livery and feed barn for the night, who went, between 8 and 8½ o'clock in the evening, to the yard to see that his buggy had been put in the barn and to get some articles out of the buggy, when he was attacked and bitten by a dog, is held not to have been a trespasser or to be doing an unlawful act, within the meaning of the Iowa statute which makes the owner of a dog liable for injuries done by it to any person who is not engaged in an unlawful act. (Iowa) 117.

Fright.

Liability for personal injuries resulting from fright without other physical injuries is sustained in an action for negligence. (S. C.) 679.

Frightening team.

The loud blowing of a locomotive whistle several times under a bridge over which vehicles of all kinds are constantly passing is held negligence, unless there is a necessity therefor, and the burden of proof of that is on the railroad company. (Tenn.) 436.

Fire.

One whose negligence caused a fire is held not to be liable for property burned after the fire had united with another for which no known responsible agency could be fixed, and either fire would have been alone sufficient to do the damage. (Wis.) 457.

Dangerous person at large.

Persons having custody of a convict are held not to be liable for damages resulting from a crime committed by him as a result of their failure to keep him safely confined where they did not participate in the crime or have reason to apprehend it. (Ga.) 95.

Dangerous wires.

The liability of a city for negligence in respect to an abandoned telephone wire crossing another dangerous electric wire is held to exist, notwithstanding the liability of other persons or corporations therefor. (Pa.) 811.

The stringing of dangerous electric wires over a bridge where employees must come in contact with them when making repairs, if the insulation is not sufficient to make contact with them safe, is held such negligence as will make the electric company liable for the death of an employee of the owner of the bridge when repairing it. (Or.) 799.

Dangerous premises.

The liability of a city for the drowning of a child in a pond on private premises is denied although the city caused the formation of the pond by obstructing water, and may be liable for the injury to the property. (Neb.) 531.

The explosion of a digester in a pulp mill operated by a lessee is held to create no liability on the part of the lessor for injury to an employee of the lessee. (Me.) 377.

The occupant of a house is held not to be liable for injury received by stepping, when it was dark, into a coal hole about 2 feet back from the street line, in a space paved like the sidewalk and covered with coal, while a coal wagon stood at the curb, and employees of a coal dealer were preparing to put in the coal, although the injured person was a foreign woman who did not know the custom of putting in coal through coal holes. (Mass.) 347.

Dangerous attraction for child.

Leaving a platform car without any brake on a street-railway side track is held not to constitute negligence which will render the company liable for a resulting injury to a child playing with it. (Mich.) 385.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; WILLS; LIENS.

A decision on a question of great importance discussed elaborately by the court denies the validity of a statute limiting recovery on a debt secured by mortgage to the property mortgaged. (Wash.) 802.

Dogs.

Dogs are held to be such property that an action of trover may be maintained for a dog that is converted. (Ga.) 503.

The right of property in dogs is upheld as the basis of an action for negligence of a street-railway company in running over a dog. (Tenn.) 518.

Easements.

An easement for a railroad right of way is held not to arise by occupation under color of title, where the occupation was lawful under the right of eminent domain. (N. C.) 415.

An easement of light and air is held not to pass by implication on a conveyance of a building with windows looking over vacant lots. (Cal.) 476.

The doctrine that an easement appurtenant to a close is appurtenant to every portion of it is denied application to an easement of light and air. (Mass.) 754.

Use of another bar-way for eleven years after one which connected a right of way by prescription with a highway had been shut up because it was impassable on account of the lowering of the road by the public authorities is held not to constitute an abandonment of the original bar-way, so as to preclude the owner of the easement from cutting it down to the grade of the highway and using it when the new bar-way is shut up against him. (Conn.) 81.
40 L. R. A.

A right of way by necessity is held to arise on a partition of lands if it would have been created in favor of the dominant estate on its conveyance or devise by the common ancestor, and an offered substitute consisting of a private way across other lands not belonging to the common estate is insufficient to defeat the way of necessity. (Ind.) 105.

Rents.

The right of action on a covenant to pay rent passes on the death of the lessor to his administrators, although his heirs are the only persons beneficially interested. (Mass.) 321.

Bee tree.

One who finds a bee tree on the land of another is held to have no interest in them or in the tree in which they are, and where he leaves them in a hive which he does not own, on such land, he is held to have no interest in them which can be the subject of larceny. (Iowa) 687.

Buildings.

An apartment house intended only for residence purposes is held to be allowable on premises restricted by deed to residence purposes. (Ky.) 489.

Trusts.

A man entitled to half the income of a joint trust, who obtained from the trustee, who was financially embarrassed, a mortgage for one half the trust, concealing the facts from the other cestui que trust, is held to be a trustee in one half of such mortgage for the other cestui que trust. (Pa.) 552.

Exemptions.

The selection of cows which can be claimed as exempt from a chattel mortgage under a statute is held to be the right of the householder and not of his wife, and her consent to the selection is unnecessary. (Mich.) 150.

Stock.

Shares of stock in a corporation are held to be personal property only, and governed by the law of the owner's domicile, and therefore a legacy of such shares is held to lapse under the law of the legatee's domicile, irrespective of the law of the state where the will was made and the corporation was located. (Md.) 380.

Minerals.

Mineral oil and gas are held not to be included in a deed of iron ore, fire clay, and other valuable minerals, with the right to use pits, shafts, railroads, etc., to remove such minerals. (Ohio) 266.

Name.

The use of the name of a retiring partner which the continuing partner is entitled to, under the contract of dissolution, is held to be a personal right which cannot be transferred to a corporation organized to continue the business. (Md.) 632.

Fence.

Failure to trim a hedge fence on a division line is not within a statute providing for an appeal to the fence viewers in case of an insufficient fence. (Iowa) 626.

Homestead.

A woman who abandons her husband and lives apart from him in another state with another man does not thereby forfeit her right to his homestead as a widow when he dies. (Ark.) 750.

Partnership property.

Partnership property is held properly conveyed to pay notes signed by individual partners. (Wash.) 297.

Land sold by court.

The sale of lands by a court of equity to prevent their loss through inability of a life tenant to pay the taxes is sustained, and possible after-born children are held to be bound by it. (Ill.) 776.

Wharves.

Owners of land abutting on a lake owned by the state are held to have the right to make wharves and piers in aid of, but not obstructing, navigation in the shoal water far enough to reach water navigable for such boats as are in use on the lake. (Wis.) 635.

Shore.

Title to a proportionate share of land under water depending on title to the upland is held to be conveyed by a deed of a certain number of undivided acres out of the tract of upland bordering on the water. (C. C. App. 7th C.) 398.

Ditches.

The independent existence of possessory rights to ditches and the use of water is declared in an Idaho case holding that a ditch may be conveyed, reserving the water right, or the water right be conveyed, reserving the ditch. (Idaho) 485.

Irrigation.

The right to irrigate land is held subject to the duty of the party irrigating it to take care of the seepage or waste water so as not to damage others, and in this case the seepage water was unfit for irrigation because it had become mineralized by the land which it irrigated. (Utah) 851.

Surface water.

The owner of a city lot is denied the right to fill up a natural depression which has carried off surface water from a large section of the city, although it is not technically a water-course, if the city has undertaken to keep the outlet open, and its obstruction would be followed by serious injury to the city and the people in the territory drained. (Iowa) 465.

Wills.

A will giving all testator's property to an unmarried woman who is appointed one of his executors and whom he afterwards marries, is held not to show on its face that it was made in contemplation of marriage, so as to be preserved from revocation by the marriage. (Mass.) 191.

A gift by will of a certain sum to a priest to say masses for the testator is held valid as a direct gift to take effect at once, and therefore not void as a private trust in perpetuity. (R. I.) 717.

A bequest to a priest for the celebration of masses for the souls of the testator and another person is sustained as a direct gift to the donee with an injunction to the performance of the mass, and not as a trust. (Kan.) 721.

Another case sustaining the validity of bequests or devises for masses is one in which the gift was to a church for that purpose. The court holds that the trust is not private, but public and charitable, as it aids to support the clergy and public worship. (Ill.) 780.

But in another case a bequest to a bishop to procure masses for the repose of the souls of certain persons is held void for want of any beneficiary who can enforce performance of the trust. (Wis.) 725.

Lien.

A lien for repairs on a buggy is held superior to a pre-existing chattel mortgage upon it, when this provided that the property should not be improperly used or cared for. (Neb.) 761.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES.

Constructive service.

The matrimonial domicile of a wife who has been justified by cruelty in leaving her husband is held changed by her removal to another state, so as to prevent jurisdiction by constructive service of process in a divorce suit in the state from which she removed. (N. Y.) 291.

Judgment lien.

A record of the judgment is held necessary to complete its "rendition" for the purpose of a lien, where the statute requires the recording in order to make the judgment valid. (Iowa) 375.

A statute limiting the lien or charge of a judgment to six years, and prohibiting its renewal except for one year after the act takes effect, is held an unconstitutional impairment of contracts previously existing. (Wash.) 815.

Enforcing assumed mortgage.

The right of a mortgagee to enforce the debt as against a grantee of the mortgagor who has assumed its payment is held to rest on the principle of subrogation, and not upon any contract which he can enforce. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 861.

Money had and received.

An officer who receives fees to which he is not entitled, from a person whom he knows to be ignorant of the law, and does not inform him that it is not necessary to pay them, is held liable, on the ground of fraud, to an action for money had and received. (Me.) 185.

Guardian ad litem.

The representation of persons unborn by a guardian ad litem as provided by statute is held sufficient to constitute due process of law in a suit to remove a cloud. (Mass.) 127.

Garnishment.

One garnished for a debt due a nonresident creditor is allowed to prevent judgment by showing that without his collusion, and notwithstanding his plea of the pendency of such proceeding, a court at the creditor's domicile has rendered judgment against him on the debt in favor of the creditor, which he has been obliged to pay. (Va.) 287.

Ejectment.

Ejectment is denied on account of the projection of the eaves of a barn over a boundary line, where the eaves of the plaintiff's barn are lower, and are so close to the line that the water therefrom falls on defendant's land. (Wis.) 577.

Set-off.

A claim accruing in favor of an assignee for creditors for a share of the proceeds of money collected after the assignment by a person to whom judgments had been previously transferred by the assignor under a contract for a division of the proceeds is held subject to set-off against a claim of the other party which 40 L. R. A.

was due at the time of the assignment. The rule is laid down that the maturity of either claim at the time of the assignment is sufficient to give the right of set-off. (N. Y.) 664.

Injunction.

An injunction to prevent the proprietor of a theater from breaking his contract with a manager, for the use of the theater and its equipment, with lights, heat, ushers, etc., and from letting a rival company have the theater for the time in question, is denied on the ground that a court of equity cannot compel the full performance of the contract, and that a part of it cannot be enforced. (Ill.) 86.

An injunction to prevent the approval of a uniform policy of insurance by the superintendent of insurance under an unconstitutional statute is denied, as the statute, if unconstitutional, cannot stand in the way of other contracts. (Mo.) 501.

Evidence.

A statute making books of science and art presumptive evidence of facts of general notoriety or interest is held not to include medical works, such as a treatise on concussion of the spine, about the extent and character of which there is some difference of opinion among medical men. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 558.

But statistics of mechanical experiments and tabulations of their results, where the scientific work containing them is concededly recognized as a standard authority by the profession, and when they are generally relied upon by experts in that field, are held admissible in evidence to support the opinions of experts. (C. C. App. 2d C.) 561.

Physical examination.

An examination with instruments in case of injury to plaintiff's bladder is held to be beyond the discretion of the court, under evidence showing that it might be dangerous. (Wis.) 581.

Comment to jury.

Against an elaborate dissenting opinion, it is held that the failure of a defendant to examine an employee present in court as a witness on a matter within his knowledge and as to which the evidence was conflicting is a matter which the plaintiff's counsel may urge in argument to the jury, as a circumstance from which it may be inferred that, if examined, the employee would have testified against the defendant. (Ga.) 84.

Demurrer.

The rule that allegations of fact are admitted by demurrer is held subject to an exception of such improbable allegations as that a child less than two years of age performed certain specified services of the value of $3 per month. (Ga.) 258.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

That which constitutes an offense against a state statute, triable only in a court of record, is held to be beyond the power of a municipality to make by ordinance an offense against the city. (Tex.) 212.

Mixing food.

A statute making the mixture of any article of food an offense is held to be too general to be enforced. (Tex.) 201.

Telegraphing bet.

A statute prohibiting a person to keep a place for transmitting money to be bet on horse-races, etc., or to be concerned in such business, is held valid as applied to a person who sends the money to another state by telegraph. (Conn.) 607.

Larceny.

A dog is the subject of larceny under a statute making it a crime to steal "chattels." (Iowa) 508.

40 L. R. A.

Sentence.

A statute providing for indeterminate sentence of criminals, not more than the maximum nor less than the minimum prescribed for a specified crime by statute, is held constitutional. (Ind.) 109.

Evidence.

The hypnotism of a person accused of crime is held insufficient to render evidence made by him while under the influence admissible in his favor. (Cal.) 269.

See also supra, VIII.

Witness fees.

The constitutional right of an accused person to compulsory process for his witnesses is held insufficient to give his witnesses a right to claim fees from the county. (S. C.) 426.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

- Adverse possession; to flats 394
Almanac; as evidence 553
Animals; property rights in dogs:—(I.) Generally; (II.) actions of trover, replevin, and trespass; (III.) actions against common carriers; (IV.) actions for injuries to dogs by railroad and street cars; (V.) right to kill dogs: (a) police power; (b) unlawfully killing dogs; (c) barking and howling dogs; (d) dangerous dogs; (e) trespassing dogs; (f) sheep killing dogs; (g) dogs chasing other animals; (h) dogs "at large;" (i) killing a dog by mistake; (VI.) criminal actions for injuries to dogs; (VII.) larceny and obtaining a dog by false pretenses; (VIII.) value; (IX.) as to license and tax laws: (a) generally; (b) taking property without due process of law 503
Associations. See SYNDICATES.
Bees; property rights in:—(I.) Generally; (II.) trespass and trover; (III.) larceny; (IV.) tithes 687
Carriers; intoxication as affecting negligence of passengers 134
Contracts; acceptance of 599
Corporations; contract by chief stockholders 599
Criminal law; effect of hypnotism in criminal cases 269
Dogs. See ANIMALS.
Drunkenness; as affecting negligence 131
Ejectment; effect of prior decision on statutory new trial in real actions 825
Evidence; intoxication as evidence of negligence 143
 Scientific books and treatises as evidence:—(I.) Exact sciences: (a) general rule as to admissibility; (b) tables of expectancy of life: (1) admissibility generally; (2) in accident cases; (3) in other cases generally; (4) conclusiveness and effect; (c) the almanac; (II.) inexact sciences: (a) general rule as to admissibility; (b) reasons for the rule; (c) the contrary rule; (d) opinions founded on books; (e) use of, on examination; (f) use of, to sustain or discredit expert; (g) use of, on cross-examination; (h) use of, in argument; (III.) law; (IV.) miscellaneous matters 553
 Presumptions as to sanity at time of marriage 742
Executors and administrators; right to rents on lease of intestate's property:—(I.) Classification by states; (II.) English cases: (a) form of lease; (b) apportionment; (c) summary of English cases; (III.) summary as to rents accruing during owner's life; (IV.) summary as to rents accruing after owner's death: (a) rights of heir, (b) rights of administrator: (1) by statute; (2) in a foreign state; (c) liability of administrator: (1) generally; (2) for use and occupation; (3) accounting and sureties; (d) rights of creditors; (e) apportionment 821
What assets pass to the administrator de bonis non:—(I.) Generally; (II.) the rule in the different states; (III.) summary: (a) goods remaining in specie; (b) choses in action; (c) avoiding sales or transfers made by predecessor; (d) rule at common law: (1) where assets have been converted by predecessor; (2) where there is a devastavit; (3) requiring the predecessor to account; (4) money and balance due from predecessor; (e) where the common-law rule has been changed by statute: (1) where assets have been converted by predecessor; (2) where there is a devastavit; (3) requiring the predecessor to account; (4) money and balance due from predecessor 83
Fence; liability for the malicious erection of a fence:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) malice gives no ground of action; (III.) contrary doctrine; (IV.) state statutes and decisions thereunder 177
Fisheries; right of, separated from upland 398
Husband and wife; marriage of person when insane:—(I.) Invalidity of; (II.) degree of incapacity which will affect; (III.) test of capacity to contract; (IV.) test of capacity to know the nature of the act; (V.) incapacity combined with fraud; (VI.) incapacity as a ground for divorce; (VII.) ratification and waiver of right to attack; (VIII.) evidence of incapacity: (a) presumption and burden of proof; (b) sufficiency, weight, and admissibility; (c) effect of inquisition; (IX.) annulment: (a) necessity of decree for; (b) jurisdiction; procedure; (c) effect 737
Hypnotism; (I.) Nature of subject; (II.) definition; (III.) its existence and effect generally; (IV.) its use in procuring the commission of crime; (V.) its use in procuring submission to criminal acts or attacks; (VI.) its use as an inquisitorial agent; (VII.) its curative uses; propriety of restraint 269
Incompetent persons. See HUSBAND AND WIFE; HYPNOTISM.
Injunction; by municipalities against nuisances in waters and watercourses:—(I.) In general; (II.) pollution and other matters affecting health 465
Insurance; voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within meaning of insurance policy:—(I.) Construction compared with negligence; (II.) consciousness of danger; (III.) risks incident to duty or necessity; (IV.) unexpected results; (V.) what con-

- stitutes; particular cases; (VI.) proof of, as a defense 432
- Validity of fire insurance on property illegally used:—(I.) General principles; (II.) violation of excise laws; (III.) offenses against public order and decency; (IV.) violation of law taxing occupations 845
- Intoxication. See DRUNKENNESS.
- Landlord and tenant. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.
- Larceny; of dog 514
Of bees 689
- Law books; as evidence 558
- Malice. See FENCE.
- Masses; validity of bequests for 717
- Master and servant; liability for employing drunkard 149
- The rights of a servant who continues work on the faith of his master's promise to remove a specific cause of danger:—(I.) introductory; (II.) general rule stated; (III.) rationale of the relation between the parties after the giving of the promise; (IV.) continuance of work after promise not contributory negligence as matter of law: (a) generally; (b) contributory negligence predicated from the gravity of the risk incurred; (c) contributory negligence predicated from the length of time the servant has worked after the promise was given; (d) illustrative cases; (V.) servant's action not maintainable unless his continuance of work was actually induced by the master's promise to protect him from some danger, etc.; (VI.) whose promise is binding on an employer; (VII.) rule where the promise relates to simple appliances; (VIII.) obligations of the servant pending the fulfillment of the promise 751
- Medical books; as evidence 558
- Municipal corporations. See INJUNCTION.
- Negligence; intoxication as affecting:—(I.) Intoxication no excuse; (II.) when it amounts to contributory negligence: (a) generally; (b) with relation to trespassers; (c) with relation to persons injured at crossings; (d) with relation to passengers; (e) with relation to persons injured on highways, streets, etc.; (f) with relation to miscellaneous matters; (III.) effect when there is negligence on both sides; (IV.) question for the jury; (V.) presumption and burden of proof; (VI.) intoxication as evidence of negligence: (a) admissibility; (b) weight and sufficiency; (VII.) employment of persons having habits of intoxication 181
- New Trial. See EJECTMENT.
- Partnership. See SYNDICATES.
- Pier. See WHARVES.
- Real actions. See EJECTMENT.
- Replevin; for dogs 507
- Riparian rights. See WATERS.
- 40 L. R. A.
- Scientific books; as evidence 553
- Specific performance; of contract known to be unauthorized 509
- Syndicates; relations and rights of syndicate members:—(I.) Scope and nature of the subject; (II.) rights and powers of members; (III.) rights, duties, and liabilities in transactions between themselves: (a) general rule as to good faith required; (b) sales by member to association; (c) purchases with secret advantages; (d) dealings between associations having common members; (e) contribution to capital, expenses, and losses; (f) interest in property of association; (g) compensation for services; (IV.) remedies 25
- Tithes; of bees 689
- Trespass; for injury to dogs 517
For taking bees 689
- Trover; for dogs 517
For taking bees 689
- Upland. See WATERS.
- Waters. See also INJUNCTION.
- Separation of riparian rights from upland:—In general; right of fishing; right of wharfage; mere riparian rights; cases merely recognizing the doctrine; adverse possession; partition; method of separation 383
- Right of owner of upland to access to navigable water:—The English rule; the rule in Ireland; the rule in Canada; general expressions favoring the right of the shore owner in this country; the rule in Massachusetts; cases holding the opposite rule (New York, New Jersey, Washington, and Oregon); the rule of the Federal courts; other decisions denying the riparian owner's right; the effect of statutes; access cut off by railroad; right as against private individual; estoppel by grant; special reasons for refusing relief; right as against improvement of navigation; summary 386
- Wharves; right to erect:—The rule in England; the rule in this country, cases recognizing the right of the riparian owner; rule where title extends to thread of stream; effect of custom; statutory right; rights as against individuals; right under grant or license; to low-water mark; prescriptive right; the Federal cases; cases denying the right; statutory restrictions; wharves beneficial; regulation of right; harbor lines; right of municipal corporation to build; right of city to regulate; right of New York city; abatement of wharf; effect of street along shore; private contracts; direction of wharf; rights of state and general government; effect of constructing in front of private property; right in wharf which has been erected; log pier; ejectment for pier 65
- Right of, separated from upland 386
- Wills. See MASSES.

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT. See HIGHWAYS, 8; HOSPITALS, 2.

ACCIDENT. See INSURANCE, 29-32.

ACTION OR SUIT. See also CASE, 3.

1. The administrators may sue upon a covenant to pay rent to their intestate which is appended to a lease made by him, although his heirs are the only persons who would suffer substantial damages by failure to pay it. Walsh v. Packard (Mass.) 821

2. The right to recover for injury to a dog is not lost by killing him, under the honest but mistaken belief that he was fatally injured. Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. Dew (Tenn.) 518

Parties.

3. An architect supervising the construction of a building and giving notice of an intention to build may be joined with the owner of the premises as a defendant in a suit for an injunction against the building. Kennedy v. Burnap (Cal.) 476

4. A corporation cannot complain that its receiver appointed in another court is not made a party to a suit to revoke its contract to supply water to a city and its right to occupy streets. Palestine Water & P. Co. v. Palestine (Tex.) 208

5. The state is not a necessary party to a suit by a city which has the exclusive control of streets, to revoke the right of a water company to use them. Id.

6. An amendment to a bill for an injunction against the improper use of land dedicated to the public should be allowed to join some of the original donors as plaintiffs, when the bill is filed by other resident citizens. Rouze v. Pierce (Miss.) 402

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Actions; common law remedy to enforce statute. 628

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

To flats. 394

Of railroad right of way. 415

AFFIDAVITS. See EVIDENCE, 29.

AFTERBORN CHILD. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6; JUDICIAL SALE, 3.

40 L. R. A.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE. See STATE INSTITUTIONS.

AIR. See EASEMENTS, 7-9.

ALIENS.

1. A lease of land for forty-nine years to an alien is void under Wash. Const. art. 2, § 33, prohibiting the ownership of lands by aliens and providing that all conveyances of land to any alien shall be void. State, Winston, v. Hudson Land Co. (Wash.) 430

2. Conveyances made to a corporation when a majority of the stock was owned by citizens will be declared void where a majority of the stock is transported to and held by aliens, under Wash. Const. art. 2, § 33, prohibiting the ownership of land by aliens and providing that all conveyances of lands to any alien directly or in trust shall be void, and that every corporation the majority of the capital stock of which is owned by aliens shall be considered an alien for the purpose of such prohibition. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Aliens; ownership of property by. 431

ALMANAC.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As evidence. 558

ANIMALS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 2; BEES; DOGS; STREET RAILWAYS, 3, 4.

1. The owner of a dog has such a property in it as will entitle him to maintain trover for its recovery in case of its wrongful conversion. Graham v. Smith (Ga.) 503

2. A street-railway company is liable for the killing of a dog by an electric car, caused by the negligence of the motorman. Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. Dew (Tenn.) 519

3. A dog is the subject of larceny under Iowa Code 1873, § 3902, making it a crime for anyone to steal any "chattels" of another. Hamby v. Samson (Iowa) 508

Injury by dogs.

4. One who harbors a dog on his premises as owners usually do with their dogs is to be deemed the owner under a statute respecting the liability of owners for injuries done by dogs. Shultz v. Griffith (Iowa) 117

5. Negligence of a party bitten by a dog is immaterial under Iowa Code, § 1485, on the question of the liability of the owner of the dog, unless that negligence amounts to an unlawful act. Id.

877

6. A traveler going into a yard of a feed and livery barn which is open to patronage by the public and at which his team is being kept for the night, in order to see that his buggy, which was left in the yard, has been put in the barn and to get some articles from it, when this is done between 8 and half past 8 o'clock in the evening, while employees are working at the barn, is not a trespasser or doing an unlawful act within the meaning of Iowa Code, § 1485, so as to preclude his recovering from the proprietor for injuries received from a dog which attacks and bites him. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Animals; property rights in dogs:— (I.) Generally; (II.) actions of trover, replevin, and trespass; (III.) actions against common carriers; (IV.) actions for injuries to dogs by railroad and street cars; (V.) right to kill dogs: (a) police power; (b) unlawfully killing dogs; (c) barking and howling dogs; (d) dangerous dogs; (e) trespassing dogs; (f) sheep-killing dogs; (g) dogs chasing other animals; (h) dogs "at large;" (i) killing a dog by mistake; (VI.) criminal actions for injuries to dogs; (VII.) larceny and obtaining a dog by false pretenses; (VIII.) value; (IX.) as to license and tax laws: (a) generally; (b) taking property without due process of law. 503

APARTMENT HOUSE. See BUILDINGS, 1.

APPEAL AND ERROR. See also CASES CERTIFIED.

1. A separate appeal must be taken from a death warrant signed after judgment, to bring the question of its regularity before the appellate court. People v. Ebanks (Cal.) 269

2. Trustees representing a religious society to which a devise was made in trust to expend the proceeds in saying masses are proper parties to appeal from a decision against the devise. Hoeffer v. Clogan (Ill.) 730

Bond.

3. Defendant in error in the Virginia supreme court of appeals waives the omission from the appeal bond, given before the clerk as prescribed by Va. Code, § 8471, of the condition for the payment of all actual damages incurred in consequence of the proceedings, by failing to raise the objection until it is too late for plaintiff to give a new bond or to have another appeal allowed. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. New York Carousal Mfg. Co. (Va.) 287

Supersedeas.

4. An order of supersedeas to preserve the status quo of the parties pending the determination of an appeal upon its merits is within the inherent powers of an appellate tribunal which is authorized to issue all writs necessary and proper to the complete exercise of its appellate and revisory jurisdiction. State, Barnard, v. Seattle Bd. of Edu. (Wash.) 317

Record; evidence.

5. A written opinion filed by the trial court 40 L. R. A.

on a trial without a jury is not an essential part of the record on appeal, and where general findings are made by the court and a judgment pronounced thereon, the appellate court will conclusively presume that the trial court considered all the competent evidence before it and decided all the material and necessary issues presented by the pleading, although the opinion shows the contrary. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Fuller (Neb.) 405

6. When any document is offered in evidence and excluded, it must be brought into the record to have its competency determined on appeal. Slauson v. Goodrich Transp. Co. (Wis.) 825

7. An appellate court can take notice of papers which are not part of the judgment roll only when they have been preserved and properly identified in the bill of exceptions. 11

8. A bill of exceptions is not necessary for the review of a demurrer to evidence which incorporates the evidence. Mitchell v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (Tenn.) 426

9. The remedy for refusal by the trial court to furnish a transcript of the stenographer's notes to a person convicted of crime is an application to the supreme court for an order requiring it to do so. Miller v. State (Ind.) 119

10. Failure to show that a designated person was regularly appointed shorthand reporter to take the testimony of an accused before a committing magistrate will not support an assignment of error, if it does not appear that he acted or reported the testimony or certified to it. People v. Ebanks (Cal.) 269

Briefs.

11. Under rules requiring but one brief on each side, and permitting a reply in addition, although separate briefs may be permissible where there are several counsel on the same side, the allowance for printing will extend only to what is reasonably necessary. Clark v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. M. R. Co. (Wis.) 457

12. The provision of the Wisconsin supreme court rule 9, that in cases depending on the evidence the brief of appellant must contain a concise statement of the leading facts or conclusions which the evidence establishes or tends to prove, does not mean a recital or restatement of the evidence, but merely that such facts or conclusions should be stated with a reference to the names of the witnesses and the places in the printed cases where the evidence which establishes or tends to prove such facts or conclusions may be found. Milwaukee Cold Storage Co. v. Dexter (Wis.) 837

Questions first raised on appeal.

13. Alleged error in failing to direct a verdict for defendant accident insurance company on the ground that plaintiff had voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger, is not available on appeal where no request therefor was made in the trial court. Johnson v. London Guarantee & A. Co. (Mich.) 440

13a. Variance between pleading and proof is not ground for reversal when no objection was made in the trial court. Colfax Mountain Fruit Co. v. Southern Pac. Co. 73

Errors in party's favor or at his request.

14. An appellant cannot complain of error in an instruction which was in his own interest. Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (Iowa) 845

15. An inconsistency in the instructions due to the fact that some instructions are more favorable to one of the parties than he is entitled to is not available to such party. Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Accs. Asso. (Mich.) 444

16. The failure of the court to assess disfranchisement as part of the punishment of a convict is not an error of which he can complain. Miller v. State (Ind.) 109

17. One who relied upon a former adjudication of a matter cannot complain of a decision which is to the same effect. Gibson v. Gibson (Wash.) 587

Review of facts.

18. A conclusion as to an ultimate fact, drawn from certain specified evidential facts which are legally incompetent to support it, is a proper subject of review on proceedings in error. Nichols v. Peck (Conn.) 81

19. Findings of fact are not conclusive on the appellate court in equity cases, unless the evidence is so evenly balanced or so unsatisfactory as to leave the court in serious doubt. North Point Consol. Irrig. Co. v. Utah & S. L. Canal Co. (Utah) 851

Errors requiring reversal.

20. Filing the sheriff's affidavit that he was biased, taken upon a challenge to a special venire summoned by him, embodying facts brought out while the jury were excluded from the room, is not reversible error. People v. Ebanks (Cal.) 269

21. Irrelevant testimony will not require a reversal, if it was harmless. Mack v. South Bound R. Co. (S. C.) 679

22. There will be no reversal for cross-examination as to matters not testified to in chief if the examination in chief is not in the record, so that it does not appear whether the cross-examination was improper or not. People v. Ebanks (Cal.) 269

23. A judgment will not be reversed for failure to sustain a demurrer for reasons not specified therein. Bristol v. New England R. Co. (Conn.) 479

24. An improper statement by counsel in opening a case, which is immediately withdrawn after an exception, with an acknowledgment that it was not justified under the existing state of the record, will not be regarded on appeal as prejudicial error, if it was not so considered by the trial judge. Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (Iowa) 845

25. Refusal of instructions the meaning of which is involved in doubt, or which are uncalled for in the case, is not reversible error if the instructions given upon that branch of the case are as favorable to the complaining party as the facts and the law will warrant. People v. Ebanks (Cal.) 269

26. Refusal to charge the jury that the burden of showing that the loss was caused by fire was upon the one seeking to recover under 40 L. R. A.

a fire insurance policy is not error, where that fact was fully proved, with no question as to the accuracy of the proof. Western Assur. Co. v. J. H. Mohlman Co. (C. C. App. 2d C.) 581

27. Verbal inaccuracy of a charge to the jury will not require a reversal, if the charge as a whole fairly and accurately presents the law applicable to the facts. Perham v. Portland General Elec. Co. (Or.) 799

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Appeal; conclusiveness of findings of jury as to law. 653

APPORTIONMENT. See ELECTION DISTRICTS.

APPRAISAL. See MORTGAGE, 5, 6.

APPURTENANCES. See DEEDS, 2; EASEMENTS, 9.

ARCHITECT. See ACTION OR SUIT, 8.

ARREST. See also REWARD, 2.

The arrest by a police officer of San Francisco, without a warrant, of a murderer, for a crime committed in another county of the state, is made in the exercise of his duty, so as to preclude his recovery of a reward for making it. Lees v. Colgan (Cal.) 855

ASSAULT AND BATTERY. See CARRIERS, 4.

ASSIGNMENT. See also BILLS AND NOTES, 2; FRAUD, 2.

1. The right of one person to use the name of another, given him by contract, cannot be assigned or transferred to a third party, in the absence of an express stipulation to that effect. Bagby & R. Co. v. Rivers (Md.) 682

2. An assignment of wages for the period of one year, made by a person then working under a contract, whether it was for work by the day, by the week, or otherwise, is valid, under R. I. Gen. Laws, chap. 254, § 28, when made and recorded as the statute provides. Dolan v. Hughes (R. I.) 738

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Assignment; of wages to be earned. 785

ASSIGNMENT FOR CREDITORS. See INSOLVENCY; PARTNERSHIP, 8; SET-OFF.

ASSOCIATIONS. See also RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also SYNDICATES.

Associations; power to hold property; trust for. 726

ASSUMPSIT.

A public officer receiving fees to which he is not entitled, from a party whom he knows to be ignorant of the law, without informing him that he is not bound to pay, receives money fraudulently, and is liable to an action for money had and received. Marcotte v. Allen (Me.) 185

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Assumpsit; for money paid by mistake. 185

ATTORNEYS.

The resignation of an attorney without consent or privilege of the court is ineffectual to preclude his disbarment, when proceedings therefor were pending at the time of his resignation. Ex parte Thompson (Or.) 194

ATTORNEYS' FEES.

The regulation of attorneys' fees by Wash. Laws 1895, p. 81, limiting stipulations of the parties in that respect, is a valid measure of public policy. Dennis v. Moses (Wash.) 302

AWNINGS. See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 3.

1. An awning which makes a permanent encroachment on a street is a purpresture. Hibbard v. Chicago (Ill.) 621

2. A mere order of the city council, authorizing the erection of an awning, which is prohibited by a general ordinance, is no more than a license, which is subject to revocation by the council at any time. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Awnings; in street, license for 621

BALLOTS. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 4.BANKS. See also BONDS, 81; INTEREST; TRUSTS, 72.

1. Payment of a check of an insane person who had been lawfully adjudged insane by a court in another state will render a bank liable for the money, although it did not know of his insanity. American Trust & B. Co. v. Boone (Ga.) 250

2. A bank receiving a check deposited and indorsed by a person to whom it was payable as administrator, but who claims to be the sole heir of the estate and deposits it to his individual credit, cannot appropriate a part of the fund to pay his individual debts to the bank. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Banks; right to cash checks on trust funds 250

BAR-WAY. See EASEMENTS, 12-14.BEES.

1. A trespasser who finds bees on the land of another and hives them, but is not the owner of the hive in which he puts them or the land on which he leaves them, has no interest in them which is the subject of larceny. State v. Repp (Iowa) 687

2. The mere finding of bees in a tree on the land of another person gives the finder no right to the bees or to the tree. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bees; property rights in:—(I.) Generally; (II.) trespass and trover; (III.) larceny; (IV.) tithes. 687

40 L. R. A.

BENEFIT SOCIETIES. See INJUNCTION, 2; PLEADING, 2.BET. See also CONTRACTS, 4.

A partnership for horse racing on a bet with a person whom the partners regard as a "sucker" and a "big snap," into which they induce him to enter by making him think he has a sure thing and by deceiving him into the supposition that their horse is untrained and undeveloped, while they deemed that they had a "dead mortal clinch," is a conspiracy to defraud such that a court will not aid either of the partners by compelling one who has pocketed all the profits to make an accounting. Morrison v. Bennett (Mont.) 156

BID. See MORTGAGE, 7.BILLS AND NOTES. See also EVIDENCE, 21, 22; MORTGAGE, 1, 2, 10; PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

1. Mere promises to pay a forged note do not lay a foundation for liability, in the absence of circumstances to create an estoppel, and when the promises are made after maturity, without consideration and without full knowledge of the material facts in relation to the note. Barry v. Kirkland (Ariz.) 471

2. A written assignment of a negotiable note on a separate and unattached piece of paper does not pass the legal title, or—at least when it was made as collateral security and has been surrendered to the payee merely for the purpose of collection—preclude him from bringing action on the note. Haug v. Birk (Ga.) 244

3. The possession of a negotiable note by a firm to which one of the makers belongs will not charge a purchaser of the note on the second day of grace with notice that the note has been paid. Id.

4. The transfer of a negotiable note on the second day of grace is before maturity for the purpose of conferring rights on a bona fide purchaser. Id.

5. Payment of a negotiable note by one of the joint makers, for whose accommodation it was signed by the other, will not discharge the latter as against a bona fide holder to whom the note is indorsed before maturity after such payment. Id.

6. A note "payable" in specified bonds at par does not become payable in money on the failure of the maker to pay or tender the bonds on the day the note is due, since it does not give him the mere privilege or option to pay in bonds, but makes a positive and absolute promise to pay in the specific funds named. Johnson v. Dooley (Ark.) 74

7. A payee who knows of the facts involved has no better right to enforce drafts drawn by his secret agent than the latter had to claim the fund drawn upon. Baltimore Trust & G. Co. v. Hambleton (Md.) 217

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bills and notes; transfer after payment 244

Promise to pay forged note. 471

BILLS OF LADING. See CARRIERS, 13, 14.

BISHOP. See CHARITIES, 2, 3; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, 2, 3; TRUSTS, 5, 6.

BONDS. See also COUPONS; ESTOPPEL, 4; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 1.

1. Bondholders of a corporation take their bonds with knowledge that the continuance of the charter rights and other franchises of the company depends upon the faithful performance of its duties to the public. Palestine Water & P. Co. v. Palestine (Tex.) 203

Official.

2. The rule which makes a public officer an insurer of the safety of the public funds under his control is not based upon the mere fact that he is a public officer intrusted with public funds, but is based upon the principle that by his bond, considered alone or in connection with the statutes defining his duties, he has contracted to become an insurer; and the rule is limited to cases involving such contracts. State v. Gramm (Wyo.) 690

3. Liability for money lost by failure of the bank in which it was deposited with due care by the state treasurer is not imposed by his bond conditioned to account for all money coming into his hands by virtue of his office, and to perform all the duties of his office, when his statutory duty is to receive and keep all moneys of the state not required to be received and kept by some other person. Id.

4. The malicious act of a sheriff in aiding a mob to take a prisoner from a jail and kill him does not create any liability of the sureties on his official bond. State, Cocking, v. Wade (Md.) 628

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bonds; of sheriff, what acts or negligence covered by. 628

Official, liability on, for bank failure. 698

BOUNDARY. See PLAT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Boundaries; by waters. 397

BRIDGE. See EVIDENCE, 18; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 7; RAILROADS, 1, 2, 4-6.

BRIEF. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 11, 12.

BROKERS. See also LICENSE, 4, 5.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Brokers; who are; license of. 611

BUILDINGS.

1. An "apartment house," constructed for residence purposes only, is not a breach of a condition in a deed against using the property except for "residence purposes." McMurtry v. Phillips Invest. Co. (Ky.) 489

2. It is not negligence for a master to fasten windows leading to fire escapes, if this does not violate any statute and the windows can be easily broken through to reach the fire escapes

if there is not time to unfasten them. Huda v. American Glucose Co. (N. Y.) 411

3. Screwing down the windows of a factory so that there is no access to fire escapes except by breaking the windows, and forbidding employees to open the windows, in order to preserve a high temperature, which is necessary for the business, does not violate a statute requiring the construction and maintenance of fire escapes on such buildings, where the windows are so light in frame as to offer but the slightest difficulty in breaking through, if there is not time to unscrew them. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Buildings; covenant against. 489

CANALS. See NUISANCES, 4; WATERS, 5-7.

CARRIERS.

I. OF PASSENGERS.

II. OF FREIGHT.

III. GOVERNMENTAL CONTROL.

See also DAMAGES, 2; EVIDENCE, 17; NEGLIGENCE, 2, 3; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 8.

I. OF PASSENGERS.

1. One holding a mileage ticket who, with intent to board a train standing on a siding near the station, without going to the station, is compelled to cross the main line, is not a passenger to whom the railroad company owes extraordinary care or diligence, but is entitled only to ordinary care as one of the general public, as he has done nothing to notify any of the officers or agents of the defendant company that he is a prospective passenger. Southern R. Co. v. Smith (C. C. App. 5th C.) 746

2. Recovery for injuries to one struck by a train upon a track which he was obliged to cross to reach the train which he desired to take is barred, under Ga. Code, § 3830, providing that if the plaintiff by ordinary care could have avoided the consequence to himself caused by defendant's negligence he is not entitled to recover, if such person failed to use his senses to ascertain the approach of the train, and could have avoided the consequence of the company's negligence by the exercise of ordinary care. Id.

3. The intoxication of a passenger standing on the running board of a street car will not absolve the company from exercising care toward him, or prevent his recovering damages in case he is injured by its negligence. Kingston v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co. (Mich.) 181

4. A railroad company is liable in damages to a female for an assault with intent to commit rape upon her person by one employed as a baggage master upon a train on which she is at the time being conveyed as a passenger. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Quo (Ga.) 493

5. The arrest of a street-car passenger by a policeman called by the conductor of the car to arrest and take him off, on the charge of riding without payment of fare, does not render the carrier liable for false imprisonment, when the conductor had been authorized only to put delinquent passengers off the car. Little Rock Traction & E. Co. v. Walker (Ark.) 478

II. OF FREIGHT.

6. A stipulation against liability except for gross negligence will not relieve a carrier from liability for negligence, although it may not be gross negligence. Pierce v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 850

7. A contract fixing the measure of damages for the loss of goods at the actual invoice cost at point of shipment, if fairly made in consideration of a lower freightage, is not invalid. Id.

8. Absence of an invoice will not prevent the operation of a stipulation in a carriage contract, that the carrier's liability for loss shall be limited to the invoice price at the point of shipment, but the value of the property at that point will be the measure of damage. Id.

9. The liability of a carrier for a passenger-train service continues to destination, under a contract to receive and forward fruit by such service to a connecting station on its road, and from there "to forward" the property to destination, but providing that "its responsibility as a common carrier is to cease at the point where the freight leaves its road." Coffey Mountain Fruit Co. v. Southern Pac. Co. 78

Freezing.

11. Loss of freight by freezing caused by its being sent, by direction of the carrier, over a route which subjected it to such peril, is not within a clause in the shipping contract exempting the carrier from liability for loss from any "cause arising out of responsibility as master over its agents or servants, incident to said shipment." Pierce v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 850

12. A carrier which sends a carload of orange trees early in March from New Orleans, Louisiana, to Riverside, California, by the way of Denver, Colorado, and Ogden, Utah, without notifying the consignees or consignor and taking directions from them, is liable for the loss of the trees by freezing, although its own route through Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona was temporarily interrupted by storms and washouts. Id.

Delivery.

13. The delivery of goods by a carrier at destination, without requiring the surrender of a bill of lading, as required by a stipulation therein, does not involve any breach of duty to the consignor, if the delivery is made to the consignee, or upon his order, or by his authority. Chicago Packing & P. Co. v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. (Ga.) 367

14. A written order signed by one of the partners of a firm to which a bill of lading has been indorsed, directing the carrier to make delivery of the goods to another person, is sufficient to justify the carrier in doing so, although the signer privately intended it as his individual act, if this was not known to the carrier and the circumstances justified treating it as an act of the partnership. Id.

40 L. R. A.

III. GOVERNMENTAL CONTROL.

15. A connecting switch may be ordered by the state railroad and warehouse commission at the intersection of two railroads, when this is a necessity, because of the benefit which will accrue to state traffic. Jacobson v. Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. (Minn.) 399

16. Power to require a connecting switch at the crossing of two railroads, to facilitate the transfer of cars from one road to the other, when this will benefit both state and interstate traffic, is within the concurrent jurisdiction of the state and Federal authorities. Id.

17. The transfer and interchange of loaded cars as well as a connecting switch at the intersection of two railroads, required by the railroad and warehouse commission under Minn. Gen. Laws 1887, chap. 10, as amended by Minn. Laws 1895, chap. 91, does not violate the constitutional rights of the railroad companies. Id.

18. The making of joint rates for through shipments when part of the haul is on one and part on the other of two connecting railroads, for which power is given by Minn. Laws 1895, p. 214, § 8 (C), is not unconstitutional as an attempt to make the railroad companies partners for such shipment or liable for each other's default, as the statute merely provides that, if the companies fail to fix a reasonable total sum for the total haul, the commission shall do so for them. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Carriers; liability of forwarder limited to its own route. 78

Intoxication as affecting negligence of passengers. 124

Liability for wrongful arrest. 473

Liability for changing route of goods. 350

Liability of shipper for improper loading of car. 329

Governmental control over. 359

CASE. See also SHERIFF, 1.

1. Inducing one of two parties to a contract to break it, intending thereby to injure the other, or to obtain a benefit for one's self constitutes an actionable wrong. Gore v. Condon (Md.) 322

2. Interference with ownership of land by advertising and selling it under a fraudulent mortgage, and notifying tenants not to pay rent to the owner, constitutes an actionable wrong. Id.

3. The disgrace and disrepute into which the owner of property is brought on account of the advertising and sale thereof under a fraudulent mortgage does not constitute a cause of action. Id.

CASES CERTIFIED.

The validity of a defense demurred to may be considered notwithstanding defects in the complaint, when the question is certified for review to the court of appeals under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 190, subd. 2, and the defendant has waived the defects in the complaint by omitting to call attention to them or to have any questions with reference thereto certified. Barter v. McDonnell (N. Y.) 670

CHARITIES. See also MASSSES.

1. A bequest, the income of which is to be used to ornament and keep in repair the burial lot of the testator, is void because it is a gift in perpetuity for a private trust, and not for a charitable trust. Sherman v. Baker (R. I.) 717

2. A bequest of property to be used by the Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese of Green Bay "for the benefit and behoof of the Roman Catholic Church," there being several churches in the diocese, is void for uncertainty. McHugh v. McCole (Wis.) 724

3. A bequest to the bishop of Fond du Lac, to be used by him for the benefit and behoof of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Fond du Lac, which is not shown to be a body corporate or legal entity capable in law of taking or asserting any right in court to the fund, but which consists of several organizations,—is void for uncertainty. Id.

4. The doctrine of cy pres is not in force in Wisconsin. Id.

CHATTEL. See LIENS, 1.

CHATTEL MORTGAGE. See MORTGAGE, 11, 12.

CHECKS. See BANKS.

CHURCH. See CHARITIES, 2, 3; EVIDENCE, 2; MASSSES, 5; PLEADING, 6.

CITIZENS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 3.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

1. A cloud on title may be removed in equity, although the defendants have not done or threatened to do anything in opposition to the title of the plaintiffs. Loring v. Hildreth (Mass.) 127

2. Defects in the title of a person in possession of land will not defeat his action for quieting the title as against a stranger who claims the land, but has no right or title thereto. Dettor v. Holland (Ohio) 266

3. Title may be quieted as against a claim asserted under a grant of the right to produce petroleum and natural gas, when this did not constitute a lease and the right has terminated by its own limitation. Id.

4. Expenses incurred in drilling wells after the expiration of a grant of the right to produce oil and gas and after notice not to drill such wells cannot be recovered from the grantor on his enforcement of his right by quieting title. Id.

5. The sum paid as a consideration for a grant of the right to produce oil and gas from land need not be returned in order to maintain an action to quiet title after the grant has expired by its own limitation. Id.

COAL HOLE. See HIGHWAYS, 5.

COIN. See MONEY, 1.

COLD STORAGE. See CONTRACTS, 6.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX. See TAXES, 5-7.

COLLEGE. See STATE INSTITUTIONS.

COLOR MIXER. See CUSTOM, 1.

COMMERCE. See also HARBORS, 2.

1. Commerce between an Indian reservation and other places in the same state does not constitute interstate commerce. Selkirk v. Stevens (Minn.) 759

2. A state statute making it unlawful to keep a place in which the business of transmitting money to be placed or bet on any horse race, etc., whether within or without the state, is permitted or carried on, or to be concerned in such business, is not an unconstitutional regulation of interstate commerce as applied to an agent of a telegraph company, who keeps such place or is engaged in such business, and transmits the money to another state by telegraph. State v. Harbourn (Conn.) 607

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Commerce; interstate; as to telegrams; as affected by police power. 607

COMMON LAW.

The English common law, which avoided bequests for masses as being for superstitious uses, never became a part of the law of this country because inconsistent with the spirit of religious toleration. Harrison v. Brophy (Kan.) 721

COMMUNITY. See TRUSTS, 3.

CONFLICT OF LAWS. See also GARNISHMENT.

1. The law of a legatee's domicile governs the lapsing of a legacy of bank stock made by a will in another state in which the bank is situated, although a statute of the latter state, if applicable, would prevent the lapsing. Lowndes v. Cooch (Md.) 380

2. Shares of stock of a corporation are personal property only, and governed by the law of the owner's domicile. Id.

3. The marriage in another state where it is valid, of a divorced person incapable of remarrying by the law of his domicile, will not be held void under the law of his domicile unless the statute expressly so provides, although he went outside the state for the express purpose of evading the law, and immediately returned. State v. Shattuck (Vt.) 428

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

- Conflict of laws; as to ownership of property. 880
As to validity of marriage. 428

CONSIDERATION. See TRUSTS, 4.

CONSPIRACY. See BET.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. See also ATTORNEYS' FEES; CARRIERS, 17, 18; LICENSE, 2; WITNESSES, 2.

1. A legislative interpretation of the Constitution, long established and acquiesced in, is of great force in determining the true construction. People, Mooney, v. Hutchinson (Ill.) 770

2. A constitutional provision fixing the time and mode of exercising a particular power contains a necessary implication against anything contrary to it. Id.

3. Judicial power is not given to a board of managers of a reformatory by authorizing them to shorten the term of service of a convict in case of his reformation, where his sentence is indeterminate between the maximum and minimum prescribed by statute. Miller v. State (Ind.) 109

Retrospective law.

4. The estate of a deceased person cannot be subjected to a collateral inheritance tax by statute passed after the death of the owner, where the Constitution prohibits retrospective legislation. State, Garth, v. Smitzler (Mo.) 280

Equal protection of laws.

5. An exception of all railroads chartered before a certain date, from the provisions of a statute of limitations, does not deny them the equal protection of the laws. Narron v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 415

Due process of law.

6. Persons yet unascertained and unborn are not deprived of their rights without due process of law by making them defendants in a bill to remove a cloud upon title, and having them represented by a guardian ad litem as provided by Mass. Stat. 1897, chap. 522. Loring v. Hildreth (Mass.) 127

Restrictions on property and contracts.

7. Regulations for the protection and preservation of game are within the constitutional power of the legislature. Haggerty v. St. Louis Ice Mfg. & S. Co. (Mo.) 151

8. The mixing or mingling of articles of food which are wholesome and nutritious and the sale thereof cannot be made criminal by the legislature. Dorsey v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 201

9. A statute limiting the rights of a citizen to contract with reference to his property must tend to promote the public good in some way or it is an unwarranted interference therewith. Dennis v. Moses (Wash.) 302

10. A statute limiting the right to enforce a debt secured by mortgage to the property mortgaged, whether realty or chattels, is an undue restraint upon the liberty of a citizen to contract with respect to his property rights. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

- Constitutional law; as to right of contract. 312
Delegation of power. 501

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES. See CONTRACTS, 7.

CONTRACTS. See also ASSIGNMENT, 1; BET; CASE, 1; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 9; CORPORATIONS, 4, 5; INJUNCTION, 7, 8; 10; MONEY, 1; SALE; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE; TRUSTS, 4.

1. Acceptance of a contract by assenting to its terms, holding it and acting upon it, may be equivalent to a formal execution by one who did not sign it. Sellers v. Greer (Ill.) 529

2. An employer who takes an employee seriously injured to a hospital, promising to pay for his care and treatment, without any mention as to length of time, has no right, while the patient is incapable of removal or discharge from the hospital without great danger to his health or life, to terminate its liability for further care or treatment,—at least without showing that the patient has sufficient means of his own with which to pay therefor. St. Barnabas Hospital v. Minneapolis International Electric Co. (Minn.) 388

Validity.

3. Men who associate themselves for the purpose of cheating others cannot ask the courts to distribute their booty by adjudging the demands of one against the other, arising out of their quarrels over the plunder. Morrison v. Bennett (Mont.) 153

4. An agreement by the owners of race horses entered at certain stake races, to divide equally all premiums and stake monies offered by the associations on such races, awarded to any of the horses of either, is not void as a wagering contract. Hankins v. Ottinger (Cal.) 76

5. A contract by which an employee assumes all liability for injuries by reason of the employer's negligence or otherwise is not against public policy. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mahoney (Ind.) 101

6. A contract for the "cold storage" of game during the "closed season," to be withdrawn during the open season when the game could be lawfully disposed of, is void under Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 3902, making it a misdemeanor to have such game in possession during the closed season. Haggerty v. St. Louis Ice Mfg. & S. Co. (Mo.) 151

7. A contract for the care of a woman in the advanced stages of leprosy, by a laborer and his wife, who are unskilled people and have no authority to restrain her from wandering away, and who have several small children in their family, is an unreasonable one the execution of which may be restrained because of its tendency to cause a dissemination of the disease. Baltimore v. Fairfield Improv. Co. (Md.) 491

Impairing obligation.

8. The restriction of the lien or charge of a judgment against the estate or person of the judgment debtor, to six years from its rendition, by Wash. act March 6, 1897, and the prohibition of the renewal of such judgment for more than one year after the act takes effect, so far as the act applies to preexisting contracts, is an unconstitutional impairment of their obligation. Bellman v. Cowley (Wash.) 815

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contract; wagers; against public policy.	159
Illegality of; wagers.	76
Against liability for negligence; strict construction.	102
Acceptance of.	589
Mutuality of.	590
Impairment of obligation of.	802
Impairing obligation by change of remedy.	815

CONVICTS. See also PROXIMATE CAUSE, 1.

1. Persons in charge of a state convict are not liable in damages for criminal tort committed by him while at large, whether at large by their permission or because of their negligence, unless they were in some way connected with the perpetration of the tort, or had reasonable grounds for apprehending that it would be committed. Henderson v. Dade Coal Co. (Ga.) 95

2. Knowledge that a felony convict about thirty-seven years old, who had been continuously in the penitentiary for about twelve years, and who had five times escaped therefrom, was "a man in robust and vigorous health, immoral, brutish, devilish, of vicious habits, of violent passions," including sexual passion, and a person "not restrained by any convictions of right and wrong or governed by any principles of morality,"—does not constitute ground of apprehension that he will commit the crime of rape when opportunity occurs, so as to render his custodians liable for damages on account of such a crime committed by him while at large through their fault. Id.

CORONER.

The verdict of a coroner's jury is not subject to be reviewed, set aside, or quashed in the Georgia superior court, either at the instance of the person accused by it, or any other person, as it is advisory merely to the officers charged with the execution of the public law in case of homicide, binds no one as a judgment, has no probative effect as evidence, and can prejudice the rights of no one. Smalls v. State (Ga.) 869

CORPORATIONS. See also ALIENS, 2; BONDS, 1; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2; ESTOPPEL, 6, 7; FRAUD, 1; GOODWILL, 2; JUDGMENT, 8; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 4; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, 1.

1. The articles of incorporation under which a company is organized under general laws have the effect of a charter for the purpose of determining the powers of the corporation. North Point Consol. Irrig. Co. v. Utah & S. L. Canal Co. (Utah) 851
40 L. R. A.

2. Conditions and limitations attaching by law to the exercise of any given corporate purposes cannot be destroyed or subverted by combining such purposes with some other, under one corporation. International Fraternal Alliance v. State (Md.) 187

3. Compelling railroad companies to make a connecting switch where railroads intersect does not violate their charter rights merely because there is no reservation of the power to make such requirement. Jacobson v. Wisconsin M. & P. R. Co. (Minn.) 389

Contracts.

4. A contract entered into by a wrong name may be binding on a corporation, when it appears that it intended to be bound. North Point Consol. Irrig. Co. v. Utah & S. L. Canal Co. (Utah) 851

5. A corporation may ratify a contract which it had power to make, when entered into on its behalf without its authority, or voidable because not reduced to writing. Id.

Stock.

6. Certificates of stock, even when indorsed in blank for the purpose of authorizing the making of an instrument of transfer over the signature, are not negotiable securities. O'Herron v. Gray (Mass.) 498

Stockholders.

7. Stockholders cannot set up the illegality of the scheme of the corporation, which did not appear on the face of the contract of subscription or the prospectus therein referred to, in order to escape liability to creditors whose debts have been contracted upon the faith of the subscriptions to the stock. Cardwell v. Kelly (Va.) 240

8. A contract between persons who are equal owners of all the stock of a corporation except two shares, of which one is controlled by each of them, by which they assume to divide and dispose of the property of the corporation, is not obligatory upon the corporation. Sellers v. Greer (Ill.) 589

Promoters.

9. A promoter of a corporation who transferred to it certain land purchased by him before anything was done toward the formation of the corporation cannot be held liable to the corporation for an amount received from it in excess of the amount actually paid by him, in the absence of a misrepresentation or false statement by him, although he did not disclose the amount paid by him to any subscriber, where all the subscribers had the opportunity to ascertain the condition and value of the land and knew the price charged the corporation. Milwaukee Cold Storage Co. v. Dexter (Wis.) 887

10. A sale of land to a corporation by one of its promoters who purchased the land before anything was done toward the formation of the corporation for less than the amount for which he transferred it to such corporation will not be held fraudulent as to the corporation or any subscriber in the absence of any false statement or misrepresentation because he personally paid a commission to certain influential persons to induce them to subscribe for the capital stock, nor because he personally paid money to his grantor after the latter's subscription to the capital stock to remove his dissatisfaction at having sold the land so cheaply,—especially where his contract of purchase precluded him from transferring the land without the approval of such grantor. Id.

Forfeiture of franchise.

11. A deliberate attempt by a corporation to evade the insurance law of the state in one of its most important provisions is ground for forfeiting the charter. International Fraternity Alliance v. State (Md.) 187

12. An insurance corporation forfeits its franchise by deliberately exceeding the amount for which it is allowed by law to issue policies on any one life. Id.

13. Proceedings to forfeit a franchise are not excluded by Md. Code, art. 23, § 263, authorizing proceedings to restrain an assumption or exercise of any franchise, liberty, or privilege, or the transaction of unauthorized business. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Corporation; forfeiture of franchise of. 203
Pledge of stock of—transfer of stock of infants. 498
Contract by chief stockholders. 589
Secret profit of promoters of. 840

COSTS. See WITNESSES, 3.

COTENANCY. See also NOTICE.

A tenant in common cannot create an easement over the premises without consent of his cotenants. Baker v. Willard (Mass.) 754

COUNTIES. See also WITNESSES, 2, 3.

A county is not liable for services rendered by members of a sheriff's posse comitatus, in the absence of statutory provisions for their compensation. Sears v. Gallatin County (Mont.) 405

COUPONS.

The first coupon, as well as others, is included in a sale of bonds to a syndicate without any exception or reservation of it from the sale, although there is a provision that two thirds of the first payment of interest shall be paid by a trustee as commission, and any interest in that coupon is therefore derived through the syndicate, and subject to the rule which precludes one member from secretly obtaining a commission in which his associates do not share. Baltimore Trust & G. Co. v. Hambleton (Md.) 216

COURTS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3; JUSTICE OF THE PEACE; SCHOOLS.

1. The Federal court will not follow the state court decisions as to the admissibility in evidence at common law of extracts from medical books. Union P. R. Co. v. Yates (C. C. App. 8th C.) 553

2. It is the duty of the court to examine legislative journals to determine the disputed fact whether or not a statute as published is in fact that which was passed by the legislature, where the Constitution requires that each house shall keep a journal, and that no bill shall become a law unless on its final passage the vote 40 L. R. A.

taken by ayes and noes is entered on the journal. State, Cheyenne, v. Swan (Wyo.) 195

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Disqualification of judge. 317

COVENANT. See ACTION OR SUIT, 1. BUILDINGS, 1.

CRIMINAL LAW. See also APPEAL, 1. 9, 10, 16; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3, 8; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.

1. The intention of a person who commits an act which is made a misdemeanor by statute constitutes no element of the offense. Haggerty v. St. Louis Ice Mfg. & S. Co. (Mo.) 151

2. The mere fact that the order holding the accused to answer for a crime was dated October 4, when the arrest was made September 17, does not show that the committing magistrate had lost jurisdiction of the case by delay, for the examination may have been proceeded with immediately after the arrest and continued until the order was made. People v. Elanks (Cal.) 269

3. The constitutional right of an accused person to trial by jury is not violated by taking away from the jury the right to fix his punishment. Miller v. State (Ind.) 109

4. Cruel and unusual punishment is not made by an indeterminate sentence, not more than the maximum nor less than the minimum prescribed by statute for the specified crime. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Validity of indeterminate sentence. 109

Effect of hypnotism in criminal cases. 269

CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT. See CRIMINAL LAW, 4.

CUSTOM.

1. A custom or usage of carpet making which would give the color mixer an exclusive title, as against his employer, to the various combinations and shades of color devised by him for use in the manufacture of carpets in his employer's mill, is unreasonable and cannot be sustained. Dempsey v. Dobson (Pa.) 550

2. A usage or custom of real-estate agents in a certain city to get up syndicates to buy property in their hands for sale will not bind members of a syndicate who have no knowledge thereof, especially if they live at other places, so as to sustain a purchase of property for the syndicate made by such agents who are also acting as secret agents of the vendor. Ferguson v. Gooch (Va.) 234

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Custom; in derogation of general law. 551

CY PRES. See CHARITIES, 4.

DAMAGES. See also EVIDENCE, 41, 42. FREIGHT; PLEADING, 3; TRIAL, 8.

1. Punitive damages may be given for injury by a railroad train caused by gross negligence, recklessness, or wanton disregard or malice. Mack v. South Bound R. Co. (S. C.) 679

2. Punitive damages cannot be recovered for injuries to one attempting to board a railroad train from being struck by another train upon the main track, which he was obliged to cross, where whistles were sounded and the bell was rung and the fireman called to such person to look out, and there was nothing to prevent him from seeing the train. Southern R. Co. v. Smith (C. C. App. 5th C.) 746

3. Mere negligence, unless so gross as to amount to positive bad faith, is not a ground for awarding punitive damages. Peterson v. Western U. Tele. Co. (Minn.) 661

4. Damages recoverable by the father of a child killed may include the expenses necessarily and reasonably incurred in the burial, including compensation for the father's loss of time. Southern R. Co. v. Cotenia (Ga.) 253

DEAF AND DUMB. See NEGLIGENCE, 6.

DEATH. See also DAMAGES, 4.

1. Parents are not "heirs" within the meaning of 2 Hill's (Wash.) Code, § 188, giving a right of action to the widow and children of a man killed in a duel, and to the heirs or personal representatives of a person whose death is caused by wrongful act or neglect; but the word "heirs" is limited to the widow and children. Noble v. Seattle (Wash.) 822

2. The fact that there are no surviving relatives or creditors of a person killed by wrongful act or omission does not preclude a right of action under Hill's (Or.) Ann. Code, §§ 369, 371, making the recovery assets of the estate. Perham v. Portland General Elec. Co. (Or.) 799

3. An action for death caused by wrongful act or omission, whether it results instantly or not, is given by Hill's (Or.) Ann. Code, §§ 369, 371, providing that the personal representatives may maintain an action at law if the deceased "might have maintained an action had he lived," and that the recovery shall be administered as other personal property of the deceased. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Death; right of action for. 253

Right of action by parents for. 822

DEATH WARRANT. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 1.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR. See PARTNERSHIP, 3.

DEDICATION. See ACTION OR SUIT, 6; HIGHWAYS, 1, 2.

DEEDS. See also EVIDENCE, 24, 25, 30.

1. A conveyance of a certain number of undivided acres out of a tract of land is not void for uncertainty. Gratz v. Land & R. Improv. Co. (C. C. App. 7th C.) 893

2. Title to a proportionate share of land under water, depending on title to the upland, will pass by a deed of a certain number of undivided acres out of the tract of upland bordering on the water. Id.

divided acres out of the tract of upland bordering on the water. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Deeds; reservation of minerals in. 268

Conflict between different descriptions of premises. 828

DEFINITIONS. See also DEATH, 1; HARBORS, 2; LICENSE, 4, 5; SYNDICATE, 1; TAXES, 5.

The word "payable," when used in promissory notes and other commercial transactions, means "to be paid," rather than "which may be paid." Johnson v. Dooley (Ark.) 74

DEMURRER. See PLEADING, 7-11.

DISBARMENT. See ATTORNEYS.

DISCOVERY.

An examination by instruments to determine the condition of plaintiff's bladder, in an action for injury thereto, cannot be ordered without abusing the discretion of the court, where the purpose of it is to empty the bladder, and the evidence of plaintiff's physicians is that the examination would not be prudent, and that of defendant's physicians is that it would be safe if the bladder was healthy, but would be absolutely dangerous in some conditions. O'Brien v. La Crosse (Wis.) 831

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Discovery; requiring physical examination of party. 832

DISQUALIFICATION. See SCHOOLS.

DITCHES. See WATERS.

DOGS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 2; ANIMALS, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS; EVIDENCE, 4, 37; STREET RAILWAYS, 3, 4.

The owner of a dog has such property in him that he may maintain an action for killing or injuring him. Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. Dew (Tenn.) 518

DOMICIL. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 9; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 1-3.

DRAINS. See WATERS.

DRAWBRIDGE. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 7.

DRUNKENNESS. See also CARRIERS, 3; INSURANCE, 27.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Drunkenness; as affecting negligence. 131

DUPLICITY. See PLEADING, 1.

EASEMENTS. See also COTENANCY; EATOPPEL, 5; NUISANCES, 2; WATERS, 6.

1. An easement in land can be granted only by those who could convey a fee simple estate. Narron v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 415

2. An easement for a railroad right of way cannot be acquired by occupation under color of title, as against an owner who has given no consent thereto, where the occupation is lawfully taken by right of eminent domain. Id.

3. The right to have a court kept open is not created by estoppel by bounding land thereon in a deed by an administrator selling land under a license of the probate court. Baker v. Willard (Mass.) 754

By necessity.

4. A way of necessity is created on the partition of lands, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, if such way would have been created in favor of one of the parcels by its conveyance or devise by the common ancestor. Ritchey v. Welsh (Ind.) 105

5. The right to locate a way of necessity belongs to the owner of the land over which it is to pass, provided he exercises it in a reasonable manner, having due regard to the rights and interests of the owner of the dominant estate; but if he fails to select it when requested the party who has the right thereto may select a suitable route, having due regard to the convenience of the owner of the servient estate. Id.

Extent.

6. The right of passage on foot over a space not less than 8½ feet in width does not include the right to have the passage kept open to the sky. Baker v. Willard (Mass.) 754

7. The easement or right in respect to light and air from an open space annexed to a mansion-house estate, created by will by providing that the establishment shall continue as much as possible unchanged, does not amount to a general right to have the space kept open for the whole extent of the court, but only to an ordinary easement of light and air for the windows and doors of existing buildings, where there was no communication or entrance to the court from the mansion-house estate, and its only use of the court was for light and air and for a drain. Id.

Transfer; division.

8. An easement of light or air does not pass by implication on a conveyance of a building with windows looking out over vacant lots the title to which remains in the grantor, although the enjoyment and value of the building will be greatly impaired by erecting a structure in close proximity to it on the vacant lots. Kennedy v. Burnap (Cal.) 476

9. The doctrine that an easement appurtenant to a close is appurtenant to every parcel into which that close may be divided is not applicable to an easement of light and air, which ordinarily is limited to windows and doors or other apertures in a building. Baker v. Willard (Mass.) 754

Change.

10. A way of necessity once selected cannot be changed by either party without the consent of the other. Ritchey v. Welsh (Ind.) 105

11. The offer of a substitute for a right of way by necessity in favor of one over another parcel of lands partitioned which would consist of a private way over other lands that constituted no part of the estate held in common need not be accepted by the owner of the right of way. Id.

12. A bar-way connecting a right of way by prescription with a highway may be cut down by the owner of the easement to the grade of the highway, when that is lawfully lowered by the public authorities. Nichols v. Peck (Conn.) 81

Loss.

13. The right of passage through a bar-way as part of a right of way by prescription is not lost by failure to use it for eleven years after the bar-way has been made impassable by the lowering of a highway with which it is connected, by the public authorities, and the use, as a substitute, under an implied license, of another bar-way about 70 feet distant. Id.

14. The chaining and locking of a gate is a sufficient revocation of an implied license to use it arising from the owner's acquiescence for eleven years in its use by one who had a right of way across the premises, after a bar-way at some distance from it, through which he had a right to enter the highway, had been made impassable by the lowering of the highway by the public authorities. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Easements; by prescription; right of way; revocation 81

Way of necessity; right to change. 105

Of light and air. 476, 754

EAVES. See EJECTMENT, 1.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW. See RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

EJECTMENT.

1. An action of ejectment cannot be maintained against one the eaves of whose barn overhang his neighbor's land 10 or 11 inches, where the eaves of the latter's barn are lower than those of the former, and the barn is built so close to the line that the water from the eaves falls on the former's land. Rasch v. Noth (Wis.) 577

2. To succeed in an action of ejectment plaintiff must connect himself with the government title, or with some grantor who was the common source of title of both parties. Slawson v. Goodrich Transp. Co. (Wis.) 825

3. On a new trial in an ejectment suit, taken by the defeated party as matter of right under the terms of a statute allowing it, rulings upon the admissibility of evidence have no binding force. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Ejectment; for overhanging eaves. 577

Effect of prior decision on statutory new trial in real actions. 825

ELECTION. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

ELECTION DISTRICTS.

One exercise of the legislative power to make an apportionment of the state based on the last Federal census, under Ill. Const. art. 4, § 6, providing that the general assembly shall apportion the state every ten years by dividing the population as ascertained by the Federal census, exhausts the power and precludes a change of the apportionment until the conditions provided for in the Constitution shall again exist. People, Mooney, v. Hutchinson (Ill.) 770

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Election districts; apportionment of. 770

ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES. See also TRIAL, 3, 4.

1. Placing electric wires known to be dangerous at a place where others are lawfully entitled to be constitutes negligence. Perham v. Portland General Elec. Co. (Or.) 799

2. The owner of electric wires carrying a dangerous current is chargeable with negligence in stringing them over a bridge so near the top of it that it is impossible to make repairs on the bridge without coming in contact with them. Id.

3. The apparent perfect insulation of electric wires, which is calculated to deceive and to cause one unfamiliar with the facts to suppose them safe, when the wires are placed where persons in the performance of their duties may come in contact with them, amounts to an invitation to them to risk contact therewith. Id.

4. The care demanded of electric companies must be commensurate with the danger, and where the wires carry a highly dangerous current of electricity, the law requires the utmost degree of care in the construction, inspection, and repair of the wires so as to keep them harmless at places where persons are liable to come in contact with them. Id.

5. A workman engaged in repairing a bridge over which electric wires with an apparently safe insulation are strung, where he must come in contact with them in performing his work, has a right to assume that contact with them will not be dangerous,—especially after the workmen have made an examination of them and ascertained, as they suppose, that the wires are not dangerous. Id.

6. The liability of a city for neglect of its duty to exercise care and supervision over electric wires suspended over its streets is not lessened by the fact that individuals or corporations are subjected to a like duty and liability. Mooney v. Luzerne (Pa.) 811

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Electrical uses; negligence as to dangerous wires. 802

ELECTRIC LIGHT. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 2.ELECTRIC RAILROADS. See STREET RAILWAYS.ELISOR.

An elisor may be appointed to take charge of the jury when the sheriff and his deputies are disqualified and the coroner is 40 L. R. A.

disabled by sickness from performing the duty. People v. Ebanks (Cal.) 289

EMINENT DOMAIN. See also EASEMENTS, 2.

1. The reasonable use of the streets of a city for the equipment of a telephone system, including poles and wires, is not a new and additional servitude for which the abutting property owner is entitled to compensation. Magee v. Overshiner (Ind.) 370

2. The uses of streets prevailing at the time of the taking or dedication of a street are not the limits of the uses to which the public is entitled and which the soil owner is deemed to have contemplated, but such uses are to be enlarged to include all of the additional and improved methods of attaining the same objects and enjoying the same privileges, not, however, to the denial or substantial impairment of the fee owner's use and enjoyment of his abutting property. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Telephone poles as additional burden on street. 371

ENTERTAINMENTS. See EXHIBITION.EQUITABLE CONVERSION. See WILLS, 9.EQUITY. See also CLOUD ON TITLE, 1; JUDICIAL SALE, 1, 2.

1. Absence of precedent is not a sufficient reason for denying the existence of equitable jurisdiction. Gavin v. Curtin (Ill.) 776

2. Equity will devise a remedy to meet each new emergency, and will enforce a substitution if the ends of justice require it, where a fund claimed by a wrongdoer is under its control. Baltimore Trust & G. Co. v. Hambleton (Md.) 216

3. Equity will take jurisdiction in all cases where a right recognized by municipal law exists, and courts of law do not provide an adequate remedy for the enforcement, maintenance, and protection of that right. Gavin v. Curtin (Ill.) 776

4. Equity may take jurisdiction to protect an unproductive life estate and remainder of great value which is liable to be lost through inability of the life tenant to pay the taxes. Id.

ESTOPPEL. See also EASEMENTS, 3.

1. Promises do not lay a foundation for an estoppel, if the promisee is not in any way prejudiced by them, or induced thereby to do or omit to do anything to his disadvantage, or in any way to change his status. Barry v. Kirkland (Ariz.) 471

2. Negligence which will work an estoppel against reclaiming property must be a proximate cause of the purchase or advancement of money by the holder of the property, and must enter into the transaction itself. O'Herron v. Gray (Mass.) 498

3. No estoppel can arise from an act of a municipal corporation or officer, done in violation of or without authority of law. Hibbard v. Chicago (Ill.) 621

4. Estoppel against the state from pursuing a treasurer's bond is not effected by its proceeding against the insolvency assignee of one with whom the treasurer had deposited the money, and accepting a dividend from him. State v. Gramm (Wyo.) 690

5. One answering in the negative when asked if he had "a regular right of way" over a farm, without being informed of the purpose of the inquiry and with no intention of misleading, is not estopped to claim that he has a way by prescription as against a purchaser of the premises who does not appear to have relied upon the statement. Nichols v. Peck (Conn.) 81

6. A signature to a blank transfer of certificates of stock plainly showing that it is made by a guardian of infant owners will not pass a good title to one who takes them before any transfer on the books of the corporation without inquiry and merely as a pledge for a debt from the cashier of a bank in which they were placed for safe keeping but from which they were feloniously taken by the cashier. O'Herron v. Gray (Mass.) 498

7. A subscriber is estopped, as against creditors, to set up the invalidity of a subscription to capital stock as to which, if invalid, he was in pari delicto. Cardwell v. Kelly (Va.) 240

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Estoppel; to set up illegality of one's own act. 240

Of tenant to dispute landlord's title. 267

EVIDENCE. See also COURTS, 1; DISCOVERY; TRIAL, 12, 13.

Judicial notice.

1. California courts will take judicial notice that the county of San Diego is in that state. People v. Elbanks (Cal.) 269

2. Judicial notice of the nature and powers of the Holy Roman Catholic Church, so far as its civil rights and duties are concerned, will not be taken without any averment or proof upon the subject. Baxter v. McDonnell (N. Y.) 670

3. It is of common knowledge that in a city crowds assemble in the streets and on the sidewalks on the Fourth of July, and explode firecrackers and cannon crackers and other combustible materials. Aron v. Wausau (Wis.) 738

4. It is a matter of common knowledge that pedigree enters into the consideration of the value of dogs, including such as are kept for sporting purposes. Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. Devo (Tenn.) 513

5. It is a matter of common knowledge that young men who are intelligent, industrious, and frugal, although absolutely penniless, obtain money upon the credit of their future earnings and accumulations. Bettman v. Cowley (Wash.) 815

6. The fact that a child less than two years of age cannot perform any services of value to its parents is a matter of common knowledge. Southern R. Co. v. Covenia (Ga.) 253

7. A jury may consider common knowledge and observation about the habits and qualities of dogs. Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. Devo (Tenn.) 513

Presumptions and burden of proof.

8. The burden of proving restrictions in another state upon the remarriage of a divorced person is upon the person alleging them. State v. Shattuck (Vt.) 425

9. Insurance of property "while contained in brick buildings" does not cast upon the insured the burden of showing the integrity of the building at the time of the fire, if a clause is inserted in the policy to cover the case of its fall. Western Assur. Co. v. J. H. Mohrman Co. (C. C. App. 2d C.) 561

10. The burden of showing that the building did not fall before a fire is not thrown upon the insured by his allegation that the fire did not happen by reason of any of the excepted causes, where liability for loss following the fall of the building is removed by a condition subsequent in the policy. Id.

11. An accident insurance company has the burden in an action upon a policy of proving that an injury to plaintiff shown to be the result of an accident was within some exception named in the policy. Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acci. Assn. (Mich.) 444

12. Negligence cannot be a mere matter of conjecture, but must be fairly inferable from the evidence. Omaha v. Bowman (Neb.) 531

14. A presumption of negligence arises from the blowing of a locomotive whistle loudly and repeatedly under a bridge constantly used by all kinds of vehicles. Mitchell v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (Tenn.) 431

15. The killing of a mule by a train raises a presumption of negligence on the part of the railroad company. Mack v. South Bound R. Co. (S. C.) 675

16. The presumption that a railroad company was negligent if a person was killed by a train is overcome where it is shown that the person must have been sitting or lying on the track, between midnight and daylight. Parish v. Western & A. R. Co. (Ga.) 341

17. The burden is on the railroad companies on appeal from an order of the railroad and warehouse commission for a connecting switch at their intersection, to show a want of its necessity. Jacobson v. Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. (Minn.) 329

18. A railroad company defending a suit to enjoin it from placing abutments in a high way on the ground that it is acting under order of the state railroad commission, has the burden of proving the existence of the order and the identity of the structure which it has threatened to build with that designated in the order. Bristol v. New England R. Co. (Conn.) 475

19. The board of railroad commissioners, one of whom is required by law to be a civil engineer, will be presumed to have made no order for the construction of a public work which cannot be precisely executed. Id.

20. Receipt and confirmation of the report of a jury finding lunacy, as required by statute, will be presumed if the clerk acts on it by appointing a guardian. Sims v. Sims (N. C.) 737

Best and secondary.

21. A true copy of a lost note is not inadmissible because it shows less credits than are admitted by the declaration. Haug v. Riley (Ga.) 244

22. The right to prove a lost note by a copy is not taken away by Ga. Code, § 3986 (Ga. Civ. Code, § 4750), which authorizes suit on such lost note without establishing the copy, as that provision is merely permissive or cumulative. Id.

Documentary.

23. Legislative journals constitute a record which is competent to overthrow the presumption that an act properly signed by the presiding officers of the legislature, approved by the governor, and deposited in the secretary's office, was regularly passed. State, Cheyenne, v. Swan (Wyo.) 195

24. Claimants under a deed prior in time, but subsequent in record, in order to defeat after a great lapse of time a subsequent deed first recorded, have the burden of showing notice or fraud on the part of the subsequent grantees. Gratz v. Land & R. Improv. Co. (C. C. App. 7th C.) 393

25. Recorded, but unacknowledged, agreements regarding land, may be considered in an action to quiet title, under a statute making them evidence in cases brought after its passage, although a portion of the relief asked is injunction against an ejectment suit begun before the passage of the act. Id.

26. Medical books cannot be read to the jury as independent evidence of the opinions and theories therein expressed or advocated. Union P. R. Co. v. Yates (C. C. App. 8th C.) 553

27. A statute making books of science or art presumptive evidence of facts of general notoriety or interest does not include medical works so as to make them evidence of the opinions or theories therein expressed. Id.

28. A treatise on concussion of the spine, about the extent and character of which there is some difference of opinion among the medical profession, is not admissible in evidence to establish the fact that an ailment from which a person appears to be suffering is a result of nervous shock sustained some years previously in a railway collision. Id.

29. Correspondence and affidavits are not admissible to prove the fact of accident or cause of death, in an action on an insurance policy, although admissible to show compliance with or waiver of a condition as to furnishing proofs of death. Foster v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Wis.) 833

Parol, as to writings.

30. A deed calling for land in a certain block in a plat on file in a certain office, cannot be extended by parol evidence to embrace land not in that block as shown by the plat. Shuison v. Goodrich Transportation Co. (Wis.) 825

Opinions.

31. Answers should not be permitted to hypothetical questions from which an element

"probably the most important" has been left out. Western Assur. Co. v. J. H. Mohlman Co. (C. C. App. 2d C.) 561

32. Expert witnesses may, in support of their professional opinions, read in evidence statistics of mechanical experiments and tabulations of the results thereof, where the scientific work containing them is concededly recognized as a standard authority by the profession, and when such statistics and tabulations are generally relied upon by experts in the particular field of the mechanic arts with which such statistics and tabulations are concerned. Id.

33. Lapse of time after the fall of a building before persons who testify as experts as to whether it fell before or after a fire saw it will not wholly exclude their opinions, if timbers, upon the condition of which the opinions were largely formed, were still lying in the ruins when their inspection was made. Id.

34. An opinion of a physician that death was occasioned by injuries, based on evidence before him, cannot be allowed when the action does not show the facts upon which the opinion was based. Foster v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Wis.) 833

35. What a party would do under a given state of facts which call upon him or her to perform a duty to some other person is a fact to which such person can testify, and not a matter of opinion merely. Western U. Tele. Co. v. Mitchell (Tex.) 209

Declarations; hearsay.

36. Hypnotism of a person accused of crime will not render evidence of statements made by him while under the influence admissible in his favor at his trial. People v. Ebanks (Cal.) 289

37. Evidence of the pedigree of a dog is not inadmissible on the ground that it is hearsay. Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. Dew (Tenn.) 519

Relevancy.

38. Whenever proof of one crime tends to prove a fact material in the trial of another, such proof is admissible; and the fact that it may tend to prejudice defendant in the eyes of the jury is immaterial. People v. Ebanks (Cal.) 289

39. Evidence is admissible in a prosecution for murder, that two days before the murder the accused was found under the bed in a stranger's house, having with him a bag which was afterwards found near the place of the crime, and which he had denied ever having in his possession, as tending to throw light upon his actions, appearance, and belongings at a period not remote from the day of the crime. Id.

40. Evidence as to the failure to give statutory signals at road crossings is admissible in an action for injuries not received at a crossing, where reckless negligence in running a train is alleged. Mack v. South Bound R. Co. (S. C.) 879

41. Testimony as to the value of property is relevant on the question of damages, under an agreement that these shall not exceed the actual cash value or the cost of repairing or replacing the property. Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (Iowa) 845

42. In defense of a claim for loss of wages and future earnings in an action for personal injuries, defendant may show any facts concerning plaintiff's habits and conduct which may throw light upon the probability of his securing employment, and the character and continuity of the same. Kingston v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co. (Mich.) 181

43. Waiver need not be specially pleaded in order to admit evidence thereof, but can be shown under an allegation of performance. Foster v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Wis.) 883

Weight.

44. Possession by an insured of the policy is, upon demurrer by the insurer to the evidence in a suit upon the policy, conclusive evidence that the premium was paid. Fidelity & C. Co. v. Chambers (Va.) 482

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Burden of proof of negligence of insured. 446

Presumptions as to sanity at time of marriage. 742

Parol, to vary boundaries of land. 827

Parol, to extend deeds. 896

Scientific books and treatises as evidence:—
(I.) Exact sciences: (a) general rule as to admissibility; (b) tables of expectancy of life: (1) admissibility generally; (2) in accident cases; (3) in other cases generally; (4) conclusiveness and effect; (c) the almanac; (II.) inexact sciences: (a) general rule as to admissibility; (b) reasons for the rule; (c) the contrary rule; (d) opinions founded on books; (e) use of, on examination; (f) use of to sustain or discredit expert; (g) use of, on cross-examination; (h) use of, in argument; (III.) law; (IV.) miscellaneous matters. 558

Intoxication as evidence of negligence. 148

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 1.

1. Money belonging to an estate, received by one who is subsequently appointed administrator, becomes cash assets of the estate for which his bond is a security. Hodge v. Hodge (Me.) 83

2. An administrator de bonis non cannot maintain an action against the estate of his predecessor for money belonging to the estate, wrongfully received by him prior to his appointment as administrator and for which he failed to account, if it is not distinguishable as part of the intestate's property. Id.

3. A widow's election of dower and refusal to accept the gift of the income of certain property for life in lieu thereof, under a will which contemplates the conversion of the real estate into money and then a division, will entitle the administrator to divide the balance of the estate after setting off dower, without waiting for the death of the widow. Sherman v. Baker (R. I.) 717

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

What assets pass to the administrator de bonis non:—(I.) Generally; (II.) the rule in the 40 L. R. A.

different states; (III.) summary: (a) goods remaining in specie; (b) choses in action; (c) avoiding sales or transfers made by predecessor: (1) rule at common law: (1) where assets have been converted by predecessor; (2) where there is a devastavit; (3) requiring the predecessor to account; (4) money and balance due from predecessor; (e) where the common-law rule has been changed by statute: (1) where assets have been converted by predecessor; (2) where there is a devastavit; (3) requiring the predecessor to account; (4) money and balance due from predecessor. 83

Right to rents on lease of intestate's property:—(I.) Classification by states; (II.) English cases: (a) form of lease; (b) apportionment; (c) summary of English cases; (III.) summary as to rents accruing during owner's life; (IV.) summary as to rents accruing after owner's death: (a) rights of heir; (b) rights of administrator: (1) by statute; (2) in a foreign state; (c) liability of administrator: (1) generally; (2) for use and occupation; (3) accounting and sureties; (d) rights of creditors; (e) apportionment. 321

EXEMPTION. See also MORTGAGE, 12.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Exemption; from chattel mortgage. 150

EXHIBITIONS. See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 8.

1. The risk of injury from careless handling of the implements used by the performers is not, as matter of law, assumed by a street car patron who attends a free exhibition given by the company upon its grounds. Thompson v. Lowell, L. & H. Street R. Co. (Mass.) 845

2. A street car patron attending a free entertainment given by the company to its patrons may hold the company liable for an accident which happens from a cause which might have been prevented and ought to have been foreseen and guarded against, if due care was not taken by the company with reference to possible accidents of the kind. Id.

EXPERTS. See EVIDENCE, 32-34.

EXPLOSIONS. See NUISANCES, 6.

EXPRESS COMPANY. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 1, 2, 4.

FACTORY. See BUILDINGS, 3.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT. See CARRIERS, 5.

FENCE. See also RAILROADS, 7.

1. One may lawfully build a high fence on his own land which shuts off light and air from the windows of his neighbor's house, although he makes the fence for no useful or ornamental purpose but from motives of un-mixed malice toward the neighbor. Letts v. Kessler (Ohio) 177

2. One who plants a hedge fence on his part of the dividing line between him and the adjoining owner is not required to trim the same to prevent its growing out over the land of such adjoining owner, under the Iowa statute authorizing the growth of a hedge on the division line, without specifying its height or how it shall be trimmed. Kinney v. Kinney (Iowa) 626

3. Neglect of an adjoining owner to trim a hedge fence standing on part of the division line is not within Iowa Code 1873, § 1490, providing that if any party neglect to "repair or rebuild" a partition fence the aggrieved party may appeal to the fence viewers, and if they determine the fence is "insufficient" they shall signify it in writing to the delinquent owner, and direct him to repair or rebuild. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liability for the malicious erection of a fence:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) malice gives no ground of action; (III.) contrary doctrine; (IV.) state statutes and decisions thereunder. 177

Powers of viewers. 627

FINDER. See BEES, 2.

FINES. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.

FIRECRACKERS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 8.

FIRE ESCAPE. See BUILDINGS, 2, 3.

FIRES.

1. One whose negligence caused a fire is not liable for property burned after the fire had met another fire for which no known responsible agency can be fixed, and either fire would have been alone sufficient to do the damage. Cook v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. (Wis.) 457

2. The rule of liability in case of joint wrongdoers does not apply to injuries from a fire into which two independent fires from different directions have merged, each of which would have been separately sufficient to cause the loss, but only one of which can be traced to a responsible agency. Id.

FISHERIES. See also HARBORS, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fisheries; right of, separated from upland. 898

FOOD. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8.

A statute making the mixture of any articles of food without labeling the product an offense is too general, but the act to be enforced should name the particular article of food the adulteration of which is prohibited and which is required to be labeled. Dorsey v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 203

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Food; constitutionality of statute as to. 201

FORFEITURE. See CORPORATIONS, 11-13; HOMESTEAD; WATERS, 2, 13-15.

FORGERY. See also BILLS AND NOTES, 1. 40 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Forgery; ratification of. 471

FRANCHISE. See CORPORATIONS, 11-13; TELEPHONE; WATERS, 13-15.

FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES. See also ASSUMPSIT; BET; CORPORATIONS, 10.

1. A statement in the prospectus of a corporation prepared by a promoter of the corporation who organized it with the intention of transferring to it certain real estate previously purchased by him as follows: "Cost of ground $40,000."—is not fraudulent although the land cost him less than that amount, as it is not a representation that the land actually cost the promoter such amount, but that it is to be estimated at that amount in the transfer to the corporation. Milwaukee Cold Storage Co. v. Dexter (Wis.) 837

2. Fraud in an assignment of wages by a debtor is not shown by the fact that the assignee never drew the wages, but they were drawn on his orders by the assignor and immediately paid over to him. Dolan v. Hughes (R. I.) 735

3. A conveyance for the security of several claims, some of which are fraudulent, will be sustained in favor of those which are valid. Victor v. Glover (Wash.) 297

4. Creditors who act in good faith in taking a conveyance of their debtor's property in satisfaction of their claims, and who surrender notes to a larger amount than is covered by the assets assigned, may retain what they receive although the grantors may act in bad faith. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fraud; setting aside series of acts to defraud. 382

FREE SCHOLARSHIP. See PUBLIC MONEY, 2; STATUTES, 3.

FRIGHT.

Recovery for injuries occasioned by fright, which was caused by the negligence of a railroad company, can be had, although no physical injury was sustained except that caused by the fright. Maack v. South Bound R. Co. (S. C.) 879

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fright; liability for damages caused by. 880

GAMBLING. See COMMERCE, 2.

GAME LAWS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7; CONTRACTS, 6.

Game purchased on an Indian reservation by an Indian from Indians who killed it on the reservation is not exempt from the game laws of the state prohibiting shipment of game out of the state, after it is transported beyond the reservation for the purpose of shipment to another state. Selkirk v. Stevens (Minn.) 759 certain sums for the maintenance of the child and a certain allowance of alimony to the wife, with a provision that a divorce or second marriage of either party shall terminate the agreement,—is terminated and mutually abandoned when the husband obtains judgment for absolute divorce in one state, and the wife obtains a limited divorce in another state. Ather-ton v. Atherton (N. Y.) 291

Marriage of person when insane:—(I.) Invalidity of; (II.) degree of incapacity which will affect; (III.) test of capacity to contract; (IV.) test of capacity to know the nature of the act; (V.) incapacity combined with fraud; (VI.) incapacity as a ground for divorce; (VII.) ratification and waiver of right to attack; (VIII.) evidence of incapacity: (a) presumption and burden of proof; (b) sufficiency, weight, and admissibility; (c) effect of inquisition; (IX.) annulment: (a) necessity of decree for; (b) jurisdiction; procedure; (c) effect. 737

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Marriage of insane person.	258
Action by wife against husband for tort.	549
Right of action by wife for tort of husband.	758
Jurisdiction for divorce.	292
Duty to support children after divorce.	580, 587

HYPNOTISM. See also EVIDENCE, 86.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Hypnotism:—(I.) Nature of subject; (II.) definition; (III.) its existence and effect generally; (IV.) its use in procuring the commission of crime; (V.) its use in procuring submission to criminal acts or attacks; (VI.) its use as an inquisitorial agent; (VII.) its curative uses; propriety of restraint. 269

INCOMPETENT PERSONS. See also BANKS, 1; EVIDENCE, 20; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 1-5; WILLS, 1-3.

A guardian of a lunatic cannot be removed in an ex parte proceeding in which no notice is served on him. Sims v. Sims (N. C.) 737

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also HUSBAND AND WIFE; HYPNOTISM.

Incompetent persons; insane delusions. 258

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 8, 9.

INDIAN RESERVATION. See COMMERCE, 1; GAME LAWS.

INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

Addition of the state to the name of the district attorney who signs an information charging one with crime is not necessary. People v. Ebanks (Cal.) 269

INFANTS. See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, 10-14; JUDGMENT, 3; NEGLIGENCE, 6.

1. The direction by will that a child shall 40 L. R. A.

be reared by the sisters of the testatrix and trained as their own is not limited by a subsequent provision for the appointment of her husband as guardian and to manage the business and property of the testatrix. Stringfellow v. Somerville (Va.) 623

2. A man who permits the custody of his infant child to pass, in accordance with his wife's will, to her sisters, and allows the child to remain with and be reared and trained by them for five or six years, will not be allowed to reassert his right to the custody of the child if this is not for the welfare of the child. Id.

3. As between two claimants of the custody of an infant, the question is not which can surround the child with greater luxury, or give him the greater amount of money or property, but with which the child is likely to be reared and trained so as to make the better man and the better citizen. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Infants; effect of agreement as to custody of.	293
Contract for custody of.	624

INHERITANCE TAX. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4; TAXES, 5-7.

INJUNCTION. See also WATERS, 8.

1. An injunction against the use of a name may be granted in favor of one who has the exclusive right thereto, although no damage is alleged. Bagby & R. Co. v. Rivers (Md.) 632

2. A mandatory injunction to compel the secret password of the grand lodge of a benevolent society to be given to a delegate of a subordinate lodge, and to permit him to participate in the deliberations, is not within the province of a court of equity, where it is not shown that any right of property is endangered, although an irreparable injury may be done to the delegate and to his lodge by excluding him. Wellencross v. Grand Lodge K. of P. (Ky.) 488

3. Charter power to make general police regulations for the benefit of trade and commerce, and to provide for the abatement and removal of nuisances, will not authorize a city to maintain a suit to enjoin the filling up of a lake shore along, but outside, the limits of a public street. Madison v. Mayers (Wis.) 625

4. A city may maintain an action to enjoin abutting owners from removing materials from the unused part at the side of a street, which will make the opening of the street to its entire width more difficult. Id.

5. A town cannot enjoin the erection of abutments in one of its highways in pursuance of an order by the railroad commission to abolish a grade crossing; but if it regards its rights encroached upon, it must appeal from the order. Bristol v. New England R. Co. (Conn.) 479

6. An injunction against devoting property dedicated for an ornamental park to any other use can be granted in favor of the original donors of the property. Rouze v. Perry (Miss.) 402

7. An injunction against the proprietor of a theatre will not be granted to prevent his breach of a contract to furnish the theatre and its equipment, including light, heat, music, ushers, etc., to the manager of a company for a certain time, and to prevent him from furnishing the theatre to a rival company during that period, nor can the contract be partly enforced by injunction limited to the use of the building and furnishings. Welty v. Jacobs (Ill.) 98

8. The mere possibility of injury by an unconstitutional statute which may prevent insurance companies from making such contracts as persons might otherwise procure them to make will not authorize injunctive relief in behalf of those who wish such contracts. Business Men's League v. Waddill (Mo.) 501

9. An injunction against the approval by the superintendent of the insurance department of a uniform policy of insurance, under a statute which is alleged to be unconstitutional as an attempt to delegate to him legislative powers, cannot be granted on behalf of individuals in order to protect them in the right to make contracts of insurance to suit their varying needs and circumstances, as the statute, if unconstitutional, cannot stand in the way of any contracts that may be made. Id.

10. A perpetual injunction may be granted against the execution of a contract for the care of a person having leprosy, when its tendency is not to protect the community but to cause a dissemination of the disease. Baltimore v. Fairfield Improv. Co. (Md.) 494

11. Serious injury to the value of the property of the residents of a locality by the establishment of a pest house in the vicinity will warrant an injunction against it. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction; by municipalities against nuisances in waters and watercourses:—(I.) In general; (II.) pollution and other matters affecting health. 465

Against nuisance. 494

To enforce negative covenant. 98

INNKEEPERS. See also ANIMALS, 6.

1. The liability of an innkeeper for goods stolen from a peddler's cart while in the innkeeper's custody is not avoided by the fact that the peddler had no license to peddle, as he did not lodge at the inn as a peddler. Cohen v. Marvel (Me.) 491

2. A cart of a peddler who becomes a guest at an inn is delivered to the innkeeper for safe custody, within the meaning of Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 27, § 7, when by his directions it is placed in a livery stable belonging to him, although it is not connected with the inn. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Innkeepers; liability for goods of guest; illegal business of guest. 491

INQUEST: See CORONER.

40 L. R. A.

INSOLVENCY. See also ESTOPPEL, 4; PARTNERSHIP, 3; SET-OFF.

A claim accruing after an assignment for creditors on a contract previously made by the assignor is assets in the hands of the assignee only to the extent of the balance due after deducting a claim against the assignor which was a valid existing set-off at the time of the assignment. Re Hatch (N. Y.) 664

INSPECTION. See DISCOVERY.

INSURANCE. See also CORPORATIONS, 11, 12; EVIDENCE, 9-11, 44; INJUNCTION, 8, 9.

1. The power of the superintendent of insurance to revoke or decline to renew a license of a life insurance company created under the laws of another state, under Ohio Rev. Stat. § 2745, because of its refusal to pay taxes, is not suspended by the pendency of an action brought by him against the company for such taxes. State, National Life Assn., v. Matthews (Ohio) 418

2. What constitutes life insurance on the assessment plan within the meaning of Ohio Rev. Stat. § 3630e, must be determined by the laws of that state; and these contemplate that such insurance must be for the sole benefit of the policy holders, and the principal source of revenue must arise from post mortem assessments intended to liquidate specific losses. Id.

3. A corporation having a capital stock in which many members do not share, and conducting business for the pecuniary benefit of the stockholders, is not acting "for the sole benefit of its members and their beneficiaries, and not for profit," within the meaning of Md. Code, § 143e, so as to be entitled to issue fraternal beneficiary certificates. International Fraternal Alliance v. State (Md.) 187

4. Policies for more than $1,000 on one life, when they are policies of insurance such as co-operative assessment associations issue, and not certificates such as fraternal beneficiary associations issue, cannot be lawfully issued by a corporation subject to Md. Code, art. 23, § 128, although its charter provides, not only for insurance, but "for social or fraternal beneficial purposes, or both." Id.

5. An insurance company having capital stock and stockholders for whose benefit it was created may be admitted to transact business on the assessment plan in Ohio, under Ohio Rev. Stat. § 3630e, if authorized to transact such business under the laws of the state which created it, although there is no statutory authority given to Ohio stock corporations to do such business. State, National Life Assn., v. Matthews (Ohio) 418

Cancellation.

6. A return or tender of unearned premiums is necessary in order to affect a cancellation of an insurance policy providing that it may be canceled "by giving five days' notice," and also that "the unearned premium shall be returned on surrender of this policy." Tisdell v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 765

7. Notice that an unearned premium will be returned, and holding the amount subject to the call of the insured, does not satisfy the obligation of an insured to return the premium as a condition of canceling the policy. Id.

Illegal business.

8. Insurance on merchandise kept for an illegal business, such as a stock of drugs and liquors kept by a dealer who does not have the permit required by law to sell them, is not void as against public policy. Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (Iowa) 845

Conditions.

9. Insurance companies have the same rights as individuals to limit their liability and to impose whatever conditions they please upon their obligations, not inconsistent with public policy or statutory provisions. Dumas v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. (D. C.) 358

As to title and encumbrances.

10. A condition that an insurance policy shall not be valid if the property is mortgaged does not contravene any public policy. Id.

11. The purchaser of property on the instalment plan, of which the title is reserved in the seller, has not a sole and unconditional ownership of it, within the meaning of an insurance policy. Id.

12. The indivisibility of an insurance policy upon a certain amount of furniture as a whole renders it entirely void, when it is avoided as to part by breach of conditions as to title and encumbrances on the property and false swearing respecting them, under a provision that "this entire policy shall be void" in various contingencies, including those of encumbrances on the property, or lack of sole ownership, or false swearing by the insured. Id.

13. An express condition that a policy shall be void if the insured is not the sole and unconditional owner of the property, or if it is mortgaged, will render it void if the conditions are broken, even if the insured made no representations as to the property or any fraudulent concealment of the facts. Id.

14. An insurer will be conclusively presumed to have waived a provision of a policy, rendering it void, if there is a mortgage or other encumbrance on the property, whether inquired about or not, unless it is so notified to the company and so expressed in the policy, if the value of the property exceeded the encumbrance so that insured had an insurable interest therein, although the agent had no actual knowledge of the encumbrance, where no inquiries were made of the insured respecting the character or condition of his title, and he made no false representations respecting the same, and did not intentionally conceal the existence of the encumbrance, and the insurer accepted and retained the premium. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Fuller (Neb.) 408

15. A mere executory agreement to sell insured goods does not constitute any change of interest within the meaning of an insurance policy. Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (Iowa) 845

Preferred occupation.

16. A bank cashier does not as matter of law lose his right to recover upon an accident insurance policy providing that it shall be wholly void as to all accidents occurring while he is engaged in any profession, employment, 40 L. R. A.

or exposure not rated as a preferred occupation, by sawing off blocks from a board for his own use. Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acci. Asso. (Mich.) 444

17. The use of a buzz saw by a bank cashier insured against accidents by a policy providing that it shall be void as to all accidents occurring while he is engaged in any profession, employment or exposure not rated as a preferred occupation, will not prevent recovery for an accident caused by his slipping and falling against the saw after he has ceased to use it. Id.

18. One insured as a grocer's secretary and treasurer in an accident insurance company, whose policy provides that if he is injured while engaged in work or duty classified as more hazardous than the occupation for which he is insured, he shall recover at the rate fixed for the increased hazard,—does not, as matter of law, change his occupation to farming by returning to a farm owned by him less than a week after his employment as such secretary and treasurer ceases. Johnson v. London Guarantee & A. Co. (Mich.) 440

Exposure to danger.

19. One must act with gross or wanton negligence to make his act a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, within the provision in an accident insurance policy. Id.

20. The words "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger" do not embrace every exposure that an insured person might have avoided by the exercise of due care, but relate to dangers of a substantial character, which he knew and to which he purposely and consciously exposed himself, intending at the time to assume all the risks. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Hubbell (Ohio) 459

21. Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, within the meaning of an accident insurance policy, is not shown by the facts that the insured, without knowing that a train was due, sat on a bag on the railroad track at a night-way crossing, and upon being warned of the approach of a train, started away, but turned back for the bag, and was struck before he could get away. Fidelity & C. Co. v. Chambers (Va.) 442

22. Hunting for game with a loaded gun is not a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within the meaning of an accident insurance policy excluding injuries sustained by reason of such exposure. Cornwell v. Fraternal Acci. Asso. (N. D.) 47

23. Attempting to scale a bank with a loaded gun in hand is not a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within the meaning of an accident insurance policy.

24. The owner of a farm does not voluntarily expose himself to unnecessary danger within the provisions of an accident insurance policy, by attempting to drive a bull from a calf pasture into which it has broken, if he does not believe, and has no reason to believe, that there is any danger to himself in so doing. Johnson v. London Guarantee & A. Co. (Mich.) 440

25. An attempt to cross a slough in a public road, made by a traveling salesman who last year crossed it twice a year for thirteen years and who, acting on his own judgment based on his previous knowledge and appearance of the place, together with the opinions of others, concludes that there is no danger to his life in making the attempt,—is not a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within the meaning of an accident insurance policy. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Hubbell (Ohio) 453

Violation of law.

26. One who has started to hunt prairie chickens with a loaded gun at a season when it is unlawful to kill them, and who is injured by an accidental discharge of his gun as he is climbing a bank, is not engaged in violation of law within the exception of an accident insurance policy. Cornwell v. Fraternal Acci. Asso. (N. D.) 487

Intoxication.

27. That an insured person had taken drinks just before he received an injury will not, if he was not drunk, bring him within the clause of the policy that it shall not "cover any accidental injury which may happen to me while under the influence of intoxicating drinks." Fidelity & C. Co. v. Chambers (Va.) 482

Fall of building.

28. A stipulation that "in case of the fall of the building all insurance by this policy shall immediately cease" is a condition subsequent, and not an exception, and the burden of showing that it became operative before loss is upon the insurer,—especially where it is not in the descriptive part of the policy, but is among the provisos; and it is immaterial that the clause "except as hereinafter provided" is inserted in the descriptive part of the policy. Western Assur. Co. v. J. H. Mohlman Co. (C. C. App. 2d C.) 561

Accidental injury.

29. Death caused by accidental drowning is death from "external, violent and accidental means," within the meaning of an accident policy. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Hubbell (Ohio) 453

30. Blood poisoning caused by an accident, and which is a mere link in the chain of causation between the accident and the death which it produces, is not an intervening and independent cause of death which will prevent liability on insurance against accident. Western Commercial Travelers' Asso. v. Smith (C. C. App. 8th C.) 653

31. An abrasion of the skin of a toe, unexpectedly caused, without design, by unforeseen, unusual, and unexpected friction in the act of wearing a new shoe, is an accidental injury within the meaning of an insurance policy. Id.

32. Blood poisoning by germs in cotton placed in a person's mouth with her consent, by a dentist, to stop the flow of blood after extracting a tooth, creates no liability on an accident policy which has a condition against liability for injuries "from poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled," notwithstanding the fact that the germs were not known to exist in the cotton, since they were voluntarily, though accidentally, introduced into the system. Kasten v. Interstate Casualty Co. (Wis.) 651

Notice of injury.

33. Notice of an accident causing death, given to an insurance company twenty-nine days after knowledge of the facts was obtained, is not "immediate" within the meaning of the policy. Foster v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Wis.) 888

34. No notice of an accident or injury causing death need be given by the beneficiary of the death loss until the death occurs, where the policy provides for immediate notice "in the event of any accident or injury for which claim shall be made, . . . or in case of death resulting therefrom," as this provides for two notices for different claims, one of injury not resulting in death, and the other of death. Western Commercial Travelers' Asso. v. Smith (C. C. App. 8th C.) 653

Proofs of loss; fraud.

35. An estimate of the value of insured property by the insured in his proofs of loss will not constitute fraud if he places the amount too high merely through inadvertence or mistake. Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (Iowa) 845

36. Failure to read an affidavit which is short, plain, and simple will not relieve the affiant from the effect of false swearing as to the title and lack of encumbrances on property, to avoid insurance thereon, although the affidavit was prepared by the insurance agent. Dumas v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. (D. C.) 358

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; forfeiture of charter of company for abuse. 188

Right to contract for. 501

Breach of conditions of policy. 408

Violating criminal law as breach of. 437

Avoided by encumbrance and false swearing. 858

Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within the meaning of insurance policy:—(I.) Construction compared with negligence; (II.) consciousness of danger; (III.) risks incident to duty or necessity; (IV.) unexpected results; (V.) what constitutes; particular cases; (VI.) proof of, as a defense. 482

Proviso against poison or anything administered, absorbed, or inhaled. 652

Disease or accident as cause of death. 652, 654

Return of premium for cancelation of. 765

Immediate notice of injury; waiver of proofs. 884

Validity of fire insurance on property illegally used:—(I.) General principles; (II.) violation of excise laws; (III.) offenses against public order and decency; (IV.) violation of law taxing occupations. 845

INTENT. See CRIMINAL LAW, 1.

INTEREST.

Interest on the whole amount of a trust fund deposited in a bank is chargeable to the bank from the time of a demand by the true owner and a refusal to pay. American Trust & B. Co. v. Boone (Ga.) 250

INTOXICATING LIQUORS. See also TRIAL, 11.

An ordinance may vest discretionary power in the council as to issuing licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors within certain limits, where there is charter authority to enact ordinances to tax and regulate that business, but such discretion must be reasonably exercised. State, Noble, v. Cheyenne (Wyo.) 710

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Intoxicating liquors; discretion as to license to sell. 710

INTOXICATION. See DRUNKENNESS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.IRRIGATION. See NUISANCES, 4.JOINT CREDITOR AND DEBTOR. See BILLS AND NOTES, 5; FIRES, 2.JOINT OWNERS. See NOTICE.JOINT RATES. See CARRIERS, 18.JUDGMENT. See also CONTRACTS, 8; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, 1.

1. The right of action on a judgment exists at common law, in the absence of a statute to the contrary. Bettman v. Cowley (Wash.) 815

2. A judgment is not rendered so as to constitute a lien from the "time of such rendition," within the meaning of Iowa Code, § 8801, until it is entered on the record of the court, as required by § 8784, although a form of judgment has been signed by the judge and indorsed "filed" by the clerk. Callanan v. Votruba (Iowa) 875

3. The decree of a probate court ordering the sale by a guardian of shares of stock owned by infants is void, when it was made without any notice to them or to the guardian upon a petition signed in the guardian's name without any authority. O'Herron v. Gray (Mass.) 498

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judgment; validity of divorce in other state. 291

When becomes lien. 875

Validity of statute restricting lien on. 815

JUDICIAL NOTICE. See PLEADING, 8.JUDICIAL SALE. See also MORTGAGE, 6-9.

1. The testator's intention that real estate should not be alienated will not prevent a court of equity from ordering its sale if necessary to preserve the benefit of it to the beneficiary. Gavin v. Curtin (Ill.) 776

2. Land left to a life tenant and remainderman may be sold by a court of equity if it is necessary to prevent its loss through inability of the life tenant to pay the taxes. Id.

3. Possible afterborn children will be bound by a decree directing its sale to preserve the interest of remaindermen under a devise of land from loss for nonpayment of taxes, where 40 L. R. A.

the parties in being and before the court have the same incentive to accomplish the same purpose as would move and possess the parties not in esse if they were in being. Id.

4. An undisclosed gold clause in a mortgage subject to which real estate is bought at auction is not a defect in title which will enable the purchaser to withdraw from his contract; nor will a contract be implied on the part of the vendor that no such clause existed, a breach of which will entitle the purchaser to rescind the contract and recover his deposit where the government has pledged its faith to keep all its funds at par, and the terms of the mortgage are such that there is no probability that the policy of the government will be changed before the mortgage becomes due. Blanch v. Sadlier (N. Y.) 666

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judicial sales; enforcement of. 67

Chancery jurisdiction for. 77

JURY. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 20; EVIDENCE, 7; TRIAL, 1, 2; WITNESSES, 1.JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

The Nebraska district court has no jurisdiction of the person of the surety on an undertaking on appeal from a justice's judgment that it may on rendering a judgment against appellant render the same against the surety. Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills (Neb.) 761

LANDLORD AND TENANT. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 1.

The lessor of a pulp mill does not owe to the servants of the lessee the duty of making the requisite examination, or of possessing the requisite technical learning, and communicating the results as to the safe condition of a digester in the mill, before turning the plant over to the lessee. Whitmore v. Oronau Paper & P. Co. (Me.) 377

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Lessor's liability for dangerous condition of premises. 377

LANGUAGE. See PUBLICATION.LARCENY. See also ANIMALS, 3; BEES, 1NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Larceny; of dog. 509, 514

Of bees. 62

LAW BOOKS.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As evidence. 77

LEASE. See ALIENS, 1.LEGACY. See CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1.LEGAL TENDER. See MONEY, 2, 3LEGISLATIVE JOURNALS. See COURTS, 2; EVIDENCE, 23.

LEPROSY. See CONTRACT, 7; INJUNCTION, 10.

LIBEL AND SLANDER. See also CASE, 3.

1. The transmission by sound over telegraph wires by the telegraph operator at one place to an operator at another, of a libelous message to be by the latter reduced to writing and delivered to the person referred to therein, is a publication of the libel. Peterson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Minn.) 661

2. A telegraph company is liable, whether negligent or not, for the act of one of its operators in transmitting a libelous message over its wires if such act was wrongful, but is not liable, however negligent it may have been in employing the operator, or in not adopting proper rules, if such act was lawful. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Libel; publication of. 661

LICENSE. See also AWNINGS, 2; INNKEEPERS, 1.

1. A tax upon occupations or employments, whether for revenue or as an exaction for the privilege of pursuing a calling, may be imposed and collected in the form of a license fee. Banta v. Chicago (Ill.) 611

2. A delegation of the power to impose license taxes on occupations may be made by the legislature to municipal corporations. Id.

3. The uniformity of a license tax on occupations is required by Ill. Const. art. 9, § 1, only as to the class upon which it operates. Id.

4. "Goods, wares, and merchandise" for the sale or negotiation of which a broker is required to pay a license tax, include shares in the capital stock of incorporated companies and other securities which are the subject of common barter and sale and which are given visible and palpable form by means of certificates, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness. Id.

5. A license tax on brokers extends to a member of a stock exchange who buys and sells stocks, bonds, or securities on the floor of the exchange in his own name, and makes or receives delivery and payment in the execution of orders for his customers. Id.

6. Either regulation or revenue may be the purpose of a license tax imposed on the occupation of a broker and other trades or occupations mentioned in Ill. Const. 1870, art. 9, § 1, and it is not material to determine which may be the purpose of the license. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

License; of brokers. 611

LIENS. See also JUDGMENT, 2.

1. Every person who has bestowed labor and skill on a chattel bailed to him for the purpose, thereby increasing its value, has a lien on such chattel under the common law, and may retain the same until paid his reasonable charges for his services. Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills (Neb.) 761

40 L. R. A.

2. One who makes needed repairs on a mortgaged buggy left with him for the purpose by the mortgagor without the knowledge of the mortgagee is entitled to a lien thereon for his services superior to that of the mortgagee where the latter has given the mortgagor at least implied authority to have repairs made by a clause in the mortgage that the mortgagor should not so negligently or improperly use or care for the buggy as to subject it to probable loss or material depreciation in value. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liens; priority as to chattel mortgage. 762

LIFE TENANTS. See EQUITY, 4.

LIGHT. See EASEMENTS, 7-9.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 5.

1. The right of a foreign corporation to plead the statute of limitations under Cal. act April 1, 1872, depends upon its compliance with the statute in respect to the designation of a person upon whom process may be served. Pierce v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 850

2. The failure of a foreign corporation to file and register its charter in compliance with the statute when doing business in the state until after action is brought against it will not prevent it from pleading the statute of limitations. Turcott v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. (Tenn.) 768

3. A foreign corporation is not "out of the state" within the meaning of Shannon's (Tenn.) Code, § 4455, so as to preclude the defense of the statute of limitations, when the corporation has officers and agents in the state on whom service can be made at any time. Id.

LODGE. See INJUNCTION, 2; PLEADING, 2.

LOST INSTRUMENTS. See EVIDENCE, 21, 22.

LUNATICS. See INSANE PERSONS.

MALICE. See FENCE, 1; NOTES AND BRIEFS.

MANDATORY INJUNCTION. See INJUNCTION, 2.

MAP. See PLAT; RAILROADS, 4-6.

MARRIAGE. See CONFLICT OF LAWS, 3.

MASSES. See also COMMON LAW.

1. A bequest of a certain sum to a bishop to be used and applied for masses for the repose of the souls of certain persons specified is void for the reason that there is no beneficiary who may enforce performance of the trust. McHugh v. McCole (Wis.) 724

2. A trust, and not an absolute gift to the individual named as recipient of the gift, is effected by a bequest to a certain person "to be used and applied as follows: for masses for the repose of" the souls of certain persons named, etc. Id.

But see cases following.

3. A gift by will of a certain sum to a priest to say masses for the testator, being an outright gift to take effect at once, is valid. Sherman v. Baker (R. I.) 717

4. A bequest for the celebration of mass for the souls of the testator and another, made to a priest, is valid as a gift direct to the donee with an injunction to the performance of the ceremonial named; and the fact that there is no living beneficiary is immaterial because no trust is created. Harrison v. Brophy (Kan.) 721

5. A devise and bequest to a church in trust to expend the proceeds in saying masses for the repose of the souls of certain persons is not void as a mere private trust, but is a valid charitable gift, aiding to support the clergy and public worship, as it is presumed that the masses will be said in public. Hoeffer v. Clo gan (Ill.) 730

6. A bequest to the parish priest of a certain church to say masses for the testator goes to the priest who is in office when the will takes effect. Sherman v. Baker (R. I.) 717

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Masses; validity of bequests for. 717

MASTER AND SERVANT. See also BUILDINGS, 2, 3; CONTRACTS, 5; CUSTOM, 1; LIBEL AND SLANDER, 2.

1. Notice of a contract between an express company and a railroad company, to the effect that the former will hold the latter harmless against claims by the express company's employees for negligence of the railroad company or otherwise, is chargeable to one of such employees who goes upon the tracks of the railroad company in the course of his employment under the license given to the express company by the contract. Pittsburgh C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mahoney (Ind.) 101

2. A release by an employee of an express company, of all liability for injuries sustained by negligence of the employer "or otherwise," includes the liability of the express company to hold a railroad with which it does business harmless against claims by the express company's employees for injuries, and precludes an action against the railroad company for causing his death by suddenly closing the opening between parts of a train while he was passing between them. Id.

Assumption of risks.

3. An employee assumes the risk of his employer's methods which are known to and acquiesced in by him, if they do not violate any statute. Huda v. American Glucose Co. (N. Y.) 411

4. An assumption of risks, by express contract of a local employee of an express company, includes the risk of injuries by cars of a railroad company with which the express company does business. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mahoney (Ind.) 101

5. A servant may rely on the promise of his master to repair defects in the place where the labor is to be performed, only so long as is reasonably necessary to make the repairs; and if he continues in his employment after the 40 L. R. A.

lapse of such time he will be considered to have waived the defects and to have assumed the additional risk. Illinois Steel Co. v. Malt (Ill.) 781

Mine boss.

6. A mine boss employed according to the provisions of W. Va. Code 1891, Append. p. 995, § 11, is such a fellow-servant of workmen in the mine that in case of injury to them through his negligence the master is not responsible. Williams v. Thacker Coal & C. Co. (W. Va.) 813

7. The employment of a competent mine boss, as required by W. Va. Code 1891, Append. p. 995, § 11, discharges the duty prescribed by statute, and the employer is not liable for the negligence of such mine boss. Id.

Independent contractor.

8. That an independent contractor is in charge of an entertainment at grounds provided by a street-car company for free entertainment of patrons will not entirely relieve the company from liability for injuries to patrons, if the entertainment is of such a character that it will probably cause injury to spectators unless due precautions are taken to guard against them. Thompson v. Lowell I. & H. Street R. Co. (Mass.) 345

9. The arrangement of the stage and target at which an exhibition of marksmanship is given by an independent contractor to street-car patrons upon grounds of the street-car company is not, as matter of law, so much a matter of detail that the company will not be liable in case it is so negligently arranged that a patron is injured by a shattered bullet. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Master and servant; liability for employing drunkard. 146

Liability for servant's act. 453

Liability for acts of contractor. 346

Duty to keep premises safe for servant. 813

Negligence as to place of work; as to fire escapes. 411

The rights of a servant who continues work on the faith of his master's promise to remove a specific cause of danger:—(I.) Introductory. (II.) general rule stated; (III.) rationale of the relation between the parties after the giving of the promise; (IV.) continuance of work after promise not contributory negligence as matter of law: (a) generally; (b) contributory negligence predicated from the gravity of the risk incurred; (c) contributory negligence predicated from the length of time the servant has worked after the promise was given; (d) illustrative cases; (V.) servant's action not maintainable unless his continuance of work was actually induced by the master's promise to protect him from some danger, etc.; (VI.) whose promise is binding on an employer; (VII.) rule where the promise relates to simple appliances; (VIII.) obligations of the servant pending the fulfillment of the promise. 78.

MAXIMS.

1. Damnum absque injuria. Kinney v. Kinney (Iowa) 628

2. Equity always regards as done what ought to have been done. Re Hatch (N. Y.) 664

3. Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. People, Mooney, v. Hutchinson (Ill.) 770

4. Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. Morrison v. Bennett (Mont.) 158

5. Mobilia sequuntur personam. Loundes v. Cooch (Md.) 380

6. Nemo allegans turpitudinem suam est audiendus. Cardwell v. Kelly (Va.) 240

7. Omnia præsumentur contra spoliato rem. Western & A. R. Co. v. Morrison (Ga.) 84

8. Potior est conditio possidentis. Morrison v. Bennett (Mont.) 158

9. Res ipsa loquitur. Nichols v. Peck (Conn.) 81; Perham v. Portland General Elec. Co. (Or.) 799

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Nemo allegans turpitudinem suam est audiendus. 240

Which of two innocent persons must suffer loss. 82

MEDICAL BOOKS. See also COURTS, 1; EVIDENCE, 26-28.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Medical books; as evidence. 558

MINES. See also CLOUD ON TITLE, 3-5; MASTER AND SERVANT, 6.

1. A grant of "the sole right to produce petroleum and natural gas" from certain land for ninety days from date, and as much longer as oil or gas is found and produced in paying quantities, containing a covenant for the completion of an additional well within ninety days, is not a lease, but a grant of a right, which expires by its own limitation at the end of ninety days if the conditions of its extension are not complied with. Dettor v. Holland (Ohio) 266

2. Petroleum oil and natural gas are not included in a deed of "all the iron ore, fire clay, and other valuable minerals" in certain premises, with the right to use so much of the surface of the land as may be necessary "for pits, shafts, platforms, drains, railroads, switches, side-tracks, etc., to facilitate the mining and removal of such coal, ore, or other minerals, and no more, as the words "other minerals," although broad enough to include oil and gas, were not apparently intended to include them. Id.

MOB. See also BONDS, 4; SHERIFF.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mob; liability of sheriff for acts of. 628

MONEY. See also JUDICIAL SALE, 4.

1. The right to contract for payment in gold coin of the United States cannot be taken away by a state statute which attempts to make any debt payable in any kind of lawful money. Dennis v. Moses (Wash.) 302

2. The rules of the Treasury Department 40 L. R. A.

of the United States in regard to the redemption of mutilated notes relate simply to redemption, and do not make a mutilated bill legal tender. North Hudson County R. Co. v. Anderson (N. J. Err. & App.) 410

3. A dollar bill from the upper left-hand corner of which a piece an inch and a half by an inch and a quarter has been torn is not a legal tender for car fare, since the conductor is not bound to accept a bill substantially mutilated, or from which any part which might aid in determining its genuineness is absent. Id.

MORTGAGE. See also CASE, 2; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10; LIENS, 2; TRUSTS, 8.

1. Each of several notes secured by a deed of trust is to be considered as a separate and complete contract within itself, uncontrolled in its terms by anything contained in the deed of trust. Oving v. McKenzie (Mo.) 154

2. The mere nonpayment of the first of two notes, secured by deed of trust, without any action on the part of holders, will not render the other note due, although the deed of trust provided that upon default in payment of the first note both should become immediately due and payable. Id.

Assumption of debt.

3. A mortgagee who sues a purchaser from the mortgagor for a portion of the mortgage debt, which such purchaser has assumed to pay, does not thereby adopt the covenants of warranty in the mortgagor's deed except as against the part of the indebtedness assumed and sued for, so as to prevent foreclosure of the mortgage against such purchaser for the balance of the debt. Knapp v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 861

4. The right of a mortgagee to enforce the payment of a mortgage debt as against the grantee of the mortgagor, who has assumed its payment, does not rest upon any contract between the mortgagee and grantee which is enforceable by the mortgagee by a suit at law, but is founded upon the fact that the grantee has become primarily liable to pay the debt while the mortgagor is surety for its payment, so that the mortgagee may be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagor, and may, by a suit in equity, compel the grantee to keep his engagement. Id.

Foreclosure.

5. Sales on mortgage foreclosures are within the provisions of Wash. Laws 1897, p. 98, respecting appraisement before sale. Dennis v. Moses (Wash.) 302

6. The appraisement required before sale on foreclosure by Wash. Laws 1897, p. 70, cannot be waived in the mortgage itself, although it may be waived after default. Id.

7. Not more than the amount of a debt of a mortgagee or lienor need be bid upon all the parcels of property when several are included in the security, under Wash. Laws, 1897, p. 70, and he may segregate his debt and bid a part on each parcel sold. Id.

8. A mortgagee or lienor may have a sale for the amount of his debt, under Wash. Laws 1897, p. 70, § 10, even if that is less than 80 per cent of the value of the property or portion of the property sold. Id.

9. Waiver of the right of a mortgagor to remain in possession of property during the period of redemption given by Wash. Laws 1897, p. 227, cannot be made in the instrument itself, although it may be made after default. Id.

10. Objection to the application of the proceeds of a sale under a deed of trust securing two notes, in satisfaction of the first, cannot be made by mesne conveyancers who by purchase and sale of the property acquire the position of sureties on the note, because their liability had been released by an extension of the time of payment without their consent. Owings v. McKenzie (Mo.) 154

On chattels.

11. The title to mortgaged chattels remains in the mortgagor under the Nebraska statute until foreclosure of the mortgage. Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills (Neb.) 781

12. A married man may without his wife's consent select the cows which he will claim as exempt in giving a chattel mortgage on certain cows, under 2 How. (Mich.) Ann. Stat. § 7686, providing that two cows shall be exempt to each householder from any final process and that any chattel mortgage created on any part of such exempt property shall be void unless the mortgage is signed by the wife of the mortgagor. Harley v. Procuier (Mich.) 150

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mortgage; on chattels; exemption for benefit of family. 150

Assumption of, by vendee. 863

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. See also AWNINGS, 2; ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES; ESTOPPEL, 3; INJUNCTION, 3, 4; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; LICENSE, 2; NEGLIGENCE, 1; TRIAL, 4.

1. A city cannot accept a grant from another state to operate a toll road beyond its limits and the limits of its own state or be held liable for defects in such road if operated by it, when it is not authorized to do so by the laws of its own state, although the toll road is made to connect with a city toll bridge that the city has constructed under lawful authority. Becker v. La Crosse (Wis.) 829

2. A debt for the purchase of an electric-light plant for a municipal corporation is not one of the "necessary expenses" of the town, within the meaning of N. C. Const. art. 7, § 7, so that it can be created without a vote of the majority of the qualified voters and legislative authority. Mayo v. Washington (N. C.) 163

3. Discrimination between citizens can not be made by a city with respect to the erection of awnings as permanent structures. Hibbard v. Chicago (Ill.) 621

4. A mere resolution or order by the city counsel, not passed and published as an ordinance of the city, will not constitute a repeal of an ordinance. Id.

40 L. R. A.

5. A proceeding by a municipal corporation to enforce such fines and penalties as are ordinarily and by usage enforced by municipalities is not a prosecution or criminal in its nature, but only quasi criminal, whatever may be the form of the procedure. Ex parte Fagg (Tex. Crim. App.) 212

6. It cannot be made by ordinance an offense against a city to do what a statute makes an offense against the state, triable only in a court of record (e. g., the keeping or exhibiting of a gaming table or bank), where the constitution of the state provides that all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the state and shall conclude against the peace and dignity of the state. Id.

Liabilities.

7. A city is not liable, in the absence of any statutory provision, for an injury to a private barge caused by the failure of a bridge tender seasonably to open a draw in the bridge in response to proper signals, because of the bridge becoming caught, where the city does not derive any benefit from the bridge, but simply maintains it for the public good. Corning v. Saginaw (Mich.) 526

8. A person injured by the explosion of a cannon cracker on a city street on the Fourth of July in violation of an ordinance, while persons assembled there are exploding fire-crackers without any common purpose to injure anyone, cannot recover from the city for the damages, under Sanb. & B. (Wis.) Ann. Stat. § 938, making a city liable for injury done by a mob or a riot, and under Wis. Rev. Stat. § 4511, providing that three or more persons shall be guilty of a riot if they assemble in a violent or tumultuous manner to do an unlawful act, or, being together, attempt to act in a violent, unlawful, or tumultuous manner. Aron v. Wausau (Wis.) 733

9. The liability of a city for a pond of water on private property and not in dangerous proximity to a public street or alley is no greater than that of a private owner of property similarly situated, even though the city may have created the pond. Omaha v. Bowman (Neb.) 331

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INJUNCTION.

Municipal corporations; necessary expenses of, what are. 163

Liability for bridges. 526

Liability for dangerous premises. 531

Liability for riot. 733

Duty as to electric wires in streets. 811

Liability of, for negligence. 829

MUTES. See NEGLIGENCE, 6.

NAME. See ASSIGNMENT, 1; CORPORATIONS, 4; GOODWILL, 2; INJUNCTION, 1.

NATURAL GAS. See MINES.

NEGLIGENCE. See also ANIMALS, 5; CARRIERS, 1-3, 6; CONVICTS, 1; DAMAGES, 3; ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES; ESTOPPEL, 2; EVIDENCE, 12, 14, 16; EXHIBITIONS, 2; FIRE; HIGHWAYS, 5; LANDLORD AND TENANT: PROXIMATE CAUSE; RAILROADS, 8, 9; TRIAL, 3, 4, 6, 9, 10; TRUSTS, 7.

1. The liability of a city to the owner of premises for causing the overflow of water and the formation of a pond thereon does not make the city liable to third persons for the drowning of a child in the pond, where it was not in dangerous proximity to a street, and especially when the child did not go to the pond from a street. Omaha v. Bowman (Neb.) 581

2. Leaving a platform car with no machinery about it or any brake on a side track of a street railway in such condition that it may be moved by the united strength of several children, is not negligence which will render the company liable for an injury to a child playing with it. Kaumeier v. City Elec. R. Co. (Mich.) 385

3. A shipper of lumber is not liable for injury to a railroad brakeman while coupling cars, by the shunting of the lumber, because it was negligently loaded, where the accident happened after it had become the duty of the railroad company to provide for inspection of the car. Fowles v. Briggs (Mich.) 528

Contributory.

4. When both parties are negligent the true rule is that the one who last had a clear opportunity to avoid the accident notwithstanding the negligence of the other is solely responsible for it. Thompson v. Salt Lake Rapid Transit Co. (Utah) 172

5. Contributory negligence will not defeat a right of action if the injury was proximately caused by the omission of the other party to use ordinary care for avoiding the injury after becoming aware of the plaintiff's danger. Id.

6. A deaf and dumb boy fourteen years old, with average intelligence and good eyesight, is chargeable with contributory negligence in failing to look for an electric car when crossing its track. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Negligence; intoxication as affecting:—(I.) Intoxication no excuse; (II.) when it amounts to contributory negligence; (a) generally; (b) with relation to trespassers; (c) with relation to persons injured at crossings; (d) with relation to passengers; (e) with relation to persons injured on highways, streets, etc.; (f) with relation to miscellaneous matters; (III.) effect when there is negligence on both sides; (IV.) question for the jury; (V.) presumption and burden of proof; (VI.) intoxication as evidence of negligence: (a) admissibility; (b) weight and sufficiency; (VII.) employment of persons having habits of intoxication. 181

Of deaf and dumb person or infant. 174

Leaving street car where children may be injured by it. 885

Concurrent, of third person. 804

40 L. R. A.

NEW TRIAL. See EJECTMENT, 3, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

NOTICE. See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 1.

A notice addressed to four joint owners of a grant of the right to produce oil and gas, to the effect that the grant has expired and they must keep off the premises, is binding on them all when served upon one of them. Detlor v. Holland (Ohio) 266

NUISANCES. See also AWNINGS, 1; HOSPITALS, 2.

1. The right to maintain a public nuisance cannot be gained by prescription. North Point Consol. Irrig. Co. v. Utah & S. L. Canal Co. (Utah) 851

2. A prescriptive right to maintain a private nuisance must be adverse, under a claim of right, uninterrupted, and continuous for twenty years, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the party whose right is invaded. Id.

3. The mixing of impure water with water used for irrigation and domestic purposes, rendering it unfit for such use, creates a nuisance under Utah Comp. Laws, § 3463. Id.

4. The befouling of the waters of a canal from which a number of persons (more than three) obtain water for irrigation, culinary, and other domestic purposes, so that it is unfit for use, creates a public nuisance under Utah Comp. Laws 1888, § 4566. Id.

5. Persons who locate near a pest house which was not a nuisance when established because it was a secluded locality are not deprived of redress if they are injured by it, merely because they have voluntarily chosen to reside in close proximity to it, unless the right to maintain it has ripened by prescription into an indefeasible right. Baltimore v. Fairfield Improv. Co. (Md.) 494

6. A digester in a pulp mill, which is not dangerous unless it is used, does not constitute a nuisance which will render the owner liable for injuries resulting to employees of a lessee by its explosion. Whitmore v. Orono Pulp & P. Co. (Me.) 877

OCCUPATION TAX. See LICENSE.

OFFICERS. See ASSUMPSIT; BONDS, 3, 4; REWARD.

OIL. See CLOUD ON TITLE, 8-5; MINES.

OPTION. See SYNDICATE, 4.

ORANGE TREES. See CARRIERS, 12.

ORDINANCE. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 4, 6.

PARENT AND CHILD. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 10-14.

PARKS. See also INJUNCTION, 6.

The erection of a schoolhouse upon a lot dedicated "only for public use as an ornamental park" is a wrongful use of the property. Rowzee v. Pierce (Miss.) 402

PARTIES. See ACTION OR SUIT, 5, 6; APPEAL AND ERROR, 2.

PARTNERSHIP. See also BILLS AND NOTES, 8; CARRIERS, 14; GOODWILL, 1; SYNDICATES, 2.

1. Partnership property may be conveyed to pay notes signed by the individual partners, and not in the firm name. Victor v. Glover (Wash.) 297

2. Subsequent creditors of an insolvent firm cannot complain that a note was given by the continuing partners to a withdrawing member for his alleged share in the assets of the firm. Id.

3. The only ground on which unpreferred creditors of a partnership can complain of a deed of trust made by it for benefit of creditors is that the claims of preferred creditors are not bona fide and real. Id.

4. A syndicate agreement which merely provides for raising money to purchase certain lands at a given price, without any provisions for selling the lands and dividing the profits, does not constitute a partnership agreement. Ferguson v. Gooch (Va.) 234

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also SYNDICATES.

Partnership; transfer of property to pay debts; relative rights of creditors. 298

PASSWORD. See INJUNCTION, 2.

PAYABLE. See DEFINITIONS.

PAYMENT. Medium of, see BILLS AND NOTES, 6.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Payment; option as to medium of; in something other than money. 74

PEDDLERS. See INNKEEPERS, 2.

PEDIGREE. See EVIDENCE, 37.

PENALTIES. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.

PERPETUITIES. See CHARITIES, 1.

PEST HOUSE. See HOSPITALS; INJUNCTION, 11; NUISANCES, 5.

PETROLEUM. See MINES.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATION. See DISCOVERY.

PIERS. See WHARVES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

PLAT.

The indication of a block upon a plat between a highway and a lake must give way if, when the highway is located, no land is left between it and the lake shore. Madison v. Mayers (Wis.) 635
40 L. R. A.

PLEADING. See also CASES CERTIFIED: EVIDENCE, 43.

1. A declaration is bad for duplicity when it states in one count a good cause of action for interference with real property and one for injury to reputation, as to which it is demurrable. Gore v. Condon (Md.) 332

2. An allegation that a person pays dues to a lodge, and that lodge pays to a grand lodge, and that both bodies are chartered benevolent societies, does not sufficiently allege that they have any rights of property in the grand lodge. Wellenross v. Grand Lodge K. of P. (Ky.) 43

3. Future pain and anguish cannot be considered in assessing damages under a pleading which alleges pain and injury in the past tense only. Shultz v. Griffith (Iowa) 117

4. Other allegations in a petition for divorce may be treated as surplusage and the action sustained as one for the maintenance of a child, when the parties have been previously divorced. Gibson v. Gibson (Wash.) 567

5. An allegation that the plaintiff could have made arrangements to get water for his cattle if a telegram had been delivered to him promptly, without alleging where and in what manner he could have done so, is insufficient as against a special exception in an action for damages because of failure to deliver a telegram. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mitchell (Tex.) 20

6. A complaint alleging an implied liability of a bishop of the Roman Catholic Church to a priest under the rules and regulations of the church, without alleging any express agreement to that effect, or anything to show the nature of the church or its civil rights, power, or capacity, or whether it is a corporation, a voluntary association, or a mere name adopted by the pleader for some purpose undisclosed, —does not state a cause of action. Baxter v. McDonnell (N. Y.) 679

Demurrer.

7. A demurrer admits issuable facts alleged in the complaint, and not mere conclusions of law from such facts. Aron v. Wausau (Wis.) 733

8. A demurrer to a declaration does not admit impossible or improbable allegations of fact, so as to prevent the court from passing upon the allegations, which in their nature are contrary to human experience and common knowledge, as matter of law, and to compel the submission thereof to a jury. Southern R. Co. v. Covenia (Ga.) 253

9. Allegations that a child one year, eight months, and ten days of age was capable of rendering services, and did render certain specified services of the value of $2 per month, are not admitted by demurrer. Id.

10. An answer is not demurrable when the complaint is defective. Baxter v. McDonnell (N. Y.) 679

11. A complaint giving the whole history of a shipment of goods, deviation from the proper route, and the damage resulting thereby, is not insufficient to state a cause of action as against a general demurrer, even if it might be subject to a demurrer on the ground of ambiguity or uncertainty. Pierce v. Southern P. R. Co. (Cal.) 850

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Pleading of negligence. 102
Statement of facts or evidence thereof. 209
Complaint in action for death. 808

POLICE. See ARREST.

PONDS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 9; NEGLIGENCE, 1.

POSSE COMITATUS. See also COUNTIES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Posse comitatus; compensation to. 406

POWER OF ATTORNEY. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, 2, 8.

PRESCRIPTION. See NUISANCES, 1, 2.

PRIESTS. See RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. See also BILLS AND NOTES, 7; SYNDICATES, 8, 5.

1. A principal is bound by and responsible for the representations and concealments made by an agent in the line and within the scope of his employment. Baltimore Trust & C. Co. v. Hambleton (Md.) 216

2. A strict construction will not be placed upon a power of attorney to convey an interest in land after the lapse of many years, the effect of which would be to oppose the clear intent of the parties and divest titles acquired in good faith under it. Gratz v. Land & R. Improv. Co. (C. C. App. 7th C.) 898

3. A recorded power of attorney to convey land is not revoked by an unrecorded conveyance of the land by the principal, so as to defeat titles subsequently acquired in good faith from the attorney. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Agent acting for both parties. 824

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Extension for a valuable consideration, without consent of the sureties, of the first of two promissory notes secured by deed of trust, will not release the liability of the sureties upon the other note, which is not then due by its terms, although the deed of trust provided that upon default in payment of the first note at maturity the other should immediately become due and payable. Owings v. McKenzie (Mo.) 154

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Release of surety by extension of time. 154

PRIVILEGE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 7.

PROHIBITION.

Prohibition may be issued to prevent a board of school directors from trying charges against a school superintendent, when one of 40 L. R. A.

the directors is disqualified by enmity and prejudgment of the case, while there is no appeal from the decision of the board. State, Barnard, v. Seattle Bd. of Edu. (Wash.) 317

PROMOTERS. See CORPORATIONS, 9, 10; SYNDICATES, 2.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

1. Failure to keep a convict properly confined is not the efficient or proximate cause of damages caused by his committing the crime of rape, unless that could have been reasonably apprehended. Henderson v. Dade Coal Co. (Ga.) 95

2. Negligence in using an electric car with defective brakes and appliances which prevented stopping it in time to avoid the effect of the contributory negligence of a person injured is the proximate cause of the injury. Thompson v. Salt Lake Rapid Transit Co. (Utah) 172

3. The duty of a railroad company to provide for the inspection of a car of lumber negligently loaded constitutes the intervention of an independent human agency between the negligence of the shipper and an injury to a railroad brakeman caused thereby. Fowles v. Briggs (Mich.) 528

4. The negligence of a guardian in leaving certificates of stock indorsed with her signature in a bank for safe keeping is not the proximate cause of the advance of money upon them to a cashier of the bank who feloniously takes them, since this criminal conduct could not reasonably be anticipated. O'Herron v. Gray (Mass.) 498

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Proximate cause, what constitutes. 95

As to damage by fire. 459

PUBLICATION.

1. The English language must be used in all legal and official notifications or proceedings, in the absence of any statute authority to the contrary. State, Goebel, v. Chamberlain (Wis.) 843

2. Publication of a delinquent tax list in the English language, but in a newspaper which is otherwise printed in the German language, is not a legal publication, when no authority therefor has been given, in accordance with Wis. Rev. Stat. § 875, by the county board. Id.

PUBLIC CORPORATION. See STATE INSTITUTIONS.

PUBLIC MONEY. See also BONDS, 8.

1. The maintenance of a state university established by the state Constitution is a public purpose. State, Garth, v. Swoitzer (Mo.) 280

2. The maintenance of free scholarships in a state university, for the support of those students who are dependent upon their own exertions for their education and financially unable to obtain it otherwise, who shall pass the most meritorious examinations, is the use of funds for a private purpose, and a statute appropriating public moneys therefor is in violation of Mo. Const. art. 4, § 46, prohibiting grants in aid of any individual. Id.

PUBLIC POLICY. See ATTORNEYS' FEES; CONTRACTS, 5.

PULP MILL. See NUISANCES, 6.

PURPRESTURE. See AWNINGS, 1.

QUARANTINE. See HOSPITALS, 2.

RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS. See CARRIERS, 15; EVIDENCE, 17-19; RAILROADS.

RAILROADS. See also CORPORATIONS, 8; EASEMENTS, 2; EVIDENCE, 14-16, 40; MASTER AND SERVANT, 1, 2, 4; TRIAL, 9, 10.

1. Land covered by a highway may be occupied by the railroad commissioners for the construction of a bridge to abolish a grade crossing, if necessary to abate a nuisance. Bristol v. New England R. Co. (Conn.) 479.

2. Directing abutments to be placed on street lines, in an order of the state railroad commission for the abolition of a grade crossing, does not preclude the placing of other abutments in the street by reference to a map showing them so located. Id.

3. An order by the state railroad commission requiring the abolition of a grade crossing, which refers to a plan of the work showing abutments in the highway, is a defense to a suit by the municipality to enjoin the railroad company from placing the abutments in the highway. Id.

4. A map of a proposed abutment in a highway to support an overhead railroad is sufficient if it contains such reference to monuments in the vicinity of its site that a competent surveyor can ascertain the points at which to set stakes. Id.

5. An order of the railroad commission directing the abolition of a grade crossing sufficiently describes the abutments to be erected in the highway, if it refers to a map upon which they are delineated. Id.

6. A sufficient appropriation of a portion of a highway for the abutment of a bridge for the abolition of a grade crossing is made by an order of the railroad commissioners directing it to be made and referring to a map showing the abutment in the highway, without formally condemning or discontinuing the portion of the highway covered. Id.

Injury by trains.

7. Failure to fence a railroad does not render the railroad company liable for horses killed by a train just after a fire had swept everything combustible on both sides of the railroad, so that the fence, if built, would have been burned, when the statute makes the company liable for all damage to animals "occasioned in any manner, in whole or in part, by the want of such fence." Cook v. Minneapolis, St. Paul & S. Ste. M. R. Co. (Wis.) 457

40 L. R. A.

8. Sitting or lying on a railroad track when struck by a train at night between 12 o'clock and daylight constitutes contributory negligence, as matter of law. Parish v. Western & A. R. Co. (Ga.) 364

9. Blowing a locomotive whistle loudly several times under a bridge which is a much traveled public thoroughfare, over which vehicles of all kinds are constantly passing, is, in the absence of some special necessity therefor, an unnatural and reckless act creating a liability for resulting damages. Mitchell v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (Tenn.) 426

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Railroads; negligence of person on track. 364

Duty as to trespasser on track. 680

Negligence of person struck by train. 747

RAPE. See CONVICTS; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 1.

REAL ACTIONS. See EJECTMENT. NOTES AND BRIEFS.

REAL PROPERTY. See ALIENS; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, 3; WATERS, 1.

RECEIVERS. See ACTION OR SUIT, 4.

RECORDS. See EVIDENCE, 23.

REFORMATORY. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3.

RELEASE. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 2.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES. See also EVIDENCE, 2; PLEADING, 6; TRUSTS, 5, 6.

1. The decision of an ecclesiastical tribunal concerning the rights, duties, and obligations of a priest or minister of the church who has submitted the controversy to it for decision, is a bar to a subsequent action by him in a civil court. Baxter v. McDonnell (N. Y.) 670

2. A bishop is not the employer of a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, although he has power to assign priests to duty, and is not personally liable under the laws of the church, in the absence of any express promise, to pay the priest for his services to the church. Id.

3. A bishop of the Roman Catholic Church cannot be held liable on the contracts of his predecessor, in the absence of an express agreement. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Religious societies; conclusiveness of decisions of tribunals of. 670

REPLEVIN.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

For dogs. 507

REPUTATION. See CASE, 3.

RESOLUTION. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 4.

RESUME.

For Resumé of Contents of Book see 865

REWARD. See also ARREST.

1. It is against sound public policy to allow an officer to receive a reward for the performance of his duty. Lees v. Colgan (Cal.) 355

2. The offer of a reward for the arrest of a murderer, by Cal. Pen. Code, § 1547, does not extend to an arrest by an officer whose duty it is to make it. Id.

RIOT. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 8.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS. See WATERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SALE.

1. The delivery of property by a vendor, under a contract which is silent as to the place of delivery, to a carrier for transportation, consigned to the vendee, divests the vendor's title, and the title of the purchaser attaches from the moment of such delivery, the carrier being in contemplation of law the bailee of the consignee. A. J. Neimeyer Lumber Co. v. Burlington & M. R. Co. (Neb.) 534

2. The vendor's title to property under a contract expressly providing that delivery shall be made at a certain place is not divested until delivery is so made. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sale; transfer of title by delivery to carrier. 535

SCHOLARSHIP. See PUBLIC MONEY, 2; STATUTES, 3.

SCHOOLS. See also PARKS; PROHIBITION; TAXES, 3, 4.

A school director is disqualified to sit as a member of the board to try charges of misconduct of a school superintendent, when he has a personal enmity toward him, and has been a prime mover in the prosecution of the charges, and has declared that he should vote for his conviction, while there is no appeal from the decision of the board. State, Barnard, v. Seattle Bd. of Edu. (Wash.) 317

SCIENTIFIC BOOKS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As evidence. 553

SERVICE. See NOTICE.

SET-OFF.

1. Only one of mutual debts or claims need be due at the time of an assignment for creditors by one of the parties, in order to give the right of set-off in equity. Re Hatch (N. Y.) 664

2. A claim which was due when the debtor made an assignment for creditors can be set off against a claim in favor of the assignee against the creditor for a share of the 40 L. R. A.

proceeds of collections made after the assignment on judgments which the assignor, before the assignment, had transferred to the creditor under a contract for a division of the proceeds. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Set-off; of claim by or against insolvent. 664

SHERIFF. See also BONDS, 4.

1. The negligent failure of a sheriff to protect a prisoner from a mob will not make him liable to a civil action on account of the injuries done to the prisoner by the mob. State, Cocking, v. Wade (Md.) 623

2. The failure of a sheriff to resist a mob that takes a prisoner from a jail, if caused bona fide by the fact that he was physically unable to cope with the force confronting him, does not make him liable for the consequences, in a civil action. Id.

SHERIFF'S POSSE. See COUNTIES.

SHOWS. See EXHIBITIONS.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. A contract will not be specifically enforced unless it has such mutuality that it may be enforced by either party. Welty v. Jacobs (Ill.) 93

2. Particular stipulations of a contract will not be specifically enforced apart from the rest of the contract, where they do not clearly stand by themselves, unaffected by other provisions. Id.

3. Specific performance will not be granted in favor of a person who knew when the contract was made that the other party had no authority to dispose of the property which it assumed to dispose of. Sellers v. Greer (Ill.) 589

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Specific performance; of contract known to be unauthorized. 589

STATE. See ACTION OR SUIT, 5; ESTOPPEL, 4.

STATE INSTITUTIONS.

An agricultural and mechanical college, which is strictly a public or quasi corporation, created and existing under and by virtue of a statute, cannot be sued in the absence of express statutory authority therefor. Oklahoma Agricultural & M. College v. Willis (Okla.) 677

STATE UNIVERSITY. See PUBLIC MONEY; STATUTES, 3.

STATUTE OF LIMITATION. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 1.

STATUTES. See also COURTS, 2; EVIDENCE, 23, 25; FOOD.

1. The invalidity of one section of a statute which is in material relation to other portions of the act so as to modify, restrict, or extend its application, will cause the failure of the other portions also. State, Cheyenne, v. Swan (Wyo.) 195

2. If the amendments proposed by the conference committee and adopted by both houses of a legislature were copied in full upon the journals, an enrolled bill which does not contain them cannot be presumed to have been the one actually passed, although the amendments were not required by law to be spread at length upon the journal. Id.

3. Provisions for the creation of a "free scholarship fund," in a statute which provides for using three fourths of the annual income for the support of students who get the scholarships, cannot be sustained when the provision for such use of the income is unconstitutional. State, Garth, v. Switzer (Mo.) 280

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statutes; strict construction. 611

Impeaching by legislative journals. 195

STENOGRAPHER. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 9, 10.

STREET RAILWAYS. See also ANIMALS, 2; EXHIBITIONS; MASTER AND SERVANT, 9; NEGLIGENCE, 2, 6; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 2; TRIAL, 5.

1. The use of an electric car with brakes so defective that they do not work well, and with a motor so defective that the motorman receives a shock which delays him while trying to stop the car to avoid an accident, constitutes negligence. Thompson v. Salt Lake Rapid Transit Co. (Utah) 172

2. The degree of care to be used in operating an electric car in a public street is proportionate to the increased danger arising from the use of electricity. Id.

3. A dog is not a trespasser on a street car track which is laid in the highway on the same level with it. Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. Dew (Tenn.) 518

4. A motorman cannot rely upon the quickness and celerity of a dog to absolve himself from all duty and care to prevent running over him with an electric car. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Negligence of person killed by street car; of infant. 174

SUCCESSION TAX. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4; TAXES, 5-7.

SUPERSEDEAS. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 4.

SWITCH. See CARRIERS, 15-17; CORPORATIONS, 3.

SYNDICATES. See also CUSTOM, 2; PARTNERSHIP, 4.

1. A syndicate is an association of individuals formed for the purpose of conducting and carrying out some particular business transaction, ordinarily of a financial character, in which the members are mutually interested. Baltimore Trust & G. Co. v. Hambleton (Md.) 216

2. It is the plain and imperative duty of promoters of a syndicate towards persons who are invited to co-operate in the enterprise, not only to abstain from stating as a fact that which is not a fact, but not to omit to state any circumstances within their knowledge the existence of which might in any way affect the extent or quality of the advantages held out as inducements to the others. Id.

3. One who pays commissions to a member of a syndicate who acted as his agent in forming it, under a secret agreement giving him an advantage over the other members, is liable to the syndicate as for misapplication of its funds, especially when it was part of a fund held in trust for syndicate expenses, in which such member declared to his associates that he had no interest. Id.

4. An additional subscription for a block of bonds by a second syndicate composed in part of members of the first syndicate, which bought bonds with an option for an additional purchase with "the same rights and privileges" provided with reference to the former, is subject to the same provision as to a commission provided for in the original agreement. Id.

5. A purchase of lands by real-estate agents on behalf of a syndicate of which they are members, when the agents are also secretly acting as agents of the vendor, cannot be enforced against the other members of the syndicate. Ferguson v. Gooch (Va.) 234

6. A selection of a trustee to take title to property purchased for a syndicate and to give a deed of trust thereon for a part of the purchase price is not within the implied authority of real-estate agents who are members of and who formed the syndicate. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Syndicates: relations and rights of syndicate members:—(I.) Scope and nature of the subject; (II.) rights and powers of members; (III.) rights, duties, and liabilities in transactions between themselves: (a) general rule as to good faith required; (b) sales by member to association; (c) purchases with secret advantages; (d) dealings between associations having common members; (e) contribution to capital; expenses, and losses; (f) interest in property of association; (g) compensation for services; (IV.) remedies. 216

TAXES. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4; PUBLICATION, 2.

1. The requirement of uniformity in respect to both persons and property, in Ill. Const. 1870, art. 9, § 9, applies only to taxes collected by assessments upon assessable property. Banta v. Chicago (Ill.) 611

2. Taxes for the benefit of private individuals are within the direct prohibition of Mo. Const. art. 10, § 8. State, Garth, v. Switzer (Mo.) 280

Exemptions.

3. An exemption of an educational institution from taxation will include property held by it for rent, the income of which is used for the work of the institution, unless there are qualifying words which show or tend to show that only property used by the institution or connected with it is to be exempted. Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Louisville (Ky.) 119

4. A school for the free education of female orphan children is a charitable institution and an educational institution not used or employed for gain, within the meaning of a constitutional provision exempting such institutions from taxation, although it is under the control of a particular religious denomination and receives day pupils who are required to pay for their tuition if able to do so, the money received being used in carrying on the work of the institution. Id.

On inheritances.

5. A succession tax is an excise or duty upon the right of a person or corporation to receive property by devise or inheritance from another under the regulation of the state. State, Garth, v. Switzler (Mo.) 280

6. A succession tax which is levied at different rates on legacies of different amounts, although made to persons of the same class, is in violation of the rule of uniformity prescribed by Mo. Const. art. 10, § 8. Id.

7. The tax to be levied upon the appraised value of the whole estate left by a deceased person, except such part as is exempt under the Missouri act of 1897, amending the act of 1895, by adding § "1a," is a tax upon the property of the deceased, and not upon the devisees and legatees, and is therefore unconstitutional because it is not levied in proportion to the value of the property, as required by Mo. Const. art. 10, § 4. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Taxes; exemption of educational institutions. 119

On successions; constitutionality of. 280

TELEGRAPHS. See also LIBEL AND SLANDER, 2; PLEADING, 5; TRIAL, 6.

The delivery of a telegram to the wife of the addressee, when he is absent from the town, is not, as matter of law, necessary or sufficient to satisfy the obligation of the telegraph company, but its duty in this respect is a question of fact under the circumstances of the case. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mitchell (Tex.) 209

TELEPHONES. See also EMINENT DOMAIN, 1; TRIAL, 4.

A telephone system may be owned and conducted by an individual without legislative assent, unless there have been some legislative restrictions upon such right. Magee v. Overshiner (Ind.) 370

TENANTS IN COMMON. See COTENANCY.

THEATRE. See INJUNCTION, 7.

TITHES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Of bees. 689

TOLLS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 1. 40 L. R. A.

TORT. See CONVICTS, 1.

TOWN. See INJUNCTION, 5.

TRADE NAME.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Transfer of right to; protection of. 632

TREASURER. See BONDS, §.

TREES. See CARRIERS, 12.

TRESPASS. See also ANIMALS, 6.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trespass; for injury to dogs. 507

For taking bees. 688

TRIAL. See also CRIMINAL LAW, 8; ELISOR.

1. Separation of the jurors during the trial of a murder case may be permitted by the trial court in its discretion. People v. Ebanks (Cal.) 269

2. A member of a grand jury impaneled before the trial of a murder case, but which had adjourned to meet in the future, is not incompetent to act as a juror in the trial, which is upon an information and has never been brought to the attention of the grand jury. Id.

Questions for jury.

3. The exercise of due care and prudence to prevent injury by dangerous electric wires is a question for the jury. Perham v. Portland General Elec. Co. (Or.) 799

4. Negligence of a city, causing the death of a person by contact with an abandoned telephone wire, is a question for the jury, where the wire had been unused for several months, crossing a charged electric light wire in close proximity thereto, and, after sagging so as to interfere with public travel, was cut by a member of the borough council, and wrapped around a post within easy distance of pedestrians, and with one end resting on the ground or in the water. Mooney v. Luzerne (Pa.) 811

5. Negligence of a street-railway company in operating an electric car with only one employee who does duty both as motorman and conductor on a line laid on a turnpike at grade where persons, horses, and vehicles are constantly passing, is a question for the jury. Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. Dev (Tenn.) 518

6. Whether a telegraph messenger who fails to deliver the message at the residence or place of business of the addressee has used ordinary diligence such as the law requires is a question of fact for the jury. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mitchell (Tex.) 209

Instructions.

7. Requested instructions which have been fully covered by the general charge need not be given. Western Assur. Co. v. J. H. Mohlman Co. (C. C. App. 2d C.) 561

8. An instruction against allowing exemplary damages, or damages as a solatium, for grief or anguish, need not be given, where the complaint and the proof are confined to the earning capacity, habits, and probable length of life of a person killed. Perham v. Portland General Elec. Co. (Or.) 799

9. It is erroneous to give a charge in an action for personal injuries to one struck by a train while attempting to board another train, assuming that the train was running at 8 or 10 miles an hour, and suggesting that it usually ran into the station among the passengers at that rate of speed. Southern R. Co. v. Smith (C. C. App. 5th C.) 746

10. A charge that the duty of a railroad company is greater to a minor than to an adult when on the track is not erroneous as a statement that mere minority exempts from the obligation to look and listen for a train. Mack v. South Bound R. Co. (S. C.) 679

11. An instruction as to the illegality of keeping liquors for sale in the state is not made erroneous as touching a matter not in issue, by adding that keeping them with intent to sell them out of the state would not be unlawful, although there may be no evidence of an intent to sell out of the state. Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (Iowa) 845

12. A request to charge that the production by the defendant of its employee in court to be examined as a witness by plaintiff, if he desired, is sufficient to overcome any presumption or inference against the defendant for failure to introduce him, is properly refused, although such presumption or inference was urged by the plaintiff. Western & A. R. Co. v. Morrison (Ga.) 84

13. The failure of a defendant to introduce as a witness its own employee, who was present in court and who had excellent opportunities for knowing the truth of the matter as to which the evidence was conflicting, may be properly commented on by plaintiff's counsel as a circumstance from which an inference can be drawn that, if such employee had been examined, he would have testified to facts prejudicial to the defendant. Id.

Verdict.

14. A general verdict of invalidity of a will is not inconsistent with a special verdict finding capacity to transact general business, and to understand the business in which testatrix was engaged when making the will, but also finding undue influence over her at the time. Orchardson v. Cofield (Ill.) 256

15. A verdict should be directed in an action against a railroad company for personal injuries to one struck by a train, where the accident occurred in the daytime, and the injured person was in possession of sight and hearing, and the undisputed testimony is that the train could have been seen from 20 yards to $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile before it reached the place of the accident, notwithstanding his testimony that he looked for the train and did not see it. Southern R. Co. v. Smith (C. C. A. 5th C.) 746

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trial; question for jury as to negligence. 96

TROVER. See also ANIMALS, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trover; for dogs. 507

For taking bees. 688

40 L. R. A.

TRUSTS. See also BANKS, 2; CHARITIES, 1; MASSES; SYNDICATES, 6; WILLS, 8.

1. A deed of trust which was never delivered does not amount to a declaration of trust merely because it was recorded by the grantor, when there is nothing to show that he intended to create any trust, except as the deed provided. Loring v. Hildreth (Mass.) 127

2. A trust will result to the donor, his heirs or legal representatives, in case of a gift upon trusts that are void in whole or in part for illegality, if the property is not otherwise disposed of. McHugh v. McCole (Wis.) 724

3. A mortgage for one half the trust estate, obtained for himself alone by one of the cestui que trust from the trustee in a joint trust to pay one half of the income to such cestui que trust and the other half to his sister will inure to the benefit of his sister as well as himself, where he obtained the mortgage by pressure when the trustee was financially embarrassed, but concealed these facts from his sister, although it is not shown that any of the trust funds went into the mortgaged property. Du Paine's Estate (Pa.) 552

4. A receipt of trust property as trustee constitutes no consideration for an individual promise to pay an obligation of a predecessor as trustee. Baxter v. McDonnell (N. Y.) 670

5. A receipt of trust property by a bishop of the Roman Catholic Church as trustee does not make him liable on the contracts of his predecessor. Id.

6. The same evidence is required to constitute a "church trust" and to bind a bishop as trustee thereof as would be required in the case of a layman alleged to be a trustee under like circumstances. Id.

7. A trustee's depositing money in a private bank is not negligence as matter of law. State v. Gramm (Wyo.) 690

8. A trustee or trustees will be appointed by the court to take gifts and apply them to the purposes of the trust, when necessary to prevent the failure thereof. Hoeffer v. Clegg (Ill.) 730

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trust; declaration of. 122

UNBORN CHILD. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6; JUDICIAL SALE, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Unborn children; effect of judicial sale upon rights of. 777

UPLAND. See WATERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER. See also MORTGAGE, 3, 4.

The place where property sold is to be delivered is to be determined by the contract between the vendor and vendee. A. J. Ne Meyer Lumber Co. v. Burlington & M. R. Co. (Neb.) 534 VERDICT. See CORONER; TRIAL, 14, 15.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

1. The right to vote in the district in which a steamer is tied up while at her home port is not acquired by the purser, who lives on the steamer but who had previously acquired a voting residence in another district of the city. Jones v. Skinner (Md.) 752

2. A voting residence at the home port of a steamer is not acquired by a clerk who sleeps in a room on the boat and who has no other room or place to live in and is unmarried. Howard v. Skinner (Md.) 753

3. The fact that a person is improperly and illegally permitted to vote at another place will not alone disqualify him from continuing to vote at his actual residence. Jones v. Skinner (Md.) 752

4. Pasting or sticking another ticket on an official ballot is not a lawful mode of voting, under Ill. act of 1891, requiring the names of all candidates to be printed on one ballot, except names written thereon by the voter, and requiring the voter to prepare his ballot by marking a cross opposite the name of each candidate voted for. Fletcher v. Wall (Ill.) 617

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Use of paster or sticker on ballot. 618
Sufficiency of residence of voter. 752

WAGES. See ASSIGNMENT, 2; BET; CONTRACTS, 4.

WATERS. See also DEEDS, 2; HARBORS; NUISANCES, 3, 4.

1. Ditches and water rights are real estate under Id. Rev. Stat. § 2825. Ada County F. Irrig. Co. v. Farmers' Canal Co. (Id.) 495

2. Mere nonuser does not forfeit a ditch on public lands of the United States. Id.

3. A ditch may be conveyed reserving the water right, or the water right may be conveyed reserving the ditch. Id.

4. Possessory rights and rights of way for irrigating ditches and the right to the use of water may each have an existence independent of the other. Id.

5. A canal constructed by a corporation for the purpose of drainage and also of irrigation cannot be used for the drainage of waters that are unfit for irrigation because they are so strongly mineralized as to be destructive to vegetable growth. North Point Consol. Irrig. Co. v. Utah & S. L. Canal Co. (Utah) 851

6. The period of prescription for the use of a canal to carry off water unfit for irrigation or domestic purposes, although the canal was intended for drainage purposes also, begins to run when the drainage is such as to render the water unfit for irrigation or domestic use. Id.

7. The fact that a lake, the water of which was mineralized and saline so as to be unfit for irrigation or culinary use, might overflow during freshets and a portion of the water find its way into a canal from which water was taken for irrigation, does not give any right to cut a drain through the rim of the lake so as to conduct more of its waters into such canal. Id.

Surface water and seepage.

8. A city which in accordance with Iowa acts 19th Gen. Assem. chap. 89, § 8, and Iowa 40 L. R. A.

Code, 1873, § 527, has made substantial and expensive improvements of a permanent character to keep open the natural outlet for surface water flowing through a watercourse, may maintain an action to enjoin the obstruction of such watercourse by the owners of the land through which it runs, although it is dry at all times except in case of melting snow or unusually heavy rain fall, at which times water flows into it only a few days at a time. Waverly v. Page (Iowa) 465

9. Seepage and surplus water from lands irrigated must be controlled by those who irrigate their lands, so as not injuriously to affect the rights of others. North Point Consol. Irrig. Co. v. Utah & S. L. Canal Co. 851

10. The natural flow of seepage waters from irrigated land to the land of lower proprietors is not a privilege of the owners of the higher land, who bring the water for irrigation by artificial means. Id.

11. Water cannot be lawfully gathered in artificial drains and discharged onto the lands of other proprietors. Id.

Public supply.

12. The right of a water company to occupy the streets of a city, under Tex. Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 705, is derived from the consent of the city, and not from the state, so that the city can revoke it for sufficient cause. Palestine Water & P. Co. v. Palestine (Tex.) 208

13. Specifying as a ground for forfeiting the franchise of a water company its suspension of the supply for a certain period is not a waiver of the right, independently of the terms of the contract, to forfeit the franchise for gross misuse. Id.

14. Flagrant disregard by a water company of its obligation to furnish clear and wholesome water, and the furnishing of water which endangers the health and lives of the people, ignoring remonstrances, are sufficient grounds for forfeiting its franchise. Id.

15. An offer to perform its contract to furnish wholesome water, made by a water company after suit has been brought to forfeit its franchise, does not entitle it to relief from the forfeiture and an extension of time for the performance. Id.

Water rates.

16. A regulation of a water company by which it refuses to turn on water for a building until unpaid rates of previous owners or tenants are paid is unreasonable and invalid, unless authorized by statute. Turner v. Revere Water Co. (Mass.) 657

Meter.

17. The fact that a man was using a water meter when he put in fixtures in his building does not affect his rights with respect to the removal of the meter, when he had no contract for its continuance. Ladd v. Boston (Mass.) 171

18. The removal of a water meter by a commissioner who is empowered "to furnish and attach meters where he deems it necessary," whereby the consumer is required to pay according to the number of fixtures used, does not infringe the rights of a water consumer who had so arranged his fixtures when he had the meter that, on its removal, he would have to pay more than twenty times as much as other water takers pay for the same quantity of water, where it does not appear that the rates charged for fixtures were unreasonable or unjustly discriminating. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INJUNCTION.

Forfeiture of franchise of water company. 203

Reasonable rules for collecting rates. 658

Separation of riparian rights from upland:—In general; right of fishing; right of wharfage; mere riparian rights; cases merely recognizing the doctrine; adverse possession; partition; method of separation. 393

Right of owner of upland to access to navigable water:—The English rule; the rule in Ireland; the rule in Canada; general expressions favoring the right of the shore owner in this country; the rule in Massachusetts; cases holding the opposite rule (New York, New Jersey, Washington, and Oregon); the rule of the Federal courts; other decisions denying the riparian owner's right; the effect of statutes; access cut off by railroad; right as against private individual; estoppel by grant; special reasons for refusing relief; right as against improvement of navigation; summary. 593

Land under, as appurtenant to shore. 397

Interest in water ditch. 485

Appropriation of; collecting and discharging surface water; prescriptive right in ditch. 855

WHARVES. See also HARBORS.

Owners of land abutting on a lake, the title to which is in the state, have the right to construct in the shoal water proper wharves and piers in aid of navigation, but not obstructing it, far enough to reach water navigable for such boats as are in use. Madison v. Mayers (Wis.) 685

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Wharfage; right of, separated from upland. 898

Wharves; right to erect:—The rule in England; the rule in this country; cases recognizing the right of the riparian owner; rule where title extends to thread of stream; effect of custom; statutory right; rights as against individuals; right under grant or license; to low-water mark; prescriptive right; the Federal cases; cases denying the right; statutory restrictions; wharves beneficial; regulation of right; harbor lines; right of municipal corporation to build; right of city to regulate; right of New York city; abatement of wharf; effect of street along shore; private contracts; direction of wharf; rights of state and general government; effect of constructing in front of private property; right in wharf which has been erected; log pier; ejectment for pier. 685

WILLS. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1; INFANTS, 1; MASSES.
40 L. R. A.

1. A will is void if procured by a stranger to be executed in his own favor by an aged and feeble woman laboring under the influences of an insane delusion brought upon her through his machinations. Orchardson v. Co field (Ill.) 256

2. A will prompted by the testatrix's delusion induced by her belief in spiritualism that the chief beneficiary who was not the natural object of her bounty was gifted with supernatural powers, is invalid for want of testamentary capacity of the testatrix although a mere belief in spiritualism is not proof of insanity. Id.

3. A morbid delusion relating to the very matter of the testamentary disposition of one's property deprives her of testamentary capacity notwithstanding that she has capacity to transact ordinary business and knows and understands the business in which she is engaged at the time of making the will. Id.

Revocation.

4. A will made before Mass. Stat. 1892, chap. 118, took effect is within its provisions as to revocation by marriage, when the testator married after the act took effect. Ingersoll v. Hopkins (Mass.) 191

5. The fact that a will was made in contemplation of marriage does not "appear from the will itself" so as to prevent its revocation by the testator's subsequent marriage, under Mass. Stat. 1892, chap. 118, merely because he wills all his property to a woman whom he appoints as one of the executors and afterwards marries. Id.

Construction.

6. The children of certain persons to whom a bequest is made, to take effect after the determination of a life estate, are those living at the death of the testator, and their interests vest upon his death, rather than at the death of the life tenant. Sherman v. Baker (R. I.) 717

7. Clauses of a will giving specified portions of the residue are construed to refer to the residue mentioned near the beginning of the will after deducting the burial expenses, and not to the residue after deducting the legacies made in the intervening clauses, where the terms of the will are such that this construction makes a disposition of substantially all the estate, while the other construction would leave a considerable portion undisposed of, except by a final residuary clause tacked on to the will on a separate slip as an evident afterthought, to provide for a possible contingency. Id.

8. Language of a will which is plain and unambiguous will not be wrested from its natural import, as creating an unenforceable trust, for the purpose of saving the provisions from condemnation. McHugh v. McCole (Wis.) 724

9. Conversion of realty into personality will not be affected by a will if the provisions which require it are void, but the property will descend to the heir at law as realty. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also MASSES.

Wills; revocation by marriage.

191

Undue influence to avoid; effect of insane delusions. 256

Trust in bequest; lapsed and void gifts. 726

WIRES. See ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES.

WITNESSES.

1. A member of a jury impaneled to try a case is not by this fact debarred from testifying in such case as a witness, if otherwise competent. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Quo (Ga.) 483 person to compulsory process for his witnesses does not carry a right of the witnesses to claim fees from the county. Henderson v. Evans (S. C.) 426

2. A constitutional right of an accused 40 L. R. A.

3. The costs and fees of the witnesses of a defendant tried for a misdemeanor are not chargeable to the county under a statute charging the county with such expenses in felony cases. Id.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Constitutionality of service by publication. 128

E. J. M.

